PROCEEDINGS AND DEBATES OF THE 99th CONGRESS, SECOND SESSION

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES—Tuesday, January 21, 1986

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The SPEAKER. This being the day fixed by Public Law 99-233, 99th Congress, enacted pursuant to the 20th amendment of the Constitution for the meeting of the 2d session of the 99th Congress, the House will be in order.

The prayer will be offered by the Chaplain.

PRAYER

The Chaplain, Rev. James David Ford, D.D., offered the following prayer:

Gracious God, as You have given strength to Your people, through the ages, so bless the people of our day with Your peace and wisdom that passes all human understanding. May Your spirit grant our spirits that perspective that lifts our vision to the needs of all people and Your entire created world. May we see in our tasks opportunities for service not only to those under our special care, but to use all our talents, our minds, our hearts, our treasure, to promote justice and peace and so do Your will on Earth as it is in Heaven. Amen.

CALL OF THE HOUSE

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will utilize the electronic system to ascertain the presence of a quorum.

Members will record their presence by electronic device.

The call was taken by electronic device, and the following Members responded to their names:

The SPEAKER. On this rollcall, 289 Members have recorded their presence by electronic device, a quorum.

Under the rule, further proceedings under the call are dispensed with.

COMMITTEE TO NOTIFY THE PRESIDENT

Mr. WRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, I offer a privileged resolution (H. Res. 353) and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

H. RES. 353

Resolved, That a committee of two Members be appointed by the Speaker on the part of the House of Representatives to join with a committee on the part of the Senate to notify the President of the United States that a quorum of each House has assembled and Congress is ready to receive any communication that he may be pleased to make.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

APPOINTMENT AS MEMBERS OF COMMITTEE TO NOTIFY THE PRESIDENT, PURSUANT TO HOUSE RESOLUTION 353

The SPEAKER. The Chair appoints as members of the committee on the part of the House to join a committee on the part of the Senate to notify the President of the United States that a quorum of each House has been assembled, and that Congress is ready to receive any communication that he may be pleased to make, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. WRIGHT] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MICHEL].

NOTIFICATION TO THE SENATE

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I offer a privileged resolution (H. Res. 354) and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

H. RES. 354

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House inform the Senate that a quorum of the House is present and that the House is ready to proceed with business.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

DAILY HOUR OF MEETING

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I offer a privileged resolution (H. Res. 355) and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

H. RES. 355

Resolved, That until otherwise ordered, the hour of meeting of the House shall be 12 o'clock meridian on Mondays and Tuesdays; 3 o'clock post meridiem on Wednesdays; 11 o'clock ante meridiem on all other days of the week up to and including May 14, 1986; and that from May 15, 1986, until the end of the second session, the hour of daily meeting of the House shall be 12 o'clock meridian on Mondays and Tuesdays and 10 o'clock ante meridiem on all other days of the week.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

COMMUNICATION FROM THE CLERK OF THE HOUSE

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communication from the Clerk of the House of Representatives:

JANUARY 21, 1986.

Hon. THOMAS P. O'NEILL, Jr.,
The Speaker, House of Representatives, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. SPEAKER: Pursuant to the permission granted in Clause 5, Rule III of the Rules of the U.S. House of Representatives, I have the honor to transmit sealed envelopes received from the White House as follows:

(1) At 3:45 p.m. on Tuesday, January 14, 1986, and said to contain H.R. 1404, an Act to establish the Eastern Shore of Virginia National Wildlife Refuge and the National Fish and Wildlife Service Training Center at Cape Charles in Northampton County, Virginia, and a veto message thereon; and

(2) At 3:15 p.m. on Friday, January 17, 1986 and said to contain a message from the President whereby he transmits H.R. 3384, an Act to amend title 5, United States Code, to expand the class of individuals eligible for refunds or other returns of contributions from contingency reserves in the Employees Health Benefits Fund; to make miscellaneous amendments relating to the Civil Service Retirement System and the Federal Employees Health Benefits Program; and for other purposes," and a veto message thereon.

With kind regards, I am,

Sincerely,

BENJAMIN J. GUTHRIE,
Clerk, House of Representatives.

ESTABLISHING THE EASTERN SHORE OF VIRGINIA NATIONAL WILDLIFE REFUGE AND THE NATIONAL FISH AND WILDLIFE SERVICE TRAINING CENTER AT CAPE CHARLES—VETO MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES (H. DOC. NO. 99-146)

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following veto message from the President of the United States:

To the House of Representatives:

Since the adjournment of the Congress has prevented my return of H.R. 1404 within the meaning of Article I, section 7, clause 2 of the Constitution, my withholding of approval from the bill precludes its becoming law. Notwithstanding what I believe to be my constitutional power regarding the use of the "pocket veto" during an adjournment of Congress, however, I am sending H.R. 1404 to the House of Representatives with my objections, consistent with the Court of Appeals decision in Barnes v. Kline, 759 F.2d 21, (D.C. Cir. 1985), cert. pending sub. nom. Burke v. Barnes, No. 85-781.

I have no objection to statutory recognition of the refuge at Cape Charles. This is a significant resting and wintering area for migratory birds along the Atlantic Flyway and an important habitat for the bald eagle and peregrine falcon, two endangered species. I am pleased to note that, in recognition of the area's importance, the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service has already administratively acquired land at this site and established the Eastern Shore of Virginia National Wildlife Refuge. The Service will continue to operate and maintain the existing refuge and intends to expand it as fiscal conditions permit.

Unfortunately, H.R. 1404 does not simply provide protection for this valuable habitat. It would also require the Secretary of the Interior to develop a training center at the refuge for use by the Service, other Federal and State agencies, educational institutions, and private organizations and individuals.

In this time of fiscal constraint, the Federal Government must limit its expenditures to matters of significant national concern. The provisions of H.R. 1404 requiring establishment of a training facility do not meet this test. The Service has fully adequate training facilities already in place, including a facility at Leetown, West Virginia, as well as the use of various private sector facilities. In addition, the Service is actively supporting the effort to clean up the Chesapeake Bay by designating an existing Service field station in Annapolis, Maryland, as its primary center for work on this important program. I believe that it would be more appropriate for State or private entities to fund and develop a training center if they consider it essential.

For these reasons, I must return H.R. 1404 without my approval.

RONALD REAGAN.
THE WHITE HOUSE, January 14, 1986.

□ 1235

The SPEAKER. The objections of the President will be spread at large upon the Journal, and the message and bill will be printed as a House document.

Mr. JONES of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the veto message of the President, together with the accompanying bill, H.R. 1404, be referred to the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

FEDERAL EMPLOYEES BENEFITS IMPROVEMENT ACT OF 1985—VETO MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES (H. DOC. NO. 99-145)

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following veto message from the President of the United States:

To the House of Representatives:

Since the adjournment of the Congress has prevented my return of H.R. 3384 within the meaning of Article I, section 7, clause 2 of the Constitution, my withholding of approval from the bill precludes its becoming law. Notwithstanding what I believe to be my constitutional power regarding the use of the "pocket veto" during an adjournment of Congress, however, I am sending H.R. 3384 to the House of Representatives with my objections, consistent with the Court of Appeals decision in Barnes v. Kline, 759 F.2d 21 (D.C. Cir. 1985), cert. pending sub nom. Burke v. Barnes, No. 85-781.

H.R. 3384 contains some desirable features, particularly a change in the Federal employees health benefits law recommended by my Administration that would allow anticipated rebates of health insurance premiums to be paid by insurance carriers to Federal annuitants, as is already allowed for active employees. I fully support the proposed rebates, but I could not approve the bill, especially because of one seriously objectionable feature. That feature would eliminate the current 75 percent ceiling on the Government's share of the premiums of any individual health insurance plan of employees and annuitants.

Elimination of the ceiling would add to Government costs and increase the Federal budget deficit at the very time that there is a critical need for fiscal restraints. In order to comply with the deficit reduction mandated by the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings Act, spending for most Government programs will have to be cut. Under those circumstances, this is not the time to raise the Government's personnel costs.

Lifting the 75 percent "cap" by itself would directly increase Government costs for many Federal Employees Health Benefits (FEHB) premiums, since the Government would now pay for costs previously paid by employees. OPM has estimated that this will result in adding almost $90 million to the Federal deficit in fiscal year 1986 and another $173 million in 1987. Over the six-year period 1986 through 1991, the Federal deficit would increase by an estimated $1.2 billion. Some proponents of this provision will claim that it would save money because it will induce employees to shift to low-cost plans. However, any such savings must be weighed against the substantial Federal cost increases projected over the next six years.

Health benefits reform legislation proposed by the administration included lifting the cap as one of its elements. In our proposal, however, that provision was linked with structural improvements in the Federal employees health insurance program, including a change in the way the Government's contribution is established, that would reduce the cost of the program for both employees and the Government. H.R. 3384 ignores that essential linkage by simply lifting the cap without program reform, resulting in an unacceptable shift in costs from employees to the Government. I look forward to working with the Congress early in the session to develop a suitable package of structural reforms that would include lifting the cap.

In addition, the provision requiring direct access to and permitting direct payment for the services of nurses and nurse-midwives, without supervision or referral by another health practitioner, deserves full evaluation, including hearings by the Congress. In its present form, it is a major departure from established health care practice and may be counter to many State laws.

In the meantime, I urge the Congress to act as soon as possible to enact acceptable legislation that will permit Federal annuitants to receive rebates of health insurance premiums without undue further delay.

RONALD REAGAN.

THE WHITE HOUSE, January 17, 1986.

The SPEAKER. The objections of the President will be spread at large upon the Journal, and the message and bill will be printed as a House document.

Ms. OAKAR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that further consideration of the veto message of the President on the bill, H.R. 3384, be postponed until February 20, 1986.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Ohio?

Mr. WALKER. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that the normal procedure for a message of this type would be to vote on the bill today. The President, I think, has made very clear that this is a matter which involves a good deal of additional Federal spending that he does not think we can afford at the present time. He has indicated that the cost may be as much as a billion dollars additional to the taxpayers in personnel costs.

I, personally, would like an explanation as to why we have to postpone a vote of that kind of magnitude until February 20, and I will be glad to yield to the gentlewoman.

Ms. OAKAR. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the gentleman yielding.

In our discussion with the other side of the aisle, the minority members of our committee, we would like to have a chance to take a look at the full impact of the veto message so that we can decide whether or not to accept it or to possibly have an opportunity to amend the bill, and so forth.

We really cannot do it in the time restraint that we have at this time, so that is why we are asking for this delay.

Mr. WALKER. Further reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, on the previous veto message that particular matter was taken care of with a unanimous-consent request to refer to the committee. That would seem to me to be a far more reasonable action, given the gentlewoman's explanation for this particular bill. Why can we not refer it to the committee?

I am glad to yield to the gentlewoman.

Ms. OAKAR. I appreciate the gentleman yielding.

The reason for that is that we would like to deal with this bill as expeditiously as possible. The majority of the content of the bill deals with reimbursing employees who are Federal employees who are being either overcharged or having an abundance of reserves in various hospital plans. We want to do it as expeditiously as possible and not go through the proceedings of the numerous hearings which we have already had.

The Senate is going to try to do the same thing. That is why if we have a little time to study the veto message, we might be able to work up a bill that hopefully can get some agreement with those who do not agree with it.

Mr. WALKER. Further reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, the provision to which the gentlewoman refers I understand is not a problem with the President. In fact, in his veto message it sounded to me as though he has in fact endorsed that particular provision of the bill to which the gentlewoman refers. There probably would be no problem getting that kind of a measure passed on the Suspension Calendar here and bring it to the floor and act very expeditiously.

There are major problems with removing the cap on Federal contributions to health plans. It seems to me that given that circumstance, it is the more logical procedure to either vote on the veto message today or to have a reference to the committee where the study can take place on that provision which the President objects to, rather than delaying further the provisions on which there is wide agreement.

Ms. OAKAR. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. WALKER. I am glad to yield to the gentlewoman.

Ms. OAKAR. If that were so, if that were the only part of the veto message, the gentleman would certainly be making what I consider a very accurate point, but if the gentleman will notice in the veto message, and he may not have it in front of him, the second last paragraph refers to a provision that Senator STEVENS of Alaska was very supportive of along with other people from the gentleman's party and that is the direct payment for services of nurses without supervision or referral. The veto message does, in fact, indicate that this may be a problem with State law.

We want to research this so that we can decide whether or not that is accurate or not. I think the White House is in agreement that they were not sure about that.

We made a commitment to Senator STEVENS that we would do that. That is why if the only objection of the White House is the cap issue, we might be able to resolve the situation very simply; but there are other areas of the bill that they had some problems with that the White House is not even sure are accurate, so we wanted to have a chance to study that.

I worked this out with the minority side and I hope that the gentleman does not object.

Mr. WALKER. Well, further reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I have now had a chance to study that particular provision.

I agree with the gentlewoman that there evidently are some White House questions about that, but once again, that could certainly be resolved with a reference to the committee, rather than a postponement.

I think that the preferable action of the House at this point would be to either go ahead and vote on the veto message and then resolve these problems with new legislation in the session, or to refer the matter back to the committee, rather than dealing with this matter with a postponement; so I would feel constrained to object to the present motion.

I would not object if the gentlewoman wishes to change her request to a reference to the committee.

I am glad to yield to the gentlewoman.

Ms. OAKAR. Well, at this point, I really feel that the more conservative approach in this area, in terms of reconciling the differences, is just to give us a little time to study it, which is what Members on both sides of the aisle, in the committee and on the Senate side, would like to do.

You know, the Federal employees, I might say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, have been waiting for months and months to get their reimbursement from their health insurance back. At the same time, there are some progressive provisions in here that we thought OPM, in fact, was very supportive of.

We want to have an opportunity to take a look at it and see how we might amend the bill to make it acceptable not only to Members of the House who voted unanimously for the bill, I might add, under suspension, but also reconcile the problems that apparently several people in the White House have with the bill.

Honestly, we think the most expeditious way to do this, to reach an agreement, is just to postpone the matter, let us take a look at it, work with the White House, work with OPM, which we have been doing, and deal with the issue and bring back a new bill.

I hope that the gentleman does not object, because if we have to go through the whole committee process when we think the Senate is going to postpone it just as we are requesting, the Federal employees might have to wait another year to get back their payments from the health insurance that has this enormous reserve that every major health plan agrees is not really to their benefit to have.

Mr. WALKER. Further reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, once again the gentlewoman has come back to that point and I assure the gentlewoman from everything I know that no one has any objection to that provision. There should be no problem moving that particular provision.

What this gentleman is concerned about and what the White House evidently is concerned about is a billion-dollar item of lifting the cap on health insurance premiums. What that literally means to the taxpayers of this country, who have also been waiting for this Congress to act responsibly, is that we are going to pay 100 percent of Members of Congress health benefits from now on in, rather than the 70 percent that we now pay.

It seems to me that they are expecting more of us, given the constraints in which we have to operate now in fiscal affairs.

Ms. OAKAR. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield on that point?

Mr. WALKER. I am glad to yield to the gentlewoman.

Ms. OAKAR. First of all, we are trying to work out the differences, and frankly, that is not the provision that, in my judgment, is the major problem with the bill.

But I would say as long as the gentleman raises that, that the White House is absolutely inaccurate about that information. In the long term, this bill saves money because they are making assumptions that, frankly, are just not true.

I think that OPM would love to have more of an opportunity to discuss that. But the major concern I have is that the Federal employees get reimbursed as expeditiously as possible. If the gentleman objects, he is really hindering that possibility, and I think he will have to bear the responsibility for that.

Mr. WALKER. Reserving the right to object, if the gentlewoman wants to assign responsibilities, if we move forward with her motion, I will assign the responsibility to her in the same vein that she has just cost the taxpayers an extra billion dollars.

Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard.

Ms. OAKAR. Mr. Speaker, I move that further consideration of the veto message on the bill, H.R. 3384, be postponed until February 20, 1986.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentlewoman withhold for a moment. The Chair would advise the gentlewoman to refer to committee. It is my understanding there was an agreement on both sides, but there is an objection. Why does the gentlewoman not go to committee and possibly report it out of the committee rather than taking an hour of debate and a further rollcall?

Ms. OAKAR. Mr. Speaker, if I might respond to the Speaker, we were trying to deal very expeditiously with the situation.

The SPEAKER. The gentlewoman may report it out of committee and bring it up on the date that you had agreed upon.

Ms. OAKAR. Mr. Speaker, I agree with that from the standpoint of the House, but we do not have the same kind of assurances from the other body's standpoint, and if we thought in conjunction with our colleagues in the other body we could just get a quick postponement, we could deal expeditiously with this difficulty.

The SPEAKER. In view of the fact that this is the first day back, and under the announced schedule there are no rollcalls anticipated, and there are over 100 Members out, the Chair would ask the gentlewoman to take the suggested course of action.

Ms. OAKAR. I agree, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker, I move that the veto message on the bill, H.R. 3384, be referred to the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion offered by the gentlewoman from Ohio [Ms. OAKAR].

The motion was agreed to.

Ms. OAKAR. Mr. Speaker, last Friday was a dark day for Federal workers and retirees. On January 17, 1986, President Reagan vetoed legislation, H.R. 3384, which would have made many needed improvements in the Federal Health Insurance and Retirement Programs.

H.R. 3384 was carefully crafted in a spirit of bipartisan cooperation. Members of both parties in the House and the Senate worked closely with the Office of Personnel Management [OPM] to fashion legislation to assist Federal workers and retirees and to save the Government money. Unfortunately, powerful interests found objections with H.R. 3384 at the last minute and lobbied intensely and successfully for the President's veto. That veto was a slap in the face to Federal workers and annuitants who were depending on the improvements in the bill and to Members of the House and Senate who worked hard to achieve those improvements.

H.R. 3384 set forth many reforms to assist Federal employees, including provisions to:

Enable retired enrollees in the Federal Employees Health Benefits Program (FEHBP) to receive refunds from their health plans;

Expand access to qualified health care providers, including nurses and clinical social workers;

Allow participation in the FEHBP by new types of health maintenance organizations [HMO's];

Eliminate the 75-percent cap on Federal contributions to FEHBP premiums;

Reinstate a program to serve FEHBP enrollees living in medically underserved areas;

Encourage comprehensive insurance coverage for mental health care and substance abuse treatment; and Require an annual open season.

In addition, H.R. 3384 would have made other improvements in the health insurance and retirement programs to assist retirees, former spouses, and current Federal employees. It was a good bill, a fair bill, and a cost-effective bill. It should be law.

In his veto message, the President cited two reasons for vetoing H.R. 3384. The first was a provision to eliminate the cap on the Government's contribution to FEHBP premiums. The President's objection to this provision is especially curious. Removing the 75-percent cap is a proposal the administration has advocated consistently in legislative submissions and in testimony before my Subcommittee on Compensation and Employee Benefits. Last Friday, however, the President expressed concern over the initial expense this provision would cause and cited this provision as a reason for his veto.

Contrary to the President's assertions, the cap provision is cost effective. While removal of the cap would have cost the Government $89 million this year, it would have saved money over the long run by encouraging enrollees to move into efficient health plans. Furthermore, other provisions in H.R. 3384 would result in overall savings for the Federal Government. For example, the act allowed the Office of Personnel Management [OPM] to use any refunds it receives from FEHBP plans to offset its premium contribution for retirees. Overall, the reforms in H.R. 3384 would have saved money for both the Government and its employees. It deserved the President's support.

The President's second objection concerned a provision to expand access to nonphysician health providers for FEHBP enrollees. This reason is equally questionable. The administration has consistently advocated promoting competition in the health sector to bring costs down. H.R. 3384 would have reimbursed qualified, licensed, nonphysician health providers for the care they render to FEHBP enrollees. In many cases, nurse practitioners, nurse-midwives, and other professionals can offer the same quality health care for a lower fee than that charged by physicians. By enabling them to serve our Federal workers, we could expand freedom of choice and hold down costs in the FEHBP.

The American Medical Association [AMA] vehemently opposed extending FEHBP reimbursement to their competitors. Their lobbying was the key factor in the Presidential veto. It is unfortunate that the AMA's pressure carried more weight than the bipartisan recommendations of the Congress and the OPM, as well as the needs of Federal workers and retirees.

Mr. Speaker, this fight is not over. Federal workers have endured 5 years of benefit cuts and other abuses, and are subject to another 5 years of hardship under Gramm-Rudman. They desperately need the improvements that H.R. 3384 would provide. All Federal employees, retirees, and their dependents can be assured that I will continue to work for the enactment of reforms that they need. I look forward to the continuing support of my colleagues in this regard.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE TO NOTIFY THE PRESIDENT

Mr. WRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, your committee on the part of the House to join a like committee on the part of the Senate to notify the President of the United States that a quorum of each House has been assembled and is ready to receive any communication that he may be pleased to make has performed that duty.

Mr. MICHEL. Mr. Speaker, the President asked us to report that he will be pleased to deliver his message at 9 p.m. on Tuesday, January 28, 1986, to a joint session of the two Houses.

The SPEAKER. That is fine. Is there anything else he had to say?

Mr. MICHEL. He wished us all well, and he was willing to cooperate and hoped that we would have nothing but good things to show for it at the end of the session.

The SPEAKER. Did he mention Gramm-Rudman?

Mr. MICHEL. He did not mention that by name, sir.

Mr. WRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, he did not seem to be much surprised that we were back in town.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thanks the committee for doing their job so expeditously.

JOINT SESSION OF CONGRESS—STATE OF THE UNION ADDRESS

Mr. WRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, I offer a privilege concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 268) and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the concurrent resolution, as follows:

H. CON. RES. 268

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the two Houses of Congress assemble in the Hall of the House of Representatives on Tuesday, January 28, 1986, at 9 o'clock post meridiam, for the purpose of receiving such communication as the President of the United States shall be pleased to make to them.

The concurrent resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

AUTHORIZING THE SPEAKER TO DECLARE RECESSES ON TUESDAY, JANUARY 28, 1986

Mr. WRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Tuesday, January 28, 1986, it may be in order for the Speaker to declare recesses at any time subject to the call of the Chair.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

DISPENSING WITH CALENDAR WEDNESDAY BUSINESS ON WEDNESDAY NEXT

Mr. WRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the business in order under the Calendar Wednesday rule shall be dispensed with on Wednesday next.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to make the following announcement concerning privileges of the floor for House staff during the 2d session of the 99th Congress.

Rule XXXII strictly limits those persons to whom the privileges of the floor during sessions of the House are extended, and that rule prohibits the Chair from entertaining requests for suspension or waiver of that rule. As reiterated by the Chair on January 25, 1983, and January 3, 1985, and as stated in chapter 4, section 3.4 of Procedure in the House of Representatives, the rule strictly limits the number of committee staff on the floor at one time during the consideration of measures reported from their committees. This permission does not extend to Members' personal staff except when a Member's amendment is actually pending during the 5-minute rule. It also does not extend to personal staff of Members who are sponsors of pending bills or who are engaging in special orders. The Chair requests the cooperation of all Members and committee staff to assure that only the proper number of staff are on the floor, and then only during the consideration of measures reported from their committees.

The Chair is making this statement and reiterating this policy because of concerns expressed by many Members about the number of committee staff on the floor during the last weeks of the first session.

The Chair will institute the following procedure for the remainder of the 99th Congress. The Chair requests each chairman, and each ranking minority member, to submit to the Doorkeeper a list of staff who are to be allowed on the floor during the consideration of a measure reported by their committee. Each staff person should exchange his or her ID for a "committee staff" badge which is to be worn while on the floor. The Chair has consulted with the minority leader and will continue to consult with him. The Chair has furthermore directed the Doorkeeper and the Sergeant at Arms to assure proper enforcement of rule XXXII.

GENERAL LEAVE

Ms. OAKAR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on the President's veto message accompanying the bill, H.R. 3384.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

REPEAL GRAMM-RUDMAN

(Mr. WEISS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. WEISS. Mr. Speaker, Congress was inviting disaster when it passed

Gramm-Rudman, and disaster is now imminent.

The $12 billion in cuts announced last week are nothing more than a ripple compared to the tidal wave that will soon follow; $50 to $60 billion or more must be cut to meet next year's deficit target alone—far more than was ever anticipated. Budget cuts of this size will devastate America and its people.

There is substantial evidence that our huge deficits were purposefully and deliberately created by the President to convince us that we can no longer afford programs that serve human needs. Gramm-Rudman is consistent with this strategy. It will force us to dismantle the Federal Government, step by step, until there is little left.

Now is the time to acknowledge that a serious mistake has been made. The deficit can and must be reduced. But it must be done by a Congress and a President who are willing to do their jobs, not by a mindless system that will destroy the hard-won gains of the past 50 years. This is why I am introducing legislation today to repeal Gramm-Rudman.

Repealing Gramm-Rudman will take courage. But we must be willing to accept our budget responsibilities.

Gramm-Rudman, not the people of America, should be the first casualty of 1986.

IT'S GREAT TO BE BACK

(Mr. McKINNEY asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. McKINNEY. Mr. Speaker, the medical community of the United States reminds me a little bit of this body looking for a solution to the budget problem. But they seem to have achieved success with me. One of the main reasons was that all of you, or many of you, wrote and wished me good will and good luck and good health, all of which I am now in, and all of which I thank you for.

Now I know why I love this body, that it is better to watch than to be a part of, but it is more fun to be a part of. And really, I want to thank you all. That is the simplest way to put it: Thank you.

SPEAKER ESTABLISHES A NEW MILESTONE

(Mr. WILLIAMS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, today as your gavel fell to open this, the 2d session of the 99th Congress, you established a new milestone. You, sir, set a record for continuous service as Speaker of this House. Your 9 years and 17 days of continuous service as Speaker of the U.S. House of Representatives surpasses that of each of your 46 predecessors.

None of your predecessors served during more momentous times, and none have served with more grace, more color, or more concern for the good of the Nation than have you.

Congratulations, Mr. Speaker.

IS GRAMM-RUDMAN THE NEXT BEST THING TO SLICED BREAD?

(Mr. DAUB asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. DAUB. Mr. Speaker, my congratulations as well.

Mr. Speaker, the spirit of Gramm-Rudman, the spirit of Gramm-Rudman, is it the next best thing to sliced bread? We are not going to have the twilight zone, the never-never land of inflation and bracket creep, we are not going to be able to hide behind the rhetoric of saying, "Ain't it awful? Gee whiz, deficits are terrible," and going home without a record to prove that we acted responsibly by making those tough decisions to either cut spending and vote to do it or raise taxes and vote to do it.

Many argued in the last session that Gramm-Rudman would not work. They lost that argument because they had no realistic alternative. The time to debate Gramm-Rudman-Hollings-Mack has passed. Gramm-Rudman-Hollings-Mack can be the staff with which this Congress parts the sea of red ink.

Can we do it? Will we do it? Let us have another look at the Grace Commission report. Within it discipline exists, discipline to better manage Government and avoid all the cuts in those social programs, those human condition programs contained in that portion of one-half of the cuts that will come out of one-half of the budget not counting defense.

I think if we take the proper perspective and roll up our sleeves and do the work we are supposed to do, Gramm-Rudman will not come to pass. I think that that would be the responsible thing to do.

Let us take a look at the savings that have been proposed in the Grace Commission report. The GAO just came out and said that three-fourths of those commission reports were very accurate, very fiscally responsible, and could be done by a Congress if it chose to do it. That way, we could afford not to cut those popular programs that Member after Member, I predict, will come to this well to try to save.

And if it is a tax increase you have in mind, then tell the American public right up front whose taxes you will raise, how much you will raise them, and what kind of an amendment you are willing to submit to this body to vote on to, in fact, cause inflation again and the high unemployment that raising taxes will bring with it.

MY CONSTITUENTS AND WHAT THEY SAID DURING THE RECESS

(Mr. RICHARDSON asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, during the recess my constituents talked my head off about Gramm-Rudman and Libya. On Gramm-Rudman there was anger from those social service groups who were hit hard, which is practically everybody, especially civil service retirees. From conservatives there were cries that we had decimated our defenses and the Russians were laughing all the way to Geneva. Many others expressed both confusion and amusement, confusion at the mess we have created and amusement at my efforts to explain it. Not one constituent said, "Good job."

Mr. Speaker, all of these reactions suggest to me that maybe we have done the right thing for a change, since once again everyone is mad at us.

On Libya, I was surprised by the restraint shown by my constituents and their reluctance to escalate tensions there. While many, including myself, will back the President if additional economic sanctions are imposed, there is widespread apprehension about getting militarily involved.

Mr. Speaker, we should pay heed to the wisdom of our constituents.

WHO IS AFRAID OF BIG GRAMM-RUDMAN?

(Mr. GEKAS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. GEKAS. Mr. Speaker, who is afraid of the big Gramm-Rudman? Apparently many Members of Congress are. Many Members are afraid that Gramm-Rudman will huff and puff and blow away our prerogatives to fashion a budget. But Gramm-Rudman should be viewed as an opportunity for the Congress to shore up its own brick house, its own budgetary responsibility, and deal with the deficit directly. Then the irony of Gramm-Rudman will be that the huffing and puffing and blowing away that it wants to do will cause us to do our own job and the only wolf we will be able to keep from the door will be the deficit itself.

Let us not let the deficit eat us up. Let us do our job so that Gramm-Rudman will not have to go into effect.

But if it does, we ought to bless it as one way to force us to do our job.

WE HAVE THE RESPONSIBILITY TO CARRY FORTH THE DREAM OF MARTIN LUTHER KING, JR.

(Mr. FORD of Tennessee asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. FORD of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, the air on yesterday was filled with jubilation and praise as we commemorated the birthday of the Reverend Dr. Martin Luther King.

There were outpourings of tributes to King from coast to coast, north to south and from around the world.

Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the Nation and the world for commemorating Dr. King in such a fine manner.

Our remembrance of Dr. King should not however be just in the month of January, but should continue on a daily basis. We must remember the principles he espoused and the examples he set for all to follow.

Dr. King possessed many noble virtues, which he consistently intertwined with courage and service to his fellow man. He showed all people that social and political change can be brought about through the use of nonviolence.

To go about our daily lives without trying to make a difference in our community, would be to inflict the greatest possible injustice to Dr. King's memory.

You and I have the responsibility to carry forward the dream.

TRIBUTE TO THE LATE JOHN E. MOORE

(Mr. HORTON asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. HORTON. Mr. Speaker, the work of the Congress is ably assisted by an excellent staff which works tirelessly, and for the most part anonymously, on our behalf.

During the past month, we lost one of the finest of this group. John E. Moore, the staff administrator of the Government Operations Committee for 11 years, passed away on December 29.

As ranking minority member of the committee, I knew John to be a thoroughly competent and fair administrator. Under his stewardship, the committee was always run efficiently and effectively. It was run humanely, too. John was unfailingly generous, both in offering good counsel and in going out of his way to accommodate Members' needs, and he always maintained a keen sense of humor.

John Moore was not only a devoted public servant, but also a real friend. Those of us who were privileged to know him will miss him very much.

TRIBUTE TO THE LATE JOHN E. MOORE

(Mr. BROOKS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, during the recess between the 1st and 2d sessions of the 99th Congress, the Committee on Government Operations had the misfortune of losing one of our most loyal and valuable staff members. On December 29, John E. Moore, the staff administrator of the Government Operations Committee, succumbed to cancer. The holder of two Purple Hearts for wounds received in action in Korea, John was buried with full military honors at Arlington National Cemetery on New Year's Eve.

Those of us who worked with him closely knew John to be a man who loved his work. His entire adult life was spent in public service. John left his native Huntsville, TX, at the age of 17 to join the Marine Corps where he served in both the Atlantic and Pacific theaters near the end of World War II. After graduating from Sam Houston State College, he worked for the Texas Department of Public Welfare until he was recalled to active duty with the Marines in Korea in 1950. Following his release from active duty in 1952, he served as an administrator in the Texas Department of Agriculture for several years and, in 1956, came to Washington at my request to join the professional staff of the Government Activities Subcommittee, which I chaired at that time.

John was one of those rare people who truly want to spend their lives helping others and who are willing to accept the inconveniences and burdens that service often entails. In 1961, John began a career with AID which took him to Quito, Ecuador; Mexico City, the Dominican Republic, Saigon, Bangkok, and finally to Vientiane, Laos. He was in Laos in 1975 when I asked him to return to Washington to become the staff administrator of the Government Operations Committee.

John's service with the committee proved his skill as an astute administrator. He was trusted and admired by the members and the staff, majority and minority. His mix of administrative capability, political sensitivity, and good judgment made him an ideal committee administrator.

Seventeen months ago, John was diagnosed as having a rare form of cancer. As was typical of him, he made this an opportunity to serve, by volunteering to participate in a research program at the National Institutes of Health. Even when it was obvious that he had lost that fight for himself, he took the time and energy to write a letter to the Director of NIH expressing his appreciation for their work and his hope that they would find his contribution useful as they continue their work for the benefit of the rest of us.

John's wife of 35 years, Joyce, accompanied him to his many posts in service to his country. His daughter, Michelle, attended schools in Latin America, South America, and Southeast Asia so she could be closer to him as she grew up. All of us—his family, the members and staff of the Government Operations Committee, and the House of Representatives—will miss John Moore. But the work of the committee and the House has been better for his having been with us for the past 11 years.

INSTALLATION OF EDMOND BROWNING AS PRESIDING BISHOP OF THE EPISCOPAL CHURCH OF THE UNITED STATES

(Mr. ALEXANDER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks and include extraneous matter.)

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, on January 11 I was honored to represent the Congress at the installation of Edmond Browning as presiding bishop of the Episcopal Church of the United States. The new presiding bishop is a former bishop of Hawaii; he succeeds John Allin, a friend of many of us and a native of my home State of Arkansas.

At his installation Bishop Browning warned that the world today is frightening; superpowers posture over arms agreements, while the lives of our children hang in the balance. Unjust governments deny basic human rights while inflicting torture and suffering upon millions of their citizens. He said that we live in an age where we have the technology to feed the world and instead millions are hungry and thousands die needlessly every day. Our rivers, he pointed out, our lakes and oceans, and the air are poisoned; and racism runs rampant.

Bishop Browning specifically reached out to faithful politicians urging us to speak out against injustice such as the evils of apartheid and to stand up for the principles that we value as a Nation.

Mr. Speaker, I submit a copy of the text of the new bishop's installation sermon for the RECORD.

INSTALLATION ADDRESS OF THE PRESIDING BISHOP, EDMOND LEE BROWNING, JANUARY 11, 1985, AT THE WASHINGTON CATHEDRAL

Propers: Ezekiel 36:24-28; Romans 6:3-11; Mark 10:35-45.

I greet you on the eve of the Baptism of the Risen Christ, who invites us into his death and Resurrection through our own Baptisms, so that we too, in the words of St. Paul, might live a new life. Baptism calls the Christian family into a common ministry and mission. I want this to be our day, not just my day, a time for the whole Church, for all the baptised, to again reaffirm its mission for these times. As we begin this new journey together. I invite each of you to hear afresh the words of God as written in Ezekiel, "I am going to gather you together from all the foreign nations. You shall be my people and I shall be your God."

As we reflect on the meaning of our common bond in baptism, I am moved to lift up one of the great marks of Christ which we are called to model as the baptised, the mark of compassion that descended upon him from the Spirit in his own baptism.

Compassion is at the root of Christian spirituality and mission and, I would propose, is the hope of our future. If we embrace it, we may yet celebrate the victory of a world healed and made whole. If we fail it, there may be no one left to write our epitaph.

Compassion is at the root of Christian spirituality because it was the way that Jesus lived. It was out of compassion, not out of a desire to be in control, that he healed the blind, cleansed the leper, raised the dead and fed the hungry. His spirituality was not one that isolated him, but one that found expression in the service of others.

Compassion is the hope of our future because we live on the edge of the abyss where our very survival is uncertain. Never before has the human family faced such a dilemma. The fragile earth on which we live is threatened by the very being that God created to be its steward. This is so and yet there are those in the Church who want us only to be a port in the storm, a haven from the troubles of our time. But God is the Creator, not just of the Church, but of the world. Simone Weil put it best, "How can Christianity call itself catholic if the universe iteself is left out?" Our heritage tells us that we are to be the earth's stewards. And I fear God's judgment upon us if we fail to care for this fragile home of ours over which we have been given charge.

There is pain beyond these Cathedral walls which most of us can barely comprehend. There are tears of despair which we refuse to see. There are cries for help which we do not hear. There are those reaching out to be embraced whom we will not touch. But a compassionate Jesus saw, he heard and he embraced them. Our spiritual lives are bankrupt if our prayers do not call us to see, to hear and to heal. So I say again that compassion is the basis of our spiritual lives that gives hope to a suffering world.

Compassion is not a matter of sitting apart and from a distance lavishing our blessings on another. It is a matter of entering the pain and sufferings of others, and identifying in the brokenness of the world. To know and acknowledge our own brokenness is to be able to understand and share in the brokenness of the world. To understand our own need for One who will heal, and restore, and give wholeness is to know the need of the world in its manifestation of brokenness and its need for healing, restoration and wholeness.

Each of us lives out our own faith experiences. For me, it was the discovery of Christ's compassion in my own life that has been the foundation of my own spirituality which draws me inevitably to my present witness. Remembering our common bond in Baptism, I invite you to join me in this spiritual journey of compassion, a journey where faith and mission are inseparable.

Sentimental spirituality of the Post-reformation Churches today can isolate us from our mission in the world. Jose Miranda has written, "One of the most disastrous errors in the history of Christianity is to have tried—under the influence of Greek definitions—to separate love and justice."

Love and justice. Matthew Fox, in his book entitled "Compassion", makes this connection for our present day spirituality. Compassion doesn't make some pastors and others prophets. It makes us both. Being one and not the other should make us uncomfortable. Jesus didn't choose one over the other. Compassion is the bridge between love and justice, between pastoral and prophetic ministry.

Our spiritual lives have often been wanting because we have forgotten Jesus' command that we be compassionate as God is compassionate. I want today to call this Church back to its compassionate spirituality. When we pray with compassion for those in need, we take those persons into our beings. They no longer become the people over there. They now live in our hearts. And once in our hearts, compassion demands that we minister with them.

Compassion calls us to serve the world, not to rule it. I believe that I am called to exercise a servanthood ministry in this office to which I am installed today. Not a servanthood that bows down to the powers and principalities of this world, but a servanthood to the lowest in our midst, to those in the greatest need, to those whom Jesus served, a service to the cause of healing and reconciliation through justice and peacemaking.

It is my most fervent prayer today that we claim the compassion of Christ for these troubled times, a compassion that will lead us to a servanthood ministry to the world. What we see in the world today is frightening. Super powers posture over arms agreements while the lives of our children hang in the balance. Unjust governments deny basic human rights while inflicting torture and suffering upon millions of its citizens. We live in an age where we have the technology to feed the world, and, instead, millions are hungry and thousands die every day. Our rivers, lakes, oceans, air and land are being poisoned. Racism runs rampant. It is hard to overstate the horror that we face.

Bishop Browning specifically reached out to "faithful politicans," urging us to speak out against injustice such as the evil of apartheid and to stand up for the principles they value as a people.

We see a broken world, but our hope lies in a faith that finds God in the midst of the brokenness. Today, we hear Christ speak. "The cup that I must drink, you shall drink. The baptism with which I must be baptised you must be baptised." Our baptismal vows call upon us to seek Christ in all persons, loving our neighbor as ourselves, striving for justice and respecting the dignity of every human being. That is is the motivation for our mission. When we seek Christ in others we find that humanity is a mosaic showing us the face of God. We are moved beyond race, beyond economic judgments against the poor, beyond national ideologies, beyond political ideologies. It is because we seek the face of Christ in all humanity that I am called to challenge anything that desecrates the Creation and denigrates personhood. The concept of a nuclear holocaust is a sacrilege that destroys the very image of God.

It is urgent that we be about our mission and remember who we are called to be, the compassionate sons and daughters of a living God, baptised into the mission to which Christ calls us. Our mission may not be what we would always choose, but arises from the demands of the Gospel in the context of the world as it is. We discover it in the God of exodus and exile, of passion and resurrection, of God speaking through the faithful in the brokenness and fragmentation of Creation.

In seeking our mission, I offer this reflection on my own role. My friends, I have said to this Church that there will be no outcasts. The hopes and convictions of all will be honored. Do not ask me to honor one set of views and disregard the other. I may agree with one, but I will respect both. I say this because I believe Baptism is the sacrament of inclusion. The unity of this Church will be maintained, not because we agree on everything, but because we will leave judgment to God. I may fail some of you as a prophetic voice, but I pray never to fail you as a pastor. I am reminded of this quotation by Dom Helda Camara, "The Bishop belongs to all. Let no one be scandalized if I frequent those who are considered unworthy or sinful. Who is not a sinner? Let no one be alarmed if I am seen with compromised and dangerous people, on the left or the right. Let no one bind me to a group. My door, my heart, must be open to everyone, absolutely everyone."

And, so, dear friends, I reach out to you today to join hands with me in rebuilding the earth, given to us by a loving God, not only to enjoy, but to protect and preserve. In Hawaii, we refer to aloha aina, love of the land and it is a sacred duty of Hawaiians to honor the land. Our mission, too, must be from a sense of sacred duty on behalf of the earth, a world broken and divided and in pain.

I reach out to my brothers, Desmond Tutu and James Kauluma, pledging my compassion, solidarity and witness with you and on behalf of your courageous witness against the evil of Apartheid.

I reach out to all my brother bishops to seek your guidance and wisdom so that we help shape the mission to which God calls us. I reach out to the presbyters and deacons of this church who are called to lead our congregations toward our mission. I reach out to our staff at the National Church center and the Executive Council to serve with urgency our mission and to set aside business as usual. I reach out to ecumenical bodies and other faiths pledging cooperation so that we might build bridges of hope for all humanity. I reach out to the other communions of this body ready to fulfill the agenda before us. I reach out to the faithful politicians in our midst and remind you that John Kennedy called us to a vision 25 years ago, a vision where the "strong are just, the weak secure and the peace preserved."

Most of all, I reach out to the faithful, the laity of this Church. I want to reach out and feel your hands in mine. For it is only with you that our mission can be authentically lived out.

The mission to which we are called may be disturbing and threatening to some, but if we seek God's compassionate will in it, it will be for the world our greatest gift. Let us live out a mission that rescues the world from its present peril, to save those drowning in a raging river of dispair, to rescue those caught in a wasteland of hopelessness. Let us commit ourselves to give the waters of Baptism to those who thirst for justice. Today, in this Eucharist, let us make visible to a shattered and hungry world a foretaste of the heavenly banquet. In Christ, we have the promise of a New Humanity and a New Creation. In Baptism, we are called to become the New Humanity and to build that New Creation.

PLEDGE OF PEACE OF THE DAN-ANN-JIM SCHOOL IN SAN ANTONIO, TX

(Mr. GONZALEZ asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks and include extraneous matter.)

Mr. GONZALEZ. Mr. Speaker, last week I was honored to have been invited to go to the Dan-Ann-Jim School. Now this is a 53-year-old school in southeast San Antonio which was started by a teacher as a private school. It is named after the first three enrolled students. It consists of a preschool and kindergarten level, and it was a most inspiring visit.

They asked me to deliver to the Congress or the President, if I could, a pledge of peace. And it was done by their spokesmen, a little group known as the Daisies, which is a pre-Brownie, Girl Scout troop. It consists of Jeanette Colunga, Kelley Ann Carraway, Jessica Esparza, Nicole Williams, and Tommi Rincon.

Mr. Speaker, it is a pledge of peace which I ask unanimous consent to put in the RECORD today because if my colleagues could have been with me and could have seen in these beautiful faces, in those limpid, pure eyes, a sincere desire for peace, asking us, whom they consider the leaders of their day, to be sure to do everything, particularly in our hearts and minds, to ensure that we bring about a peaceful world and, in their words, leave a legacy and a gift to the children who will be born and who will live on this planet of Earth, in peace.

PLEDGE OF PEACE

As a legacy and gift to the children who will be born and live on this Planet Earth, I hereby commit myself to fostering peace. I promise to do everything I can to help create a common future of peace for all human beings.

ACHIEVING JUSTICE AND HUMAN RIGHTS THROUGH NONVIOLENCE

(Ms. OAKAR asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Ms. OAKAR. Mr. Speaker, I, like many Americans, have been very inspired by the last few days of festivities honoring Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr's birthday. I hope that does not just last for 24 hours, but I would hope that we remember his gospel of civil rights and human rights for all people. I hope we remember one caveat that I think distinguished Dr. King and people like Gandhi and others from other leaders throughout the world, and that is that he was the preacher of gaining these rights through nonviolence.

I have been struck by some of the attacks on innocent people in an attempt to bring attention to various causes throughout the world, and I would only tell these individuals not only in our own country but throughout the world, who practice that kind of an approach, that they are doing a great disservice to their people's causes by using violence to justify their cause.

Dr. King, in preaching nonviolence, in demonstrating peacefully, taught us all a great lesson; and I think we need to renew that lesson today.

COMMUNICATION FROM THE HONORABLE CHARLES PASHAYAN, JR., MEMBER OF CONGRESS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. [Mr. WEISS] laid before the House the following communication from the Honorable CHARLES PASHAYAN, Jr., Member of Congress:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
January 17, 1986.

Hon. THOMAS P. O'NEILL, Jr.
Speaker, House of Representatives, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. SPEAKER: This is to notify you, pursuant to Rule L(50) of the Rules of the House of Representatives, that I have been served with a subpoena by the Municipal Court, Consolidated Fresno Judicial District, State of California. After consultation with the General Counsel to the Clerk, I will inform you of the determinations as required by the House Rule.

Sincerely yours,
CHARLES PASHAYAN, Jr.,
Member of Congress.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. JONES of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I be allowed to proceed first in order with my special order, followed by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. REGULA].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is the gentleman's special order for 5 minutes?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. A 5-minute special order, yes.

Mr. JONES of Oklahoma. As is the special order of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. REGULA].

Mr. WALKER. I thank the Chair, and I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

BIPARTISAN ECONOMIC SUMMIT

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. JONES] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. JONES of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, as we begin this second session of Congress, it is obvious that the Gramm-Rudman balanced budget amendment is going to take center place in this session of Congress. How we implement this will determine the success or failure of this Congress but, more importantly, the success or failure of the economy of the United States and the free world.

Since 1981, when the whole economic theory first burst onto the scene, I have been predicting and warning against high Federal deficits of $200 billion a year every year, as far as the eye can see.

It is obvious, after having dealt with this problem for 4 years as chairman of the Budget Committee, that the conventional means of the legislative process, the normal process of setting priorities and dealing with those priorities to reach a deficit target, has broken down, that is not working. That was obvious last year and one of the reasons why I supported a modified Gramm-Rudman balanced budget program.

Clearly, it is not the best way to manage fiscal policy. The best way to manage fiscal policy is for the President to send us a balanced budget, something he has not done. The best way to manage fiscal policy is for Congress to respond to that Presidential budget and to pass a balanced budget, something which has not been done.

Therefore, out of frustration that the conventional process broke down, this Congress passed Gramm-Rudman balanced budget amendment.

The main thing about Gramm-Rudman that I think we have to preserve are the annual targets of reducing the projected deficits by 20 percent a year until we reach a balanced budget by 1991. It is absolutely imperative that we set this country on a course and implement that course to reach a balanced budget and to get our fiscal policy back in line. Without that, I think we are just telling the next generation of Americans, the youth of this country, that we are going to condemn them to a lower standard of living and that the harder the children of today work when they become adults, less of what they earn and less of what they produce will end up in their pockets; more of what they produce will end up paying interest and principal on the debts that are being created today.

Therefore, we must make a balanced budget process work.

The Gramm-Rudman proposal has at least a couple of obstacles to surpass this year. One of those is an obstacle in the courts, where the constitutionality of this process is being challenged; and the second and perhaps bigger obstacle is the response of public opinion when we start dealing with next year's budget and have to cut $50 or $60 billion out of that budget from projected spending.

It will be interesting to see how the President and how Congress respond when military programs have to take a very deep cut and when domestic programs have to take a deep cut.

The principal fallacy of Gramm-Rudman is that it treats all programs alike, the good with the bad, and that clearly is not very good fiscal management or management of any kind.

So as we deal with the implementation of Gramm-Rudman this year, I hope that the most important thing we keep in mind is to reach the targets of deficit reduction. Obviously, the process, the mechanism, will have to be altered in order to create some fairness that may not exist.

What I really think we should have, though, is to resurrect something that I introduced, along with bipartisan cosponsors, in 1984, which this Congress passed and which the President signed into law, and that is a bipartisan domestic economic summit conference. The President signed that in 1984, and that bipartisan domestic economic summit was a casualty of the 1984 Presidential election because it was ignored.

The need for a bipartisan economic summit is greater today than it was even in 1984.

This resolution which I am going to introduce in just a few minutes, along with the original cosponsors, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. REGULA], and the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. FRENZEL], will direct the President, if it should pass, to convene within 45 days of enactment a bipartisan economic summit, with the Speaker of the House, the President of the United States, the minority and the majority leaders of the House and the Senate and the Republican and Democratic leaders of economic policy in both Houses of Congress.

I urge my colleagues to join in this and to push for a bipartisan economic summit to establish an American budget, not just a partisan budget.

PRIVILEGED REPORT IN THE MATTER OF PROCEEDINGS AGAINST RALPH BERNSTEIN AND JOSEPH BERNSTEIN

Mr. FASCELL, from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, submitted a privileged report, together with separate additional and dissenting views, in the matter of proceedings against Ralph Bernstein and Joseph Bernstein, which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered to be printed.

FISCAL RESPONSIBILITY

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. REGULA], is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. REGULA. Mr. Speaker and my colleagues, a window of opportunity has opened to Congress in controlling the spiralling Federal budget deficit. With the passage of the Gramm-Rudman balanced budget amendment we are forced to bring fiscal responsibility into Government expenditures.

Now the question is whether we permit the blunt across-the-board cuts of the amendment to be initiated or enact legislation that can selectively reduce the deficit based on recognized priorities.

The recent CBO-OMB estimate of a fiscal year 1986 budget deficit of $220.5 billion far exceeds the $171.9 billion permitted under law. Yet, the $11.7 billion in spending cuts, to be automatically implemented in March, are only the beginning in the drastic decreases to be split evenly between defense and nonexempt domestic programs.

It is debated whether the sequestered cuts can achieve the needed reductions by themselves without active congressional action. Current figures reveal a 5½-percent gap exists between the amount of GNP spent by the Federal Government as compared to 19 percent taken in as tax revenues. A recent publication of the Committee for a Responsible Budget observed that Government spending required for defense, entitlements, and interest alone exceeds total Federal revenues.

Other experts speculate that the threat of sequester will compel us to agree on an economic package that is capable of meeting the required reductions in a more balanced manner. I agree that Congress must act, where possible, to legislate the necessary cuts.

In the highly competitive free world environment of 1986, our industrial economy is striving mightily to become highly efficient. Labor and management share in this effort.

We in Government must meet the same challenge. The alternative is an erosion of capital for Government expenditures that should remain in the private sector for investment in industrial modernization, new technology and the acquisition of the tools needed to compete in the industrial world of the future.

The international summit in Geneva was a beginning for arms control. A domestic summit is vital for spending control.

In the past, I have supported the convening of an economic summit to consider specific outlay reductions. Along with, the distinguished gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. JONES] who was a leader in this effort, I have cosponsored legislation to accomplish such a meeting between congressional leaders and key administrative officials. The measure was enacted into law in April of 1984. Unfortunately, the conference has never been convened.

Once again, I am joining my colleague from Oklahoma [Mr. JONES] in offering a proposal which would establish a summit and require its specific recommendations to be reported back to Congress within 45 days of its meeting. Gramm-Rudman provides two procedural opportunities, each fiscal year, to agree on legislation that will meet the target deficit goals. I believe this measure will provide a mechanism through which to develop specific budget cuts and avoid sequestration with that schedule.

I urge my colleagues to join with the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. JONES], myself and the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. FRENZEL] in support of this measure.

GRAMM-RUDMAN

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MAZZOLI). Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALKER] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, we are obviously going to have a good deal of discussion here today about Gramm-Rudman because I think that most of us have come to the conclusion, looking at what took place at the end of the last session of Congress, that this session of Congress will certainly be dominated by the decision we have to make relative to that bill.

I think it is important, though, to begin to talk about Gramm-Rudman for being precisely what it is. Gramm-Rudman is a balanced-budget requirement. It has made the balanced budget a law of the land as of 1991. It has provided us with a schedule for achieving that balanced budget by 1991.

Therefore, when you hear people come to the floor, as we have had people come to the floor today, suggesting the repeal of Gramm-Rudman, they are really suggesting repealing the balanced budget requirement.

During this session of Congress, when people come to the floor suggesting that "we ought to do this, despite Gramm-Rudman," what they are saying is that there is a priority in their minds greater than balancing the Federal budget.

When we hear people talk about the need to raise taxes, what they are saying is, "We cannot control our spending in order to balance the budget; therefore, you ought to raise taxes in order to meet this requirement."

In all those cases, I think the American people need to assess where they are in that particular issue. I submit that there are very few priorities of Government that the American people feel exceed the need to balance the budget, if any. But Congress has mandated a number of those priorities to be set aside as we approach the mandates of Gramm-Rudman, such as Social Security and some programs of that type. We have already set those aside.

So now when we have people coming to the floor suggesting that there is some spending that they think is more important than Gramm-Rudman, I think the American people are going to assess whether or not that really is more important to them than balancing the budget.

The issue of raising taxes is a total nonsense issue. The American people do not want their taxes increased in order to have Congress get off the hook on the spending that they have been increasing. The fact is that tax revenues to the Federal Government have been increasing markedly. Last year, as a result of growth, we brought in $66 billion more to the Federal Government. Had we just taken one-half of that additional revenue that we got as a result of growth and applied it to the deficit, we would meet most of the mandate that Gramm-Rudman is imposing upon on us on a yearly basis. In other words, $36 billion a year. So that in fact if we would just stop our spending habits, we could use the growth revenues being derived from a growing economy to meet Gramm-Rudman. But that is not what Congress wants to do. Many in this place want to raise taxes. I submit that is not a responsible course of action and that many of us are going to force those who want to have that policy advanced to do it themselves without any votes from a lot of us who think that what we ought to be doing is cutting spending, not raising taxes.

The same matter rests with the defense area. We have already mandated, under Gramm-Rudman, that defense is going to take more than its fair share of the spending reductions. I am not convinced that that was a proper course to take, but that is what we have mandated under the bill. There will be some that will come to the floor that will attempt to protect their pet programs, suggesting we ought to take even more out of defense. That would be irresponsible in the first order, and I think that we need to hold those people responsible for trying to emasculate the Defense Establishment of this country.

Gramm-Rudman really does translate to balanced budget. It is a question of whether or not we want to meet the mandate of the American people to balance the budget of the Federal Government. What we have done in the past has been to talk a lot about doing something about deficits but doing nothing. A lot of people have talked about the fact that Gramm-Rudman is irresponsible because what we ought to have is Congress acting independently and sending it down to the President; we ought not have these kinds of disciplines imposed upon us. Well, that is exactly what we have been doing for the last 10 years—and over the last 5 years, we have overspent our own budgets in this Congress by $150 billion. That which we disciplined ourselves on we could not meet the discipline. We need the Gramm-Rudman discipline.

The President is going to submit, from everything I understand, a budget that meets the restrictions of Gramm-Rudman. I think we ought to go about trying to make certain that the American people get, as the product of this Congress, something that does as good a job as the President in terms of meeting the requirements that Gramm-Rudman has imposed.

One other thing that I think we ought to be aware of, and that is that we are going to have to look bill-by-bill, program-by-program, as things come on this floor as to whether or not they fit with the law that we have now imposed upon ourselves. I think that we should have an enforcement policy. I think that the Members will find that there will be an enforcement policy in effect on the House floor, that as we get an authorization bill out here, as we get appropriation bills out here, that we are going to examine each one of them and find out whether or not they comply with the goal of meeting a balanced budget.

Should we be enacting a new spending programs at a time when we are trying to balance the budget? Should we be raising the levels of spending in programs when we are trying to balance the budget? Those are questions that need to be asked on this floor day-after-day, on bill-after-bill, on program-after-program. I think that the Members ought to be required to vote along the way on some of that when what they are proposing is a change.

We need to balance the budget; we need to start doing it with everything we do in the House.

TRIBUTE TO ED POLEN

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ANNUNZIO] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. ANNUNZIO. Mr. Speaker, I take this opportunity to pay tribute to Mr. Edward P. "Penn" Polen, of Ashburn, VA, who passed away on December 21, 1985. This came as a shock to me, and to Mr. Polen's many friends among both Members and staff of the House. Since his death occurred during the recess period, I know that not everyone in the Hill community is aware of his sudden passing.

Ed, as he was known to his friends and associates, was a longtime employee of the Office of the Clerk—42 years and 1 month, to be exact. He was a tireless worker and one of the most loyal staff members in the House of Representatives. He was highly respected by many in this Chamber whom he has assisted over the years. At 60 years of age, Ed Polen was assistant chief of the property supply and repair service when he died suddenly of a heart attack last month at Loudoun Memorial Hospital.

Ed's tenure in the House and in the Office of the Clerk began on November 15, 1943, when he was hired by then Clerk, the Honorable South Trimble, to work as a helper in the Property Supply Office. Since that date, Ed Polen served in the same office in a number of positions ranging from helper to assistant finisher, to assistant upholsterer, to upholsterer, to assistant chief. He had been that office's assistant chief since September 1967. In every position throughout Ed's long career, he was consistently one of the most dedicated of all our employees, constantly devoting all of his energy to further the mission of the Clerk's Office and the interests of the House.

Ed was an organizer of the Congressional Federal Credit Union and received a Distinguished Service Award from the Doorman's Society of the House of Representatives in 1977. In 1980, he received an award for "Distinguished Service to the Congress of the United States, Its Members and Their Staffs." In addition, he received many letters of thanks and commendation from Members of Congress.

Working as he had under five different Clerks: Messrs. South Trimble, Ralph Roberts, W. Pat Jennings, Ted Henshaw, and Benjamin J. Guthrie, the Office of the Clerk and the House had grown to depend on Ed's wealth of knowledge and expertise. His familiarity with property management, his historical perspective, and his downright good judgment were invaluable assets to this institution.

Ed was a lifelong Ashburn resident, a dairy farmer, and active in Loudoun County civic, community, and church work. A devoted father and husband, Ed is survived by his wife, Barbara C. Polen; daughters, Debra P. Campbell and Dale P. Myers; brothers, Clayton and Robert Polen, and three grandchildren, Frances Campbell and John and Sarah Myers. Our prayers, sympathy, and love go out to this family and friends at this time of sorrow.

LEGISLATION INTRODUCED TO CORRECT SERIOUS FLAW IN GRAMM - RUDMAN - HOLLINGS BALANCED BUDGET AND EMERGENCY DEFICIT CONTROL ACT OF 1985

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MAZZOLI). Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Florida [Mr. HUTTO] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. HUTTO. Mr. Speaker, I am introducing today on behalf of Mr. PARRIS and myself a bill that will help correct a serious flaw in the Gramm-

Rudman-Hollings Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985. My bill will amend the act to except from the definition of automatic spending increase those portions of certain Federal retirement and disability programs relating to lower pay categories.

Basically, my amendment would provide a cost-of-living adjustment [COLA] for the first $12,000 of a recipient's retirement and pension pay. This would eliminate an inequity against our military and civil service retirees and Survivor Benefit Program recipients by exempting from the Gramm-Rudman cuts the first $12,000 of each participant's benefits. This would effectively restore COLA's for those in low-paying categories meaning those receiving less than $12,000 a year in retirement pay/pensions. The $12,000 would also be increased by the percent change in the Consumer Price Index for each succeeding year.

While I was 1 of 271 House Members that voted for the Gramm-Rudman bill, I did so not because I thought it was the best way, but only because: First, our national debt is over $2 trillion and this debt is costing us $137.4 billion a year just in interest—that's 17.4 cents out of every dollar of revenue Americans contribute to the Federal Government—second, my constituents continually ask me to do something about this deficit; and third, because it is our Nation's most pressing problem and one of my greatest concerns.

However, the conferees, in drafting the Gramm-Rudman bill for our consideration, must have reasoned that Social Security recipients and veterans should be exempted from the automatic cuts because they are on a small fixed income. Well, we have a lot of Federal and military retirees and SBP recipients in the same boat—and they shouldn't be discriminated against. I contend that it is unfair to exempt Social Security recipients and veterans compensation and benefits from the Gramm-Rudman measure when Federal military and civilan retirees and SBP recipients must face reductions. Military retirees are veterans, too, and deserve the same COLA other veterans receive.

I believe most retirees would have accepted the COLA cut, if everybody got cut. While I would prefer a total restoration of the promised 3.1 percent COLA for fiscal year 1986, and plan to support any legislation that would do so, I believe my bill is a realistic alternative, both politically and fiscally.

The $12,000 exemption point would provide equitable protection for military and civil service retirees and the Survivor Benefit Program recipients. This would include 68 percent of the military retirees, 52 percent of the civil service retirees, and 100 percent of the SBP recipients.

To help put this in better perspective, let me share some cogent facts. Of the nearly 20 million units—couples and singles—receiving Social Security, 99 percent in ages 62 to 64 and 94 percent over age 65 receive less than $12,000 a year. A couple receives an average annual income of $9,500 and a single person, $5,200. The veteran averages about $3,600 with about 90 percent receiving less than $12,000.

I urge my colleagues to support this bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LELAND] is recognized for 60 minutes.

Mr. LELAND. Mr. Speaker, today we can be proud. Today, as we stand in the afterglow of one of the most gratifying experiences in the history of this great democratic society, I do genuinely feel that we have walked in the footsteps of freedom.

Across this Nation—in cities and sprawling urban centers—people of conscience paused to remember our fallen hero, Martin Luther King, Jr. This gentle person—this champion of justice and patron of nonviolence—taught us as no other had, that the ultimate measure of a man is not where he stands in moments of comfort and convenience, but where he stands at times of challenge and controversy.

Martin Luther King, Jr., was a warrior for peace. And on yesterday, January 20 we took a giant step toward the preservation of one of the greatest legacies that will grace the history of our Nation.

It was my great pleasure to serve on the Martin Luther King, Jr., Federal Holiday Commission and to take part in celebrations thoughout our country in paying tribute to the life and dream of this great statesman who raised his enormous eloquence in a tireless quest for love and peace. He was a man for all seasons who asked that we put aside our differences and join in a spirit of brotherhood and sisterhood, recognizing our mutual bonds and common humanity.

He was a man ahead of his time, and as we reconvene this 99th session of Congress in the shadow of Geneva—we are reminded today of the words he spoke in 1964 as he received the Nobel Prize for Peace. The Nobel Laureate on that day in Oslo, Norway said:

> I refuse to accept the cynical notion that nation after nation must spiral down a militaristic stairway into the hell of thermonuclear destruction. I believe that unarmed truth and unconditional love will have the final word in reality. This is why right, temporarily defeated, is stronger than evil triumphant.

He accepted that award on behalf of all men and women who love peace, brotherhood and sisterhood, and viewed himself as a trustee of a new vision for tomorrow. Let us hope that those who face one another across the great void which divides America from the Soviet Union—can muster within themselves a dream for a noble peace.

Martin Luther King, Jr., gave to the world a new understanding of equality and justice for all. He taught us that our democratic principles are seriously impaired when they are not applied equally. And it is in that spirit today—that my colleagues and I—stand in this monument to democracy that is the U.S. Capitol—representing the diverse politics and peoples of America.

We have traveled a tortuous road—we who are black and white and people of color in America. In the memory of Martin Luther King, Jr., we start a new journey today as partners in a new era of progress—revived by a new sense of dignity, Dr. King, as the drum major for peace, through his life and by his death has widened the road we travel into a superhighway of justice.

We thank you, America for your efforts on behalf of freedom as evidenced by the extraordinary outpouring of love that we have witnessed during the King holiday celebration. A special tribute must go to the King family and the millions who participated in the moving production on last evening hosted by the musical genius Stevie Wonder.

It is a privilege and honor that we join in this special tribute to Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr.

Mr. KEMP. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LELAND. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. KEMP. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate my colleague's yielding.

My wife and I had the opportunity last night to join you in that audience in tribute to Martin Luther King and the King holiday which we celebrated for the first time.

The gentleman from Texas is a liberal Democrat from the State of Texas, and I am a conservative Republican from the suburbs of Buffalo, NY, and I think that celebration of the holiday last night symbolized that it was not a black holiday or a white holiday, it was a holiday that we celebrated together with all people of all colors and of all political stripes who believe that this country cannot reach the fulfullment of the American dream until all men and women are free until all have full civil rights, until all people are judged not on the color of their skin but on the content of their character, as Martin Luther King pointed out.

I was one of those who stood in opposition to the King holiday previously and decided in 1983 to vote for it because of the arguments and the persuasive words, not only of the gentleman from Texas but of our colleague from Philadelphia, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GRAY], of Katie Hall, who is no longer with us, and of Mrs. King herself and our colleague from California [Mr. LUNGREN] on the premise that the civil rights revolution was really an extension of the American Revolution, which was predicated upon the idea of equality, of opportunity for all people based on the Declaration of Independence.

If I may say so, as a Republican and as a member of the minority party in these Chambers, my party was founded upon that rock of civil rights and freedom from all as Mr. Lincoln worked and died for.

This country went through a great struggle over the issue of slavery, and it seems to me that out of that struggle has come a recognition that our country cannot reach its potential as a great nation until the rights of all its citizens are respected and upheld.

The gentleman's words are quite eloquent today as he stands in the well of the House asking his colleagues to help commemorate that holiday, and I just want to say as one who, as I said earlier, opposed and then supported it, that I consider it one of the great satisfactions of my 15 years and now starting my 16th year in the House to have watched so many men and women of good will come together on behalf of the idea, not just of a holiday in commemoration of the birthday of Martin Luther King but in the recognition of some of those thoughts that were expressed by our friend, the gentleman from Texas.

There is something deeply satisfying knowing that all Americans will now celebrate Reverend King's birthday as a national holiday—something deeper perhaps than we can completely express.

Reverend King, of course, is the first black American to be honored as an American hero, not simply a great leader of black Americans. But as important as that is, it's not the most important point.

It was one of the great satisfactions of my political career to have worked with BILL GRAY and Katie Hall, the King Foundation and others to recognize Reverend King's birthday, and then to have stood beside Mrs. King as the bill was signed into law. I helped fight for that legislation because I think the American Revolution is a promise that won't be totally complete until we guarantee and extend the basic human right of equal opportunity to all Americans and eliminate those legal and economic barriers that prevent people from being what God meant them to be. Barriers to opportunity are entirely unjust, and as Reverend King wrote, "Injustice anywhere is a threat to justice everywhere."

Reverend King seemed to wake us up to something true in ourselves, the thought that justice, to be right must be colorblind. He said that between white and black Americans, "Their destiny is tied up with our destiny, and their freedom is inextricably bound to our freedom; we cannot walk alone." Surely he modeled his teaching on the example of the Good Shepherd.

He often talked and preached his "dream." But his dream was our dream, the American dream, a vision of that day when every man and woman is judged, not by what's "outside" but what's "inside." There is much in his teaching that reminds me of my former profession, football. For he taught us that rewards should be proportioned to effort and work and merit, not to birth or privilege or color. All his efforts aimed at this ideal of equal opportunity for all, and he planted his words like seeds in the political soil.

And now we begin to see the harvest. I believe a new coalition is taking shape, symbolized by the warm support given the King national holiday bill by many "progressive conservatives" in the Congress who deeply believe in "bridge building." Americans are uniting around one idea, his idea that the greatest resource this country has is our people with their enormous spiritual, intellectual, and physical potential. You can't build barriers to opportunity for some people without holding everyone back. To deny a single individual the opportunity to work and earn and keep the rewards of his labor is to reduce the dignity of all. Or, to put it positively, if you want to help anyone get ahead, you have to lower the barriers to opportunity for everyone to get ahead.

We must work toward a budget process that emphasizes people's needs and human investment instead of green eyeshades and red ink. We need a jobs creation budget that commits this country to moving to full employment without inflation and that dramatically reduces the unemployment rate for all, including minorities. And we need a strategy combining budget, tax, and monetary reforms, and enterprise zones for the inner cities. Congressman CHARLIE RANGEL and I have discussed a new enterprise zone proposal providing for first year investment writeoffs so that startup capital will become available. I look forward to working with Members on both sides of the aisle to create that strategy and realize these goals.

When it comes to Reverend King's goal of equal opportunity and lowering the barriers to prosperity for all, there can't be such a thing as Republican or Democrat, liberal or conservative, white or black. Rev. Leon Sullivan, founder of the Opportunities Industrialization Centers of America, another mentor of BILL GRAY's, talks in terms of jobs being the ladder out of poverty; John Jacob of the National Urban League and Ben Hooks of the NAACP have suggested the same idea. Not only must we have a safety net below which people can't fall. We also need a ladder of opportunity for the poor to climb. As the philosopher Moses Maimonides taught, the highest form of charity makes it possible for the poor to progress so they can live without needing charity; the only way out of poverty is employment. We might not all agree on the policies but we've got to agree on the goal, on the standard, on the dream Reverend King preached.

Reverend King loved America, the way all real patriots do—not because it has reached perfection, but because in a free society we can work together peacefully and nonviolently to improve it.

Ladies and gentlemen, there are reasons to be optimistic about our future. The barriers to equal opportunity are being broken down, slowly, even too slowly, but the direction is right. Reverend King's dream was that we could all sit down at the same table. Not only can we do that now, but the table is beginning to abound with the material and spiritual benefits of freedom, jobs, and opportunity for all of us to share and enjoy.

We need great leadership to move us toward genuine social reform and real progress. We need great heroes because their actions show us how much potential people have. Reverend King's life of leadership and sacrifice opened the way for all Americans to expand their potential, and beyond that there is no more we can ask of an American hero.

In my view, as we begin the new year and begin this "superhighway" alluded to by the gentleman from Texas, we might also give some thought to the idea that the civil rights revolution will never be over until there is an opportunity for every single man and woman in this country to have the dignity and the justice that goes along with economic opportunity and a job. Martin Luther King talked many times about the war on poverty. He had his ideas about fighting poverty, the gentleman from Texas has his, and I have mine, but I think the one thing upon which we would both agree and he would agree with us today if he were here—is the fact that we really cannot achieve economic opportunity in this country until there is a job for every person who seeks and desires and wants one.

There has been a lot of talk today about Gramm-Rudman and cutting spending. As one who voted against Gramm-Rudman, I did so not on the basis of opposing the idea of getting deficits down. I do not think there is anybody, liberal, center, or right, who does not think we have an obligation to the future and to our children to get the deficit down, but I want to remind my colleagues that the cloud hanging over the economy is not the deficit as much as it is the fact that this country is still underemployed, underemployed in terms of its physical and mental and human potential.

We have 8½ million Americans unemployed. We have pockets of poverty and underemployment and high minority unemployment. We have lots of folks who really have no hope of ever achieving the change to get even a leg or a foot on that ladder of opportunity that we talk so much about. It seems to me if one would give thought to what would happen to the Federal budget if we were at the full utilization of the potential of the American economy in terms of full employment for our people, as well as full utilization of the physical capacity in this country, or at least closer to it, say at 90 percent of our plant capacity, I think you would find frankly that the budget would be near balance. Unemployment and underutilization increases spending and decreases the tax base of our country, thus full employment and higher production reduces social and welfare costs and broadens our national tax base.

This is the compassionate way to bring our budget to balance—put America back to work.

I am not going to give a speech on economics, as I often am accused of doing, but I only bring it up to my friend to see if as we are building bridges in the country between races and classes, if you will, on the spirit of the occasion, I think we might also consider in this new session of Congress some—I am going to use the word radical in a dictionary sense; radical, of course, in the dictionary sense responds or alludes to the idea of making significant change, but in getting back to roots, getting back to fundamental causes.

I hope that as we move forward in this Congress that we begin to look at the fundamental problem underlying our economy. It is not the deficit per se. That is a symptom of the problem. The real problem is that we still need to take some radical approaches to encourage labor and capital and economic growth. Tax reform can lower rates and create incentives for labor and capital.

I hope tax reform will remove 6 or 7 million low-income working folks from the income tax rolls so they do not face the terrible burden they face when they get on the first rung of the ladder. We need to help families with a full $2,000 exemption for each dependent.

I hope we consider some political compromise on enterprise zones so that we can put zones of opportunity in our inner cities and bring down those unemployment rates among minorities and teenagers. I hope some day America is one big enterprise zone from sea to shining sea.

I hope we consider how we can give people a better stake in private property by privatizing some of our public housing.

I think there are a number of innovative things that we can do to fight poverty. The gentleman represents the Black Caucus. I represent the thinking of a group of progressive conservatives who are looking for solutions in the private sector.

I just want to close my remarks on this holiday celebration by suggesting that the civil rights revolution has one more phase. We have broken down, it seems to me, many of the legal barriers to opportunity but as the doors of the economy were closed, it seems to me the next step in the civil rights revolution must be to open those doors to economic hope and opportunity. We need to make a national commitment to moving this country to full employment, without inflation. We should encourage affirmative efforts to get all people into the mainstream of the American dream. There is a big debate over affirmative action; but I think everybody would agree we need affirmative efforts and compensatory programs and policies in education, enterprise zones for the economy, job training, in vocational education, in housing, to move this country toward that America that Martin Luther King envisioned in his great "I have a dream" speech.

I just want to say that it was a thrill to sit with the gentleman last night in the Kennedy Center as someone from a different part of the country and perhaps from a different party than the gentleman, but to share in that dream, because of mayor of Atlanta, the Mayor of Washington, DC, and all of the white and black entertainers all closed their remarks by saying, "We all share in this dream."

I just want the gentleman to know that that is not any one person's dream. This is the dream of all of us and for all time, and I congratulate the gentleman for his leadership and join with him in this special tribute to Dr. King and thank the gentleman for his friendship.

Mr. LELAND. Mr. Speaker, let me just thank the gentleman for his participation. I thank him, too, for broadening the spectrum of our interests as we start this new year in our session of this Congress. I thank the gentleman for his perspectives. I think they are interesting and worthy of pursuit. I know that the gentleman and I do, indeed, have the same goals. Many times we differ about how we should get there, but all we want to do is make America an America for all of its people.

Mr. KEMP. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate that as well and I thank the gentleman.

Mr. LELAND. Mr. Speaker, let me yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. REGULA].

Mr. REGULA. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding. Mr. Speaker, it is my sincere honor and pleasure to join my colleagues in tribute to Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. As a member of the King Federal Holiday Commission, I had the opportunity to learn more about the man, his vision, and the valuable lessons that he taught. Throughout the previous year, the Commission emphasized the importance of viewing the holiday as a time of reflection and recommitment. We chose the theme of "Living the Dream" to state very clearly that there is work yet undone.

The legacy of Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr., will live on forever. As was evidenced by the myriad of celebrations across the Nation, Americans from all walks of life united in a spirit of reconciliation to commemorate the accomplishments of one of America's great heroes. Certainly, Dr. King's place in history has been secured in volumes of books, miles of film, and now through a new national holiday. However, the importance of Dr. King's life will be lost unless we continue to live his dream.

Central to the dream is the thought that individuals must open up their hearts and minds in order to see and understand the challenges that yet await. This credo must be manifest not only in specific times of national reflection or political opportunity, but should be an intrinsic part of our lives and dwell within our hearts. Dr. King understood that his words were without substance if they fell upon insincere hearts and minds. That is why we must understand the enormity of the man and his message.

We must live the dream here at home. As a world leader, the precedents established in the United States have implications that extend well beyond our borders. Each year, an estimated 30,000 individuals from other nations visit the Martin Luther King, Jr., Center for Nonviolent Social Change.

These pilgrims from countries as far away as Sweden and Pakistan flock to the center in search of understanding and to appreciate the meaning of the man. They immerse themselves in the doctrines of King and Gandhi which emphasize brotherly love and the beloved community. We should be striving to ensure that the ideals espoused by Dr. King and his comtemporaries become a reality in American society and not merely empty visions.

Whenever there is racial strife or religious intolerance, we must act. Wherever there is poverty or other barriers to economic independence, we must act. Wherever there is inequality or an absence of justice, we must act. These are the challenges that we must face. Let us take for inspiration the words of the man and the continuing struggle of his courageous widow.

Let us continue to live the dream.

Mr. LELAND. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for his participation and also for his personal reflections on Dr. King and his participation in the celebrations over the weekend.

I yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DURBIN].

Mr. DURBIN. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I would like to commend my colleague, the gentleman from Texas, for calling this special order, even though today we are 1 day after the fact; it is the first opportunity we have had to meet on the floor of the House of Representatives and to speak to our first national holiday honoring Dr. Martin Luther King.

Yesterday morning in Springfield, IL, a local club, called the Frontiers Club, held its 11th annual Martin Luther King breakfast. They have not only established a standard for the State, but for their club and for the Nation in having these breakfasts on an annual basis. More than 1,000 people in Springfield, IL—Abraham Lincoln's hometown—came out for what has become a major annual event in that town.

I went from there to Decatur, IL. They had their very first Martin Luther King observance. I am sure we had over 500 people, close to 1,000, marching and gathering in the Civic Center to pay honor to Dr. King. It was truly an historic occasion and brought together many people who otherwise would not meet or speak to these issues.

There were several things said during the course of the day that struck me. Some of them were pretty harsh and they caused me to reflect on what we were doing with Dr. Martin Luther King's observance. One speaker said, and I am afraid there is some truth to his statement, that every hypocrite in America loves Dr Martin Luther King today. It struck me that during his lifetime, he was far from a universally loved figure. Although we meet to extol his virtues and all of us point to the truth that he spoke of, the fact is that when Dr. Martin Luther King was alive, he was very controversial. He was the subject of ridicule and attack and many people who yesterday took the day off and enjoyed it with their families or for whatever other purpose, maybe 18 or 19 years ago had a little different perspective on Dr. King.

I think it is important for us to reflect on the fact that perhaps Dr. Martin Luther King's contribution to America was just how uncomfortable he made us feel. When we would get up and speak about the struggle for civil rights, there were a lot of people unhappy about that, North and South.

Mr. LELAND. Black and white.

Mr. DURBIN. Black and white.

When he spoke about the Vietnam war, believe me, and I am sure the Congressman from Texas can recall, those were not popular statements. Many people questioned the patriotism of the man for raising any doubts about our foreign policy in Southeast Asia.

Then, toward the end of his career before his assassination, he began addressing more specifically issues of economic opportunity, issues that have gone unresolved two decades later after his death, but issues that still confront us and bring into real question our commitment as a nation to peace and justice.

So I hope that as we reflect on Dr. Martin Luther King, that we will recall that if we start feeling comfortable about the memory of Martin Luther King, we have probably forgotten what he is all about. As long as his memory makes us feel uncomfortable about the status quo, then we will recall the real contribution of the man.

The other point I would like to make is that in my hometown of Springfield, Ill, every year on February 12, there are major observances of the birth of Abraham Lincoln. Of course, we are quite proud to be Abraham Lincoln's hometown. Again, many people come forward to speak of the great contribution he made to America, much as did Dr. King.

I have always tried to state in my speeches that it is important for those of us who honor those memories to look for the opportunity in today's issues to apply the principles that those men stood for, and the same is true, of course, of Dr. King.

Is there doubt in anyone's mind where Dr. King would be on the issue of apartheid or constructive engagement? We know exactly where he would be and what he would be speaking to.

The efforts by Bishop Tutu and others would be joined by Dr. King and make us feel uncomfortable again about the foreign policy position of the United States.

I hope, as we honor and revere his memory, that we will be reminded of those types of issues.

The final point I would like to make in joining in this special order is to echo the words made by a speaker yesterday in Springfield who said. "You know, Congress didn't create the Martin Luther King Day, the law didn't create it. The man created it."

With his times and with his contribution, he became such a compelling force in American culture that we would take an ordinary step in recognizing his contributions in the scant 18 years after his death. It speaks to his great contribution. The bipartisan effort in creating that observance, the compelling force that brought many who were reticent or reluctant to get involved in establishing that national holiday, has been reestablished I think in our commitment. Let us hope that we maintain that commitment.

I want to commend the gentleman from Texas for bringing us together for a brief time today in observance of Dr. Martin Luther King's anniversary of his birth.

Mr. LELAND. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. GILMAN] has been very patient. He was the first in the Chamber when we started this special order and I must yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, on January 20, 1986, the Nation paused for a moment in song and prayer to commemorate Martin Luther King, Jr.'s birthday. As Congress begins today a new session, I would like to thank the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LELAND] for having arranged this special order which gives us all another moment to ponder the message behind Martin Luther King, Jr.'s words that serve as an inspiration to all of those, in every country of the world, who seek to end racial inequality.

It would be a very large task, indeed, to cite all the instances in which Martin Luther King, Jr.'s words were at the heart of a civil rights struggle. But it is not very difficult to see how Martin Luther King, Jr.'s dream presents an unbelievable source of hope for all those who are presently engaged in the struggle for equal treatment throughout the world. The South African crisis comes to mind when one thinks of social unrest and blatant segregation. Do not Dr. King's words ring true in this instance, as do his principles and values, time and time again?

In addition, I must express my delight with the attention which this national holiday has received. In addition to the parades and speeches, a more permanent aspect of the holiday remains. We are now unbelievably more aware of the effectiveness of nonviolent social change and the need for continued support of equal opportunity programs. Children will be provided a more comprehensive understanding of the impact which Dr. King has had on the civil rights movement. Most importantly, the values which Martin Luther King, Jr., preached are undying; even with the passage of time, there is no doubt in my mind that Martin Luther King's dream will live on in the hearts and minds of our children who will be our future civil rights trailblazers.

These young trailblazers of whom I speak will have a full agenda. Racial discrimination, poverty, and inadequate housing has not disappeared even though we may now revel in the accomplishments of our past leaders. Martin Luther King and his predecessors laid the groundwork for our future civil rights leaders who must now tackle persistent problems and those which may plague us in the years to come.

The enthusiasm behind the important national observance is inspiring. Americans of all nationalities demonstrated their support for a holiday addressing every man's struggle for equal treatment. I am grateful to see that Dr. King's words were not misinterpreted as being applicable solely to a select group of people, at one isolated point in time. Dr. King's vision saw us all as spiritual brothers, not eyeing one another as potential rivals and enemies because of racial tension, but as equals, willing to help one another in improving the economic and moral fabric of this Nation.

I was pleased to have joined as a cosponsor of this important legislation establishing a Federal holiday to commemorate Dr. King's birthday and would like to commend all those who have contributed so much to the success of this national holiday. Without such dedication, the words of Dr. King would remain only as an unrealized dream; a testimony of the apathy which may overcome those who are not constantly searching for innovative ways to allow the King dream to materialize. But in light of the success of this national holiday and the energetic quality of the present civil rights movement, I am confident that the desire to continue the struggle for equal rights is alive and well throughout our Nation.

Mr. LELAND. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman, too, for his helping to usher in the Martin Luther King legislation, the national holiday legislation, through the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service, as well as for helping to pass the legislation in the House. The gentleman has made a great contribution, not only here today, but also in memory of Dr. Martin Luther King.

Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. LEVIN].

Mr. LEVIN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding and for this opportunity in helping to make it possible.

As I have these few moments, a couple memories especially flood back. One is older, but very much lingering. The second is more recent and vivid.

The first is the day of Martin Luther King's funeral. I had with thousands and thousands of others from all over this country the sad privilege of being there.

The second is the recent appearance in Detroit of Bishop Tutu. He sometimes has been compared with Dr. King. He is modest and I think realistic enough to say that the comparisons are not quite apt. He is a different kind of speaker. He is a different kind of preacher and also in a different predicament, and therefore perhaps has a somewhat different attitude toward nonviolence.

But those memories, older and more recent, poignantly and piercingly say to me that the struggle for the end of injustice, the struggle for equality is unstoppable, unstoppable. That is what everybody was saying when they came to pay tributes to Dr. King about 18 years ago, and that is what over 2,000 people were saying when they came last Thursday to hear, I think one could say, one of the disciples of Dr. King, though from a different country and in somewhat different garments. Unstoppable.

So the real issue is not whether it will be stopped, but how fast it will move. There is a lot of territory to cover, and we regret so deeply that Dr. King is not here today to help us cover that ground.

Recent statistics tell the story so vividly. I was looking at health statistics, for example, and the gap between white and black infant mortality, greater in 1983, as the gentleman from Texas so well knows in view of his leadership on these issues in the House, greater than in 1940 is the gap between white and black infant mortality. Black infants in America were twice as likely as white infants in 1983 to die in the first year of life.

Then I think about unemployment figures. I was reading a clip from a Detroit newspaper just a couple of weeks ago to somebody who knows the data quite well. But even for that person, the information was startling. Unemployment in Michigan has gone down. But for young people, it is quite high overall. It varies from about 13 to 20 percent. For black teenagers, the unemployment rate varies from 45 to 50 percent in numerous States, close to 50 percent in the State of Michigan.

So I join others today standing here remembering. But also, and I think Dr. King would like this most of all from us, rededicating ourselves. There is much ground to cover, and each of us has a responsibility for one or more steps.

I thank the gentleman for giving us this opportunity.

Mr. LELAND. I thank the gentleman from Michigan.

I yield to the gentlewoman from Louisiana [Mrs. BOGGS].

Mrs. BOGGS. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding. I am very grateful to the gentleman from Texas for taking this time to give us the opportunity of participating with him in this tribute to Dr. Martin Luther King. As has been said here today, the Lord did not make the holiday, the Congress did not make it, but the man himself made it.

I might also add that it was the persistence of a beautiful, intelligent, devoted woman, Coretta Scott King, who helped to make the day possible through the Congress.

Mr. Speaker, yesterday I had the privilege of participating in the New Orleans observance of the Rev. Martin Luther King's birthday at the Superdome Stadium. The day's events commemorating a man who did more than most Americans to change our Nation to make it a better place for all of us to live were most moving.

Recently I reread one of Dr. King's most moving works, the "Letter from Birmingham Jail" a handwritten response to a group of Alabama clergymen who had urged Dr. King to call off his peaceful demonstrations on behalf of racial justice. Instead, they had proposed that the civil rights movement resort to the courts rather than attempting to use civil disobedience. Dr. King wrote from a jail cell because he believed his tactics were just.

In his moving and powerful letter from his jail cell, he predicted that a day such as yesterday would come to pass. He wrote:

> One day the South will know that when these disinherited children of God sat down at lunch counters they were in reality standing up for the best in the American dream and the most sacred values in our Judeo-Christian heritage, and thus were carrying our whole nation back to great wells of democracy which were dug deep by the founding fathers in the formulation of the Constitution and the Declaration of Independence.

As we prepare to embark on the celebration of the bicentennial of this Nation's Constitution in 1987, we do well to remember that it was Dr. King who worked and prayed and died to make the promise of that document a reality for all of our people.

On yesterday, the New Orleans Times-Picayune/States-Item editorialized, Tuesday:

[From New Orleans Times-Picayune/States-Item, Jan. 20, 1986]

MARTIN LUTHER KING'S LEGACY

Few people ever change the history of a nation. Martin Luther King Jr., whose birthday last Wednesday we honor today with a national holiday, was one of the few. Before his murder in 1968, Dr. King awakened the conscience of the nation and advanced the cause of black civil rights—and by extension the rights of all Americans—as few Americans ever did.

The son of a Baptist minister and himself a minister, Dr. King chose India's Mohandas Gandhi as a role model. Like Mr. Gandhi, whose quiet but determined resistance led to India's independence from Britain, Dr. King adopted passive resistance as the most effective means of achieving full civil rights for blacks.

In the process, he and his legions of followers, blacks and whites, reaffirmed for a new generation of Americans the nation's long and honorable tradition of peaceful civil disobedience as an acceptable means of changing our society and our nation's laws.

Dr. King defined the meaning of racial oppression with a rare eloquence. His "I have a dream" speech at the base of the Lincoln Memorial retains the power to stir a nation and summon latter-day champions of civil rights, human dignity and justice before the law.

Before he was martyred in Memphis, Dr. King saw many of his immediate goals accomplished. The Civil Rights Act of 1964, the Voting Rights Act of 1965 and landmark court decisions laid the foundation for a fuller participation by blacks in their nation's political and social life.

Where race-baiting had dominated Southern politics for decades, the Voting Rights Act pried open the process and ensured blacks participation in elective politics. Nowhere has the change wrought by the act been more evident than in the South. Because of it, today black elected and appointed officials are increasing in number throughout the Southern states.

The stultifying, debasing politics of race that robbed both black and white Southerns of the capacity to realize their full potential is increasingly hard to find. That is one of Dr. King's most important legacies. He helped us to see that hatred and bigotry make victims of us all. The oppressor is oppressed, too.

We would not do full honor to Dr. King if we simply recited what has been achieved through his efforts. All who understand the importance of civil rights to what our nation stands for know that Dr. King's cause must go on.

The South is particularly indebted to Dr. King and other courageous civil rights leaders because they helped to show it the error of its ways and opened the way for racial cooperation, harmony and brotherhood. Those are the ideals upon which we must continue to build. They are Dr. King's greatest legacy.

Mr. Speaker, at this point I would like to include with my remarks the program from yesterday's ceremonies at the Louisiana Superdome.

Musical Selection: Community Choir, Dillard University.

Spiritual: "We Shall Overcome" (Led by Deacon John B. Williams).

Benediction: Reverend Kenneth Thompson, New Orleans Federation of Churches.

I should note that the Reverend Jesse Jackson, the principal speaker at our event, recalled that it was in New Orleans that the Southern Christian Leadership Conference was formed as a result of a meeting convened by the late Reverend A.L. Davis, pastor of our city's New Zion Baptist Church. Reverend Jackson felt that the people of New Orleans deserved special recognition, and also should bear even more responsibility than those of other cities to continue Dr. King's legacy.

Despite all of the joy of yesterday's ceremonies throughout the Nation, for all of our people the promise of 1986 is not as bright as it should be. We do well to recall another of Dr. King's thoughts from that Birmingham jail that is as true in 1986 as it was when written in 1963.

We must come to see that human progress never rolls in on wheels of inevitability. It comes through the tireless efforts and persistent work of men (and women) willing to be co-workers with God, and without this hard work time itself becomes an ally of the forces of social stagnation. We must use time creatively, and forever realize that the time is always ripe to do right.

As the archbishop of Washington, James A. Hickey, wrote to his people this week:

This year our nation honors the memory of Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr., by observing his birthday as a national holiday. This long overdue tribute is an opportunity for each of us to renew our commitment to Dr. King's dream of equality, freedom and peace. We have much work to do. Racism, hunger, homelessness and violence continue to haunt our nation and world. This holiday is an important opportunity to recall and act on the Church's teaching concerning racial justice, concern for the poor and the pursuit of peace.

Human life and dignity are undermined when so many of our sisters and brothers are denied their God-given rights and lack a decent life for themselves and their families.

Let us say clearly in word and action that every human life is sacred—no matter how new or how old, no matter what race, color, age, sex, nationality or handicap. Let us begin this new year by reaffirming our commitment to human life and human dignity in every situation and circumstance. Let us together build a more just, compassionate and caring community.

Mr. Speaker, we must all continue to work together, men and women, black and white, old and young, to meet Dr. King's challenge to redeem America's promise of a better world for all. Let each of us rededicate ourselves to that promise. Let each of us work to make that living dream a reality.

Mr. LELAND. I thank the gentlewoman from Louisiana for her contribution.

I yield to the gentleman from Ohio, Mr. LUKEN.

Mr. LUKEN. Mr. Speaker, I join in congratulating the gentleman in the well. In departing a little from the lofty principles and other statements that have been made, I think we might personalize this, if the gentleman in the well does not mind. The gentleman, as is often the case, is acting today as the conscience of the House. But the gentleman in the well acts in another role as a leader here in the House, a recognized leader.

And yet as a black person from the State of Texas, the gentleman, I think, would be one of the first to give credit to Martin Luther King because of his fight for registration and other civil rights. Because of those efforts of Dr. King they have enabled the gentleman in the well to take his rightful place here with the rest of the Members of the House. So I think the gentleman is an embodiment of Dr. King's legacy.

We can say today that we have come a long way, and, as has been said, we have got a longer way to go.

A previous speaker today said today is the day when so many hyprocrites are celebrating Martin Luther King's holiday, and perhaps we should call them converts and welcome them into the fold. I think it is tremendous that so many people have accepted and warmly endorsed and enthusiastically participated in Dr. Martin Luther King's birthday celebration. Personally, I do have one recollection of Martin Luther King, and sometimes I am reminded of it, I might tell the gentleman in the well, at election time during campaigns.

My opponents used to say "he marched in Selma with contempt." At least after today this will become a badge of honor, and we will not have that kind of contempt, I hope. But I did march briefly the first day with Dr. King. As such, I felt the dread, the ridicule, the contemptuous situation of having to be protected from other American citizens by the Army, by Federal troops, who ringed the group who where actually marching. It was a lonely situation when we flew into that Selma airport, and we were in fear, briefly. But I mention this not because we were in fear, which was a very passing thing, not a serious one. But these are conditions under which Dr. King and his followers lived for months and years. So I hope that the civil rights revolution is not dead, that this outpouring of emotion, approbation about Dr. King's holiday, will signal the fact that it is alive and that we will have full employment and affirmative action and that the people who embraced the symbols today will not shrink from the reality of Dr. King's message.

Mr. LELAND. I thank the gentleman for his personal comments.

I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. TRAFICANT. I thank the gentleman from Texas. I want to commend the gentleman, particularly for the job he has done not only in having this special order today but for being an advocate of justice, civil rights, and a Member duly elected here in the Congress and having a "say" in the policies of America. One thing that the great American Dr. King did not ever have, he never had the firm control of being a part of such a body to be able to manifest a program of justice. But he worked hard to set the groundwork for people like Mr. LELAND and many other black Members who serve in our Congress and serve the country today.

I would like to make a few comments about the hypocrisy that exists. I think we had last year 3.3 million more poor children in America. We have now embarked upon policies that start to question the great struggle and the progress made from that struggle. You know, if Dr. King was associated with one thing, there were a lot of people who were afraid of Dr. King because they did not know him. With ignorance comes fear.

Now as America looks back and takes a look at that tremendous American, they found a man not afraid of this Government, and this Government targeted him. Very few people want to mention that, but it took a giant of a man to stand up in the face of some of the most powerful Federal agencies that literally were out and had him targeted. He stood out there, he showed courage, and with the passage of Dr. King I cannot say in all honesty that all white people rallied to Dr. King and his memory, but they respected him. And with that respect, that is the foundation for a future good relationship and for possible love.

I see that happening. So we all have a great task before us. He was not a black man, he was an American. He was fighting for justice for all Americans, all of us. I think that is where this Congress should go and not let this administration turn back the clock, take us back to those days which were so much a part of Dr. King's existence.

So I am just proud to be here, proud to be a part of and to be recognized by the gentleman from Texas, and I hope to God that Congress remembers that because he gave everyone a shot to get elected, and he encouraged them to get elected. So that men like Mr. LELAND and myself even and others, regardless of our color or origin, will take care of that job.

I thank the gentleman.

Mr. LELAND. I thank the gentleman for his participation.

Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentlewoman from Colorado.

Mrs. SCHROEDER. I join with everyone else in thanking the gentleman from Texas for having this special order and really reminding the House how very important yesterday's holiday was. First of all, it has been very historic. It has been a long time since we created a national holiday. And it took a long time for this House to see its wisdom, because the first bill was introduced 4 days after Dr. King's death in 1968. So it was a long, long time in coming.

I also know, having grown up in Texas, that the gentleman in the well certainly did not have equal opportunities when he first started out, because one of my memories of being in grade school in Texas was the fact that I could not go to the park with my black friends except 1 day a year and that was in June.

Other than that, we were shut out. It never made a lot of sense to me. Thank goodness it did not make any sense to Dr. King and he got America to turn around on that.

I represent Denver, CO, which is 1 mile high, so that we always think we do things a little better. Maybe we have higher standards. But I wanted people to know that really Denver, CO, started celebrting Dr. King's birthday on his real birthday, January 15, and it went right up to yesterday with thousands of people marching many, many blocks. It was a phenomenal celebration. And Denver, CO, with a Hispanic mayor, a Congresswoman, a black district attorney, the Governor, everybody participated; it was truly the rainbow coalition. We had Native Americans, we had everybody. It really was what America is about.

I have said so many times over and over in Denver that Dr. King's holiday is an American holiday; it is not a black holiday.

The gentleman in the well knows this because he worked so hard to make it a national holiday. People would say, "If we give you that holiday, then the women will want one, the Hispanics will want one, and the Asians will want one." And I and many others would go up and testify over and over again that that was not true, that we understood Dr. King was an American and that was what it was about. It brought us back and put us on the right course.

As a college student, I participated in many of those marches, and I would say that I went to those marches, and everyone else went to those marches, not as Protestants, Catholics, Jewish, black, female, Asian, white, anything else. We went to those marches as Americans, believing in those principles that we had been taught, the principles that all men are created equal, liberty and justice for all, with never a notation saying, "except for those of color or except those of the other sex or except those of certain religions." It never said that, and yet that is how it was being implemented. So he put us back on course.

So I think it is so important to remember that this is an American holiday. He said the three evils that were lurking were poverty, racism, and war; that they are still lurking. Let us adjust to the holiday, let us go out and finish the agenda; that is what he would want, not just rhetoric but fact. I think it is terrific that people who in Denver, CO, under the Webb family and many others all over the country have had these phenomenal celebrations rededicating themselves, I hope we can now get on to the very major issue which the gentleman in the well is trying to get this body focused on and I have been trying to get this body focused on so that we finally move so that there is equality for all.

I think Dr. King had hoped that once you had desegregation there would be equality. We got desegregation, and we are delighted that that is behind us, but we did not get equality yet and we have got to do that. He was outraged that if you are a black child or a Hispanic child you have got a much higher chance of being poor; you have a much lower chance of getting a job, you have a much, much more difficult job of going to school. That is wrong. So the dream has not been reached yet. There is a lot to do. Let us hope that everybody remembers that in the days to come.

I thank, again, the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. LELAND. I thank the gentlewoman from Colorado.

Mr. Speaker, let me yield at this time to the gentleman from Arkansas, the chief deputy whip, who I know has to go to a meeting.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I thank the gentleman for yielding. I will not be very long. I applaud the gentleman for his leadership.

I stand here today to applaud the leadership of that great and fallen leader, Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. There have been several references today to hypocrisy, and I, too, would make reference to the kind of hypocrisy that Dr. Martin Luther King freed America from, the kind of hypocrisy which found many of our citizens paying lip service to the principles of equality and opportunity, but taking actions which were opposite and separate from these principles.

Dr. King reminded us that our Nation is built upon a foundation of equality, and for that I applaud him.

I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. LELAND. I thank the gentleman from Arkansas for his participation.

Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. SEIBERLING. I thank the gentleman for yielding to me and for taking this time. He has been a champion of the ideals that Dr. King stood for, and I think we are all very grateful to him for that fact. The great thing about Martin Luther King, in my experience, was that he inspired us and challenged us at the same time. He still is inspiring us, he is still challenging us. His words and his life are an inspiration and a challenge to all of us to see that the dream which he spoke of, which was the American dream, is fulfilled.

About 1½ years after Dr. King's death, I was inspired in part by him to run for Congress. I picked his birthday, January 16, 1970, to announce my candidacy for Congress. I put out a press release at that time. Nobody paid much attention to it. But I think it might be very interesting to read at this point, 16 years later. I am now quoting:

> This day is the birthdate of Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. It is fitting that on this day each of us rededicate ourselves to the causes of world peace and justice for all men, for which Dr. King lived and died. In the situation in which we all find ourselves, it will help to recall the following words of Dr. King:
> "Somewhere along the way as a nation we have allowed the means by which we live to outdistance the ends for which we live, and consequently we suffer from a spiritual and moral lag that must be redeemed if we are going to survive and maintain a moral stance. . . . Nothing convinces me more that we suffer this moral and spiritual lag than our participation as a nation in the war in Vietnam.
> "It has made the Great Society a myth and replaced it with the troubled and confused society. The war has strengthened domestic reaction."

And now mark these words because they are very relevant to our situation today: "It has given the extreme right, the antilabor, the anti-Negro, and antihumanist forces a weapon of spurious patriotism to galvanize its supporters into reaching for power right up to the White House." Under President Reagan they finally made it, using the postwar syndrome.

And going on with Dr. King's quote:

> It hopes to use national frustration to take control and restore the America of social insecurity and power for the privileged * * *.

The Kemp-Roth tax cut for the wealthy, the social program cuts that the Reagan program has brought about and which its inevitable consequences, Gramm-Rudman, will make even worse, were foreseen by Dr. King as the inevitable consequence of the policy which our country was drifting in.

And now let us read one more paragraph of Dr. King's statement:

> The war has produced a shameful order of priorities in which the decay, squalor and pollution of the cities are neglected even though seventy percent of our population now live in them. The war has smothered and nearly extinguished the beginnings of progress toward racial justice.

After Dr. King died, of course, the Nation went through a period in which we responded to his warnings and his criticisms and challenges, and during the period of the 1970's considerable progress was made in redressing some of this order of priorities. But that has all changed.

And today we are back in the very same kind of situation that Dr. King described: 8.4 million people were added to the poverty rolls since 1980. Twenty-nine million Americans are living in poverty today, millions of them being children. Many are black, but 61 percent are white. Dr. King's vision is not being fulfilled, and we are all suffering, for we are all brothers as long as any of our brethren are not receiving their fair and just fruits of our society.

I will not go on to read some of the additional comments that I made in the press release, because I do not want to monopolize the time. But I will include some of those additional statements that are relevant, I think, to this very, very fine occasion that the gentleman from Texas has inspired:

> Like Dr. King, many of us have come to realize that America stands at a crossroads in its destiny. Over the past 20 years, the military-industrial complex which President Eisenhower warned us against have become the dominant force in our national policy. In this period the United States has spent over one trillion dollars on military programs. Yet at no time has the Congress ever seriously challenged the military budget until the ABM debate last year. Then the challenge came only in the Senate.
> It no longer requires much imagination to see the kind of country America will become if this continues. However, the fault lies not with the military but with the civilian branch of the Government, especially the Congress, which has abdicated its responsibilities for setting national goals and priorities and has turned to the military for solutions to problems that are essentially political.

Mr. LELAND. I thank the gentleman for his participation and particularly for his personal reflections.

Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from the District of Columbia [Mr. FAUNTROY], a gentleman who was very close to Dr. King and was marching there with him many, many times Dr. King was on the road and who has carried forth that struggle with his participation now in the human rights struggle, the universal human rights struggle, for all of humanity in this world.

Mr. FAUNTROY. I thank the distinguished gentleman from Texas and my colleague as chairman of the Congressional Black Caucus for his kind remarks and also for his wisdom in providing the Members of the Congress an opportunity to do today what millions of Americans did on yesterday.

In tendering my thanks, I want to thank my colleagues in the Congress of the United States for having given the people of our great Nation the opportunity to celebrate as they did yesterday the life and work of the singularly most important man, the most important message, for this, the most violent century, in the history of mankind. That man, of course, was Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. And his message was simply this: Either we learn to live together as brothers on this planet or we will perish together as fools.

I am so pleased that, from now on, etched in the fabric of our history will be the memory and the work of this man whom many believed simply dreamed impossible dreams.

I cannot help but open the floodgates of memory now and travel back through the years to that day in August, a hot afternoon, when, before the likeness of Lincoln, Dr. King intoned those now immortal words:

I have a dream that one day this nation will rise up and live out the true meaning of its creed, "We hold these truths to be self-evident: that all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain inalienable rights, and among these are the right to life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness."

And millions of people, when they heard it, said, "You are dreaming, Dr. King, if you think that is going to become a reality."

He said, "I have a dream that one day on the red clay hills of Georgia the sons of former slaves and the sons of former slave owners will sit down together at the table of brotherhood."

And there were those who said, "You are dreaming."

But Martin Luther King, Jr., will go down in history as a prophet of the 20th century, because he was content not simply to dream impossible dreams, he did not rest until he made those impossible dreams living realities.

I say to my colleague that I cannot ever forget that moment when I sat in the East Room of the White House, on July 2, 1964, with Martin Luther King, Jr., as we watched President Lyndon Johnson sign a piece of paper that said, in effect, "Traffic a man's impossible dream into a living reality."

I have been so pleased with the comments of my colleagues in this special order which punctuated the relevance of Dr. King's dream not just for the decade of the 1960's and the 1970's but for today, because I can tell you that Dr. King died dreaming yet another impossible dream. He dreamed of a world free of the barbarism of war and the decadence of racism and the scourge of poverty. And there were those who told him then, "You are dreaming." Quite frankly, Dr. King did not live long enough to see that Vietnam war come to a much belated end, at much cost to our economy. He did not live long enough to see the truth of his statement as the bombs dropped in Vietnam would explode in the economy of our Nation and bring great misery and despair here. He did not live long enough to see the white backlash that has come to pass today that is causing retreat on the civil rights gains that he led us in achieving. He did not live long enough to be able to support H.R. 700, the Civil Rights Restoration Act.

There are those today who say, "You are dreaming if you think we will ever get nuclear disarmament. You are dreaming if you think we will ever create jobs for the jobless and homes for the homeless and health care for the sick. You are dreaming."

But I am inspired by what my ears have heard here this afternoon and by what my heart felt yesterday as I touched heart with millions of Americans who are determined they are not just going to talk that talk about our great democracy, but they are going to walk the walk, in the spirit of Martin Luther King, Jr.

For that, I want to thank you, Mr. Chairman, I want to thank our colleagues in the Congress, and I want to thank the American people for revering again the singularly most important man with the most important message for this most violent century in the history of mankind, the prince of peace, the 20th-century prophet, Martin Luther King, Jr.

Mr. LELAND. I thank the gentleman, particularly since he probably knew Dr. King better than anybody in this body. His participation here today is of special meaning.

I yield to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CHAPMAN].

Mr. CHAPMAN. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for this recognition.

Mr. Speaker, I am proud to join in the commemoration of the 57th anniversary of the birth of Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr., and in observing the first Martin Luther King Federal holiday. We should not only honor the legacy he has come to symbolize, but we should also make use of the opportunity to stress the importance of how far we have yet to go.

Our Nation's Capital is very much a city of symbols. Here are the Declaration of Independence, the Constitution, the monuments to Washington, the father of our country, Jefferson, who gave it purpose, and Lincoln who saved the Union. It pleases me that in this building is now a monument to Martin Luther King, who fought to assure the benefits of their legacy to all of our Nation's citizens.

The symbolism of Martin Luther King's life would be diminished if he were recalled only as the speaker of the ringing words on the steps of the Lincoln Memorial, when he told the Nation of his dream of justice and compassion for all Americans. Through difficult and dangerous struggle, Martin Luther King did much more than have a dream: He helped force America out of the hobbles of State-enforced segregation, and set our society on the road of true freedom.

Dr. King's legacy in this body is much more than symbolic, its substance and sweep speak volumes of Martin Luther King's influence on our society. The Civil Rights Act of 1964 and the Voting Rights Act of 1965 were important steps along the road that Dr. King helped lead the Nation. His eloquence and ability to express truth in its most basic form enlightened the people of the United States and emboldened the Nation to fulfill the promise of freedom, liberty, and the equal protection of law. At the Supreme Court, Dr. King's legacy includes some of the most stirring decisions that our Government has known, which have made justice a promise to which every American could lay claim.

Dr. Martin Luther King's birthday is a very appropriate time to take measure of America, and I believe we all must agree that the past 25 years have been a time of massive change, and change for the improvement of our land. At the same time, it should be obvious that we have very far to go before justice is truly equal in this Nation. We should take careful note of the creation of a poverty-stricken underclass, of families headed by those whose economic future is questionable at best.

Martin Luther King helped make it possible for all Americans to sit together, to ride together, and to break bread together. It is incumbent on us now, as legislators, to do all we can to build upon the strong foundation of hope, pride, and constructive change that is Dr. King's legacy to create greater social and economic justice in America, to break the cycle of poverty and to put real opportunities within the grasp of all our citizens.

As we reflect today on his memory, let us recall Dr. King as the leader who showed our Nation the road to the mountaintop, and although we have not yet reached its peak, we have climbed high up its path. Rather than look back, let us look forward to all that we can accomplish, working together for a more just, a more fair society that offers opportunity for success to each of America's citizens.

Mr. EDWARDS of California. Mr. Speaker, yesterday, this Nation honored, for the first time in its history, a man who is responsible for much improvement in our American society—Martin Luther King, Jr.

I saw Dr. King twice, the first time at the mammoth rally at the Lincoln Memorial in August 1963. John F. Kennedy was President, to be assassinated in 90 days, and we didn't have enough votes in the Judiciary Committee to approve the omnibus civil rights bill. So those of us in favor of the bill attended the rally.

I remember as we walked from the bus to the platform, through the huge crowd, some sitting on the grass, some standing. They knew who we were and they chanted quietly in unison, "Pass the bill. Pass the bill."

Later that day Dr. King gave his greatest speech, the immortal oration "I have a dream." It had an electrifying effect on us all, and the speech had much to do with our success in enacting the bill early the following year.

The second and last time I saw Dr. King was in 1964, in his cell at the Birmingham jail. I was with two friends from Congress, Phil Burton and GUS HAWKINS. We asked Dr. King if we couldn't help raise the money for bail to get him released.

He thanked us warmly and said no. His being there in that awful city jail was part of the message he had to deliver to the white men in charge of Alabama. It was a part of his war against the evil system of American apartheid.

Martin Luther King was one of America's greatest teachers. Like Gandhi, Buddha, and Jesus, he spent his life teaching his fellow human beings to be better men and women—kinder, more generous, tolerant, and loving.

He refused to hate any person. He would only hate the system of segregation and exploitation. He stressed the fact that his nonviolence was not passive—it was active resistance, directed against the unjust system, not against the persons who are involved in administering the system.

King taught us that no human being is so bad as to be beyond redemption. He saw in every person an amazing potential for goodness. He said we should work for the enlightenment and conversion of our opponents through education and moral example.

In 1985, he was choked and kicked by Montgomery police. His response was to express compassion for them as brothers, as victims of their environment. The system was the enemy, not the individual who had been taught wrong.

If he had been spared the assassin's bullets, what would Martin Luther King be teaching us today, in this era of violence, of terrorism, and of an American Government that spends $1 billion each day preparing for war but will spend only pennies for the homeless, the sick, and the illiterate?

We know how he hated unnecessary wars, and early in 1965 he declared his active opposition to the Vietnam war, describing it as an immoral assault on a small, Third World country by the world's most powerful nation. He was severely criticized by almost everybody, including some civil rights leaders. But he was serene with his conviction that regardless of who won the war, our country would be the loser.

He thought it tragic and immoral that the Government was willing to spend $322,000 for each enemy killed but in the war on poverty only $53 went for each person classified as poor.

If he were here today, I am confident that Dr. King would point out that our national obsession with Russia and communism absorbs the skills and funds desperately needed for education, housing, the poor, and a decent America.

As he demanded negotiations with the Vietnamese, I am sure that he would point out that the Russians and our other adversaries are our brothers, and instead of calling names and arming to the teeth, we must sit down together at the table of brotherhood.

Dr. King is not here, but his words and ideas are as alive and relevant as they were in his lifetime. It is good that we have at least 1 day each year when we can ponder his teachings, tell our young people about the life of this remarkable man and try to move our leaders toward the goals of which Dr. King dreamed.

If we can do this, and let us not say it cannot be done, we can emerge from the bleak and desolate midnight of man's inhumanity to man into the bright and glittering daybreak of freedom and justice.

This will be a great day, not only for America, but for the whole human family.

Mrs. COLLINS. Mr. Speaker, I rise to express great joy in the success of yesterday's national celebration of the birthday of Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. I also rise to express my hope that, in beginning this 2d session of the 99th Congress, my colleagues will try to keep alive the powerful spirit that moved us yesterday as we marched, prayed, and sang in joyous celebration of a great national hero.

We must keep in mind that yesterday we came together to honor more than the birth of a great American. We came together also to reflect on the birth of a great dream; we came together to celebrate the partial fulfillment of that dream; we came together to renew our national commitment to making the dream come true.

After all, it is impossible to celebrate the birth of Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr., without reflecting on all that he represented—and all that he continues to represent.

As one of the original cosponsors of the King holiday legislation, I believe we should continue to be guided by the impressive example we set yesterday as we prepare for future King Day celebrations. This should not just be another day off—reserved simply for shopping and picnics.

We always must celebrate the true meaning of this glorious day—the life, the courage, the contributions of a great national hero; his life's work; the work that still must be done.

The struggle continues.

The struggle continues because there is so much unfinished business of the great civil rights movement which Dr. King led so courageously a generation ago.

America at that time had a split personality. It was the land of freedom, justice, and equality for some and the land of oppression, injustice, and despair for too many others.

Dr. King gave us hope. He led us forward to great victories. And he moved an entire nation in the process. A nation long blind to its own injustice finally began to see. A nation long deaf to the pleas of the dispossessed finally began to hear. A nation long mute on the issue of guaranteeing liberty and justice for all of its citizens finally began to speak. And it began to speak in decisive tones.

We breathed life into the principles of equality. The principles became the law of the land. The Civil Rights Act of 1964 and the Voting Rights Act of 1965 stand as the most impressive examples of success.

Certainly, we live those successes—not just 1 day out of the year, but each and every day throughout the year. It is my hope that we will continue to do so. For, even as we recall great triumphs, even as we commemorate a great life, we must be mindful of the tremendous task before us.

The struggle continues.

When the great victories of the civil rights movement were won we really did live in two Americas—one black, one white.

Today, even though we have removed many of the visible signs of racial discrimination, we still live with the continuing effects of our history of discrimination. Blacks are still disproportionately represented among the Nation's poor, unemployed, and underemployed.

Due, in part to white flight, many of our children still attend segregated public schools in cities around the country.

Black families—even today—face the horrible prospect of being harassed and intimidated when they dare to move into all-white neighborhoods.

The struggle continues.

As a result, this day must serve as a reminder that, even with all our past accomplishments, there is so much more to be accomplished.

Unquestionably, these are difficult challenges, but the spirit of Dr. King's leadership can continue to guide us as we tackle these challenges head on—just as this great body did a generation ago, when it made an impressive forward move.

This historic occasion has provided us with a great opportunity. Let us take this opportunity, here in the afterglow of our great celebration, to renew our commitment to making Dr. King's dream come true.

In so doing we truly will honor Dr. King for all time.

Mr. WHEAT. Mr. Speaker, as we are all aware, yesterday marked the historic, national Federal holiday in honor of Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. I want to commend my colleague from Texas, Mr. LELAND, the chairman of the Congressional Black Caucus, for taking this special order to honor Dr. King.

In America, in the fifties and sixties, the most important crisis our country faced was racial discrimination. It was Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr., who stirred our Nation's conscience during that crisis. It was his words and deeds that forced Americans to see that true justice must be colorblind. It was his relentless struggle that demonstrated to the Nation that all Americans, regardless of race, creed, or color, must join together in the pursuit of equality.

Through organized boycotts and nonviolent demonstrations across the country, Dr. King sought to change America and show Americans the injustice of a segregated society. Often he was beaten and imprisoned. In fact, it was from a Birmingham jail that he wrote one of his most often-quoted statements: "Injustice anywhere is a threat to justice everywhere." The principle expressed in that sentence capsulizes the message of this courageous man.

Despite pressures from both supporters and opponents, Dr. King never stopped teaching nonviolence. He often told his followers, "Work with the faith that unearned suffering is redemptive." For his adherence to the principles of nonviolence and for setting an example for others who sought to peacefully change the world, Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr., became the youngest recipient of the Nobel Peace Prize in 1964.

Four year later, Dr. King was gunned down by a brutal assassin, his life cut short at the age of 39. In his tragically short life, Dr. King had made America a better Nation and he had changed our country forever. His famous "I Have a Dream" speech delivered during the March on Washington in 1963 galvanized support for passage of the historic Civil Rights Act of 1964. It was that law that guaranteed all Americans equal use of public accommodations, equal access to programs financed by Federal funds, and the right to compete for employment on the sole basis of individual merit.

But more important, there was not just a change of law; there was a change of heart. Dr. King's actions had heralded a new spirit in our Nation. Across our Nation, people had begun to treat each other not as blacks and whites, but as fellow Americans.

Today, we are a more democratic Nation, a more just Nation, because Dr. King relentlessly pursued his dream of equality for all. He challenged us to work toward equality and his legacy continues to challenge us. As we celebrate this holiday in the future, we must renew and rededicate ourselves to carrying on his dream of freedom, justice, and opportunity for all.

Mr. TOWNS. Mr. Speaker, in the prophetic tradition of all great statesmen, Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr., reminded us that "the goal of America is freedom." His words, some 20 years later, still ring with an insight which has not been equaled by any other American. For he alone understood that America could not fulfill her creed of "justice and liberty for all" as long as one group of Americans suffered under the unjust laws of racial segregation.

Dr. King had a profound understanding that "freedom is never voluntarily given by the oppressor, it must be demanded by the oppressed." Today, many Americans still yearn for that promise of freedom. While the "for whites only" signs of legal segregation have been removed; while Birmingham is no longer ruled by a segregationist sheriff, but a duly elected black mayor; while the "Heart of the Confederacy," Virginia, now has a black Lieutenant Governor, many minority Americans still face that threat of racially-motivated violence. Whether it is the lynching of a young black man in Mobile, AL; the beating death of an Asian youth in Detroit; or the harassment of blacks in the white neighborhoods of southwest Philadelphia, racism still remains an ugly blot on our society. While public discussions of racism often make us uncomfortable, we cannot hope to realize Dr. King's dream: That all men are indeed created equal, unless we acknowledge that inequality is still a major issue in American society today.

The current attitude of our national Government is directed toward reducing deficits rather than improving the lives of disenfranchised Americans. The Gramm-Rudman budget proposals, enacted in December, will seriously undermine the remaining Federal social programs which serve the poor and disadvantaged. Can we hope for a truly integrated society with a permanent underclass which seems to grow by the thousands each year? The streets of our major cities have become dumping grounds for the mentally ill, the jobless and the generally forgotten American. While expanding constitutional protections to minority Americans was Dr. King's main focus, he also recognized the necessity for economic justice as evidenced by his call for the poor people's campaign in 1968.

At that time he said, "We will place the problems of the poor at the seat of Government of the wealthiest Nation in the history of mankind." He announced that "if that power refuses to acknowledge its debt to the poor, it will have failed to live up to its promise to insure 'life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness' to its citizens."

Dr. King's vision for a unified America was also not limited to resolving the social problems of America. He saw a need for us to be concerned for "the misery of the poor" in Africa, Asia, Latin America, and the Caribbean. America must cast its lot with the people of these countries rather than blindly supporting "friendly" governments regardless of their repressive human rights policies.

Our survival, said King, "is dependent upon man's ability to solve the problems of racial injustice, poverty, and war." The problems are still major concerns for America and the world. Unless we act to ameliorate them we will be guility of abandoning the King legacy. As we commemorate his achievements today, let us work for his dream "that in some not too distant tomorrow the radiant stars of love and brotherhood will shine over our great Nation with all of their scintillating beauty."

Mr. BRYANT. Mr. Speaker, this year, we for the first time celebrated as a national holiday the birthday of one of America's greatest citizens, the Reverend Martin Luther King, Jr.

And yesterday, January 20—the first observance of this time set aside by the Congress for all Americans to reflect upon the principles of racial equality and nonviolent social change espoused by Martin Luther King, Jr.—was the occasion for a joyous celebration.

Across the Nation and throughout the world—for Martin Luther King's contributions to peace, justice, and equality extend beyond geographic borders—this was a day in which people did put aside all that separates us to focus on all that binds us as a community and as human beings. As Dr. King taught, "We cannot walk alone."

This was a day—a day that will be repeated in the years that follow—on which we committed ourselves to keeping alive Martin Luther King's dream of peace, justice, and freedom for all people.

This was a day in which people of all colors, all religions, all backgrounds, took to the streets of our Nation not in protest, but in loving thanksgiving—not in anger, but in hope.

This was a day shaped in the image of the life Martin Luther King, Jr., dedicated to his fellow human beings and our common struggle for dignity, liberty, and peace.

This was a day most eloquently described by some of its participants:

The little pigtailed girl who said, "He led us free."

The youngster who said, "I feel I could some day be President of the United States because of what Martin Luther King did."

The elderly lady who said, "He made us free to hope."

Now—finally—America lives the dream of Martin Luther King, Jr., and we strive to share it with the world.

Mr. DYSON. Mr. Speaker, for the past several days, the people of our Nation have joined together to honor the memory of an American hero and patriot—Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. From across the land, people of all races and religions have taken the time to reflect upon the enduring legacy of this compassionate, committed, and courageous man.

And while words alone are inadequate to impart a sense of what Dr. King's life has meant, I believe it is altogether fitting that we come here today to rededicate ourselves to the principles he held so dear, and struggled so selflessly to nurture. Dr. King had faith in the basic goodness of the American people. He challenged us all to square our conduct with our conscience; to practice the principles that we preach; to be true to the abiding values that distinguish our democracy.

This was Martin Luther King's dream. An America generous in spirit. An America that championed the cause of justice and equality. An America that fought against bigotry in the name of brotherhood. He would accept no less from a people whose experiment in representative government was a beacon of light and hope for so much of the world. He demanded that we do what was right.

Dr. King was a man of peace, who taught us that the power of conviction and the force of righteousness are more persuasive, and more productive, than the threat or act of violence. Yet he held no illusions. He knew that freedom was never free. He knew that before the dawn of day would come the darkness of despair. And he knew only too well his own destiny, yet he accepted it without fear.

Dr. King was wont to say that anything truly worth living for is worth dying for. He stood his ground. But he would not stand idly by in the face of injustice. He saw the scourge of segregation, so he struggled for our common humanity. He saw the bane of prejudice, so he preached love and understanding. Whether it concerned access to a chair in a classroom or the lever in a voting booth or a drink from a water fountain—his was a larger purpose.

While we have come a long way, much remains to be done. We are a prosperous people, yet there are those among us who live in poverty. We are a freedom loving people, yet there are those who dare not go outside. Ours is a land of opportunity, yet there are those who know no hope.

So on this occasion each year, let us and the generations to follow remember this man who did so much to open our hearts and our minds. Let us do justice to the cause of Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr.—a man whose vision of a better tomorrow stirred the conscience of a Nation.

Mr. KASTENMEIER. Mr. Speaker, January 20, 1986, marked the first official observance of the birthday of Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. Dr. King would have been 57 years old on January 15, still a relatively young man. Instead, a vital life, the life of a peacemaker and messenger of nonviolence, was snuffed out 18 years ago, depriving not just the United States, but the world of a voice of love and hope. I recall attending his funeral in Atlanta and not only reflecting on the enormous tragedy, but also feeling a great sense of loss.

The act of Congress which established the holiday states: "The holiday should serve as a time for Americans to reflect on the principles of racial equality and nonviolent social change espoused by Martin Luther King, Jr." Dr. King was the most important instrument for raising the conscience of America to the gross inequities that existed in this country in the 1950's and 1960's. Through his unflagging efforts, his personal sacrifice, and his total commitment to the principles of justice and nonviolence, Dr. King forced on this country an awareness that change must come if we are to be true to those things that lie at the heart of the democracy we herald around the world.

Although we have moved closer to Dr. King's ideal, the journey is far from complete, and in some ways we seem to be retreating. As we see an administration attempting to weaken affirmative action efforts, granting tax exemptions to schools with racist admissions policies, opposing legislation designed to affirm the intent of the key civil rights laws of the land, and issuing statements proclaiming that the need for Federal initiatives in civil rights enforcement is no longer necessary, we understand the need to remain vigilant and aggressive in our continuing pursuit of justice and equality.

During the later years of Dr. King's efforts he began to realize that a deep relationship exists between economics and poverty and justice. He came to understand that racism was also function of national fiscal priorities. This is the point at which he sought to bring about what he called "a revolution of values."

He became involved in the effort to get this country out of the war in Vietnam. He accurately noted that "the Great Society has been shot down on the battlefields of Vietnam." He sought to create a national movement—a coalition of poverty and pacifism—dedicated to stopping a war that was draining our economic and moral strength. His voice was silenced before that movement got fully off the ground.

Today we are seeing in stark terms the meaning of the relationship between economics and poverty, between economics and justice. As social programs designed to meet the needs of the most disadvantaged of our citizens are starved to reduce a deficit caused by a bloated military budget and an ill-advised tax cut, we must wonder whether our Nation would have fallen into this abyss had we had Dr. King's voice of conscience to remind us of our obligations to humanity.

Dr. King wanted justice and peace for the United States and for the world. He said that "True peace is not merely the absence of tension; it is the presence of justice."

Today, this means we must continue our efforts to eradicate poverty in this country and hunger in the world. We must persist in doing whatever we can to work for freedom for the oppressed people of South Africa. We must be ever vigilant in working for civil rights here at home and for human rights throughout the world. And, finally, we must work for world peace. For, in these ways, we truly honor Martin Luther King, Jr.

Mr. YATRON. Mr. Speaker, opposition to racial segregation in this century was raised to new levels with the arrest of Rosa Parks on December 1, 1955. The Montgomery bus boycott which followed marked the beginning of the Reverend Martin Luther King, Jr.'s, courageous pursuit of social change and justice.

Martin Luther King's father and grandfather, also Baptist ministers, had in their own lives been involved in the struggle for social equality. Indeed, King was the scion of a family whose idealism and sense of justice had made a lasting imprint on the social fabric of at least one Southern city. The commitment he made and the dedication he promised the civil rights movement were thus in keeping with a firmly rooted family tradition.

After completing his college education and theological training, Reverend King earned a Ph.D. from Boston University. Along with Christian doctrine, the focus of his intellectual study was the social theories and works of Thoreau, Rauschenbush, Gandhi, Niebuhr, and Buber. Dr. King's spiritual and intellectual development led to the formulation of a personal philosophy ascribing to nonviolent social change. He maintained an abiding commitment to peaceful, but unremitting, confrontation with social injustice and racial discrimination.

By 1968, America had progressed. Dr. King's years of work helped bring about the abolition of segregation and other kinds of systemic discrimination. Yet, for some time, King's life was in danger and the fact that he died by an assassin's hand was a tragic, horrible reflection of how wide the chasm of injustice really was in America society. With Dr. King's death, the civil rights movement lost a leader of profound insight and we all lost one of the most powerful human forces for equality and social justice.

The Nation mourned and to this day feels the loss of Dr. King's moral leadership. Seeing so clearly what greater strides he could have made for America is a recurring image and a grief that will always be known.

Official national recognition of Dr. King's achievement is beginning at long last. Eighteen years after his assassination, we are finally giving the honor due his memory and the inspiration he gave to the social and moral goals of a nation. Our appreciation and our abiding respect will be seen in the celebration of a national holiday and in the permanent placement in the U.S. Capitol of a statue in his image. From this day forth, in the month of January, America will officially remember the accomplishments of the Reverend Martin Luther King, Jr. who led a movement for peace, justice, and human understanding and who, in so doing, helped our Nation, and civilization itself, grow a measure closer to the just society of all our dreams.

Mr. LEVINE of California. Mr. Speaker, yesterday we recognized for the first time Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr.'s, birthday as a national holiday. In addition to commemorating Dr. King's remarkable life and career, let us dedicate ourselves to his dream—a world in which tolerance, charity, and brotherhood may prevail.

Although Dr. King's life was cut short, his struggle for defending the basic rights and liberties of man altered the course of this Nation forever. It was only two decades ago that America denied millions of blacks the equal use of public accommodations, equal access to federally supported programs, and the right to vote. Dr. King understood that black Americans had waited far too long to enjoy civil rights which had been promised to them more than a century ago.

From a Birmingham jail he wrote "We know through painful experience that freedom in never voluntarily given by the oppressor; it must be demanded by the oppressed." And from the Lincoln Memorial Dr. King proclaimed: "I have a dream that my four little children will one day live in a nation where they will not be judged by the color of their skin but by the content of their character."

Rather than let impatience give way to violence, Dr. King became the leader of the nonviolent civil rights movement. His work in the Montgomery bus boycott led to the elimination of segregated bus seating in that city. His guidance of the Freedom Rider campaign led to unprecedented enforcement of desegregation on our Nation's buses. Under King's direction, the Southern Christian Leadership Council coordinated a massively successful sit in movement that resulted in the desegregation of lunch counters in 27 Southern cities. His many years of nonviolent protest helped make possible passage of both the 1964 Civil Rights Act and the Voting Rights Act of the following years.

I think that those of us in my generation believe that we have a special tie and perhaps an even more persuasive link to Martin Luther King, Jr., because he so profoundly influenced so many of our own lives and the life of our Nation when we were young. We were part of the famous "sixties generation" and much of our inspiration came from Dr. King. He gave his life in an effort to realize a dream that all men—and all women—are, in fact, created equal.

Many of us have often wondered how different and better our world would be today if Martin Luther King, Jr., were still alive. But it is a better world and we are a better nation because he lived.

He represented the best in man. His eloquence, his courage, his dignity, and his personal example reminded us of the finest American ideals. I am proud to have cosponsored the legislation to make his birthday the national holiday it is.

Last week, on the anniversary of Dr. King's actual birth date, I witnessed in a very simple but eloquent fashion how some of this translates in today's new generation, a generation that he was deprived of seeing. When my son's teacher asked his class why America was celebrating Martin Luther King's birthday, a young black girl raised her hand and said that her mother had told her that because Martin Luther King had lived, she could grow up to do anything she wanted.

The legacy he left for our children is one of a world with less prejudice and less discrimination and less hate, even with all the work that remains to be done.

Dr. King's civil rights crusade demonstrated that even the most humiliating and oppressive forms of discrimination could not rob a man of his pride and dignity. King himself personified the moral credo to which he subscribed: "One has not only a legal but a moral responsibility to obey just laws. Conversely, one has a moral responsibility to disobey unjust laws."

Moreover, Dr. King was a shining example of a man who used moral means to attain moral ends. His profound eloquence and his peaceful protests were his most powerful weapons. His all-encompassing moral vision enabled him to focus on a number of pressing issues. His decision to denounce the war in Vietnam and call instead for a war on poverty at home drew much harsh criticism. For Dr. King, however, the pursuit of justice knew neither geographical nor political bounds. He taught us that not acting in the face of injustice is as contemptible as perpetrating injustice itself.

We celebrate Dr. King's life to remind ourselves that his fight, our fight, is not over. We have much to do to alleviate the fact that there are more people living in poverty today than ever before. We cannot ignore the fact that ongoing forms of job discrimination have contributed to the disproportionately high unemployment rate among blacks and inequitable salaries for women. We must not sit idle while the South African system of apartheid denies the black majority in that country its fundamental economic, social, and political rights.

In the memory of Martin Luther King let us not forget that if freedom and equality should ring for any of us, it must ring for all of us. He dreamed and worked for no less.

Mr. TRAFICANT. Mr. Speaker, I am honored today to join in this special order in honor of Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. Yesterday, the Nation celebrated the first national holiday honoring Dr. King and his invaluable contributions to the growth and development of this great Nation. His immense accomplishments will stand throughout history, and he will always be remembered as a man of peace, love, and great faith.

Dr. King dedicated his life to the principles of freedom, justice, and equality for all Americans. He had the courage to face unbearable hardships and stand up to the challenge that lesser men would not have taken. Dr. King had a dream and as we stand here today in Congress and see the enormous progress that has been made in civil rights since his tragic death over 17 years ago, it is evident that Dr. King's dream has inspired us to throw away the shackles of prejudice and hate, and march on to make a better and more just future.

At a time when America was experiencing great troubles and it would have been easy to advocate a path of violence, Dr. King stood fast and preached peace and love over hatred and violence. He established a legacy of peaceful change that laid the groundwork and made possible all of the progress the civil rights movement has made since 1968. Dr. King never shirked his responsibilities and he maintained a fervent commitment to achieve freedom, respect, and equality for his people. His efforts and the enormous challenges he faced made our Nation stronger and it enhanced all of our lives. Dr. King uncovered to all Americans the ugly face of prejudice and inequality and he challenged all Americans to respect and adhere to the tenets laid down by our Founding Fathers.

Change does not happen overnight, but through the efforts and sacrifices of Dr. King, our children can live in a better world, and they can build upon the groundwork laid by Dr. King and fulfill his dream.

Mr. Speaker, as we gather here today to honor Dr. King and the truly great accomplishments of the Nobel Peace Laureate, let us also remember his message and that we must constantly respect the vital importance of civil rights for all Americans and not take for granted the freedoms we now enjoy. We must reaffirm our commitment to the ideals preached by Dr. King and work to ensure that those ideals are upheld and built upon. Nowhere is that task more important than here in this body.

Let us also remember the circumstances that brought Dr. King to Memphis, TN, that fateful month of April 1968. Dr. King went to Memphis to help settle a sanitation workers' strike that had dragged on for months and had undertaken serious racial overtones. The ugly specter of violence threatened to rear its head. Dr. King, despite a busy schedule and against the advice of many of his advisers, went to Memphis to try and settle the strike. His efforts brought an end to the affair, but before Dr. King could leave Memphis and continue on in the struggle for civil rights, he was struck down by an assassin's bullet.

Seventeen years later, we still mourn our loss. America needs leaders like Dr. King and we were fortunate that Dr. King was there to guide this Nation during difficult and trying times. Dr. King, perhaps more than any American, contributed to pushing this Nation to live up to the ideals under which it was formed. Dr. King's life and his work embodied the very soul of America: Freedom, justice, peace, love, and equality. A national holiday honoring Dr. King is a beautiful way to celebrate his message and his many accomplishments. Let us take this day to reflect upon where our country has been, where it is today, and where we can take it in the future. Let us use the awesome message of Dr. King to spur us on to a better future and fulfill our potential as a nation.

Mr. WEISS. Mr. Speaker, I want to commend our distinguished colleague from Texas [Mr. LELAND] for requesting this special order. I am honored to be participating in this special order to commemorate the 57th anniversary of Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr.'s birth. By any account, Reverend King was one of the most remarkable men of our era, and the story of his brilliant life known to many of us. Born in Atlanta, GA, King's father, grandfather, and great-grandfather were all pastors who had used the pulpit and the church to fight for the rights of blacks in Atlanta. When he was 19, the age at which most young people are just beginning college, Martin Luther King, Jr., had already received a bachelor's degree in sociology from Morehouse College, and was a fully ordained minister. By the time he was 26, he had received his Ph.D. from Boston University's School of Theology, and had turned down several offers to teach in order to accept the pastorship of the Dexter Avenue Baptist Church in Montgomery, AL.

Dr. King was catapulted into the national spotlight in 1956, during the now-historic Montgomery bus protest, the action that marked the beginning of the modern civil rights movement. In 1964, at the age of 35, Martin Luther King, Jr., became the youngest person to ever win the Nobel Peace Prize. In 1968, not even 40 years old but recognized as a world leader, Dr. King was assassinated.

Today is a day to remember the many victorious battles that Dr. King led and inspired: The Montgomery bus boycotts and the freedom riders; the desegregation of schools and public accommodations; the battle for voting rights; and the fight for equal employment opportunities. Yet Dr. King did more than lead one of the greatest social movements in American history. He also taught a whole generation of people, in the United States and around the globe, that hope could spring from despair, that anger need not lead to violence, and that with dignity and determination, the powerless could challenge the powerful, and win. He taught how important morality can be in politics, and how love can sometimes overcome hatred.

In our battles today against apartheid in South Africa, we draw inspiration from his words, when he said, "Injustice anywhere is a threat to justice everywhere." In our struggle to maintain and expand affirmative action and programs to help the poor, we gather strength from his vision that, "we are caught in an inescapable network of mutuality tied in a single garment of destiny."

It is altogether fitting that beginning this year, America has a national holiday to contemplate the many lessons of Martin Luther King, Jr.'s life. Yet we must not forget the determination of Dr. King's adversaries, some of whom today try to cloak themselves in his legacy, while rejecting everything he stood for. Martin Luther King, Jr. faced enormous opposition during his own lifetime. He and his family constantly received death threats. He was physically beaten, and several times thrown in jail. For 6 years, the FBI harassed and tried to discredit him, in spite of the fact that they had no legal authority to do so. During a congressional investigation in 1975, the FBI admitted to having sent Dr. King an anonymous threatening letter in an effort to induce him to commit suicide. The FBI also revealed that it had tried to prevent Dr. King from receiving honorary degrees from colleges, and that it had tried to prevent him from accepting the Nobel Peace Prize and from meeting the Pope. Efforts were also made to shut off financial support for his organization.

Just as we draw lessons from Dr. King's many victories, so we must draw lessons from the ferocious opposition he faced. His opponents had many advantages: They were well-financed and well-organized; they were defending the status quo, which is always easier than fighting for change; and they controlled the State and local governments, and in some cases, the Federal Government. Yet they faced a man and a movement with an unshakable commitment to justice, equality, and freedom, and they were defeated.

The civil rights movement today faces challenges undreamt of 20 years ago. In some areas, progress has been made in chipping away against the walls of injustice and inequality. In other areas, we find these are dark, difficult times, as we confront an administration bent on reversing the progress of the last two decades. Let us draw strength today from Martin Luther King's strength, from his compassion, from his relentless dedication to justice for all people of this world. As he said on that August afternoon in 1963 from the steps of the Lincoln Memorial in Washington, DC, before a crowd of 250,000:

We cannot turn back. There are those who are asking the devotees of civil rights, 'When will you be satisfied?' We can never be satisfied as long as the Negro is the victim of the unspeakable horrors of police brutality. . . . We cannot be satisfied as long as the Negro's basic mobility is from a smaller ghetto to a larger one. We can never be satisfied as long as a Negro in Mississippi cannot vote and a Negro in New York believes he has nothing for which to vote. No, no, we are not satisfied, and we will not be satisfied until justice rolls down like waters and righteousness like a mighty stream.

Mr. COYNE. Mr. Speaker, yesterday marked another historic step in the continuing struggle for civil rights. It was the first national holiday commemorating the birthday of America's premiere civil rights activist, Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr.

Born January 15, 1929, in Atlanta, GA, King became the leading spokesman for the movement after supporting Rosa Parks in her refusal to give up her bus seat to a white passanger in Montgomery, AL. Reverend King, along with his father, established an effective boycott of the Montgomery bus system which succeeded in eliminating not only the division of black and white passengers on public transportation but also made the first crack in an overwhelming, prevailing barrier of discrimination which existed in this country up until the early 1960's.

It took years to mark this day as a national holiday just as it took years to bring this Nation to the present state of imperfect equality it has achieved. The job is far from over! At best a tainted justice exists. A long road of commitment lies ahead of us if we are ever to reach "the dream" of which Dr. King spoke so eloquently. It is the spirit of Martin Luther King's message, a message of justice and equality through peaceful and nonviolent means, which we must nurture if we are to redress the continued injustice which exists in this Nation and throughout the world.

It is to the credit of this man that he appealed to his Nation's conscience and it is to the credit of this Nation that it responded to his call. America must continue to set an example of what can be accomplished when a country's conscience is awakened to a spirit of change. As our country continues to respond to this call for change we must challenge other nations to join us in shattering once and for all the remaining walls of intolerance and bigotry. It is not enough to reap the benefits of the King legacy. We must remain firm in our call for an end to apartheid in South Africa; we must remain firm in our commitment to affirmative action; we must remain firm in our support of vital job training and educational programs which help the poor and ethnic minorities of our Nation.

Above all this new national holiday should serve as an annual reminder and time for reassessment as to where we are and how much more there is to achieve in our journey toward a truly free and equal world.

Mr. MARTINEZ. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to join my colleagues today in honoring Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. Dr. King dedicated his life to the causes of civil rights and economic justice for all Americans and peace for all the world's peoples. The new national holiday that we celebrated for the first time yesterday is a fitting tribute to this great American.

Martin Luther King, Jr. was a man whose eloquence was legendary, whose courage was unquestioned, and whose impact on our Nation was profound and enduring. Without the efforts and sacrifices of the civil rights movement that Dr. King led so ably in the 1950's and 1960's, it is doubtful that this Congress would have passed the landmark Voting Rights and Civil Rights Acts that have done so much to promote political and social equality and economic opportunity in America.

These steps toward equality and opportunity have not, of course, achieved all of Dr. King's noble aspirations. Discrimination still exists in America, as do social and economic injustices. But we have made great progress since Dr. King delivered his unforgettable "I have a dream" speech in 1963. And, it is also important to remember that the civil rights movement that Martin Luther King, Jr. led helped inspire other movements for equality as well. The movements for Hispanic civil rights and for women's rights certainly did not merely mimic the black civil rights movement. But many of those who have played a vital role in these efforts also fought alongside Dr. King or were inspired by him.

Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. was a great American. The example of his life must continue to guide us in the years ahead.

Mr. MAZZOLI. Mr. Speaker, as a long-time cosponsor of legislation establishing a national holiday to honor Dr. Martin Luther King, I am particularly proud to join in this special order to commemorate him.

The celebration of the birth of Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr., as a Federal holiday, marks an important point in the evolution of our country. As a nation founded on the principles of freedom and equality, we now pay tribute to one of our great leaders, who not only altered the fate of American blacks, but America in general, and the world as a whole.

We as a nation continue to grow and develop, having removed many of the barriers that once hindered us. However, we must accept the individual responsibility of assuring the continuance of social justice and fraternity, as Dr. King said: "We must learn to live together as brothers or we shall all perish together as fools."

At this time we should look back, we should look forward, and we should look all around us. We must never forget. Ever reminded that "injustice anywhere is a threat to justice everywhere." In our "fast-paced" society we often overlook important human concerns. They become overshadowed by the more dramatic and immediate issues. Regrettably, we forget those who have gone before, and sacrificed so much for our country and its people.

Dr. King is a man we must not forget, whose indomitable spirit and insight helped shape and mold this country into a nation that lived up to its basic tenets, that all persons are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain inalienable rights, that among these are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness.

Yes, we still have a way to go, but just look how far we have come. Martin Luther King once said, "If you can't fly, run, if you can't run, walk. If you can't walk, crawl. But by all means, keep on moving."

So let's keep moving America. This long-awaited recognition of Dr. King's birthday is not an end, but a means to an end—toward a society in which all men are treated equally and measured solely "by the content of their character."

Mr. CROCKETT. Mr. Speaker and my colleagues, I am honored today to join with my colleagues in marking the first national celebration of the birthday of Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr., one of America's most courageous fighters for civil rights for all Americans.

I want to also publicly thank my colleague JOHN CONYERS, whose leadership and inspiration kept this legislation alive before Congress until the majority of our colleagues finally saw the light and ratified it 2 years ago. Although he is receiving far less than his share of credit for this observance, JOHN CONYERS deserves our thanks and praise for his efforts to make the King birthday a national event.

It is altogether fitting that this body honors Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr., since his cause was our cause—the protection and strengthening of national commitment to justice and equality for all our citizens.

If we in this body are to add meaning to the national tribute to Dr. King, however, we must reflect in our legislative actions his full range of concerns, his caring and his love for his fellowman. We must continue his effort to bring out the best in America, and to eliminate the hunger, poverty, violence, and racism here at home and throughout the world community.

The best in America fights for the well-being of all its citizens, assuring food for the hungry, shelter for the homeless, and employment for the willing and able; the best in America upholds those human and civil rights for which Dr. King fought, and strongly defends against any encroachment or return to the assorted bigotries of the past.

The best in America calls upon us to lead the effort to end the madness of the nuclear arms race; to be an agent for peace and stability in Central America; to speak out unequivocally for a meaningful dialog among all sides in the search for peace in the Middle East, and to make clear that no one is really free in this world so long as 23 million black South Africans are denied the right to govern their lives.

The many honors marking the first Federal holiday for Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. have rightly emphasized the urgency of continuing to make his dream a reality. To achieve this we can, and indeed we must, be the catalyst for continuing to achieve the very best in ourselves and our society.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Speaker, today we are gathered to honor Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr., a man who has stirred the soul of our country with a dream of peace, justice, and the recognition that all people are created equal. I am pleased to have the opportunity to participate in this special order honoring Dr. King for both his achievements and the courage he showed in moving us closer to the fulfillment of his dream of a better world for all.

As you know, Dr. King spent the early part of his life studying theology and religion. During his long years as a leader of the civil rights movement, he never lost sight of the religious values which inspired him so deeply. Dr. King was a man who understood the value of patience, hard work, perseverance, and faith. There are few among us who are willing to make these sacrifices today, as we seek to change society overnight.

Faith is simple when times are easy, but Dr. King chose the hard route during difficult times. Beginning in 1954, Dr. King's life took a new path when he joined the NAACP and put his faith and commitment to the test. By 1955, he had become a leader in the civil rights struggle. Urging blacks to organize and participate in peaceful, nonviolent demonstrations, Dr. King placed himself at the forefront of the movement, while at the same time making himself vulnerable to those who resisted the changes he sought to bring to society.

Through boycotts, sit-ins, marches, and scores of nonviolent demonstrations which formed the heart of the civil rights movement, Dr. King's faith remained strong, never giving sway to the forces trying to bend it. Dr. King's faith and commitment resulted in a fundamental change in society and the laws which govern it. Among other things, his efforts led to the enactment of the 1964 civil rights bill.

Until his death in 1968, Dr. King continued to work to organize people and to instill in them the values that were the inspiration for his dream of creating a better world. Although Dr. King is no longer with us, his dream lives on in all of us.

Mr. Speaker, I know that I do not stand alone when I speak of the greatness of this man and of his contributions. We, as individuals and as a nation, will always feel a place in our hearts for Dr. King and take great joy in celebrating his birthday.

Mr. TALLON. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor the life of Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr., and the dream for which he died. At certain brief and isolated moments, history is seized by the energy and vision of a single man. The life of Martin Luther King was such a moment. Dr. King infused us with the dream of freedom, equality, justice and peace for our Nation and the world. He touched each of us with this dream and then showed us how to bring that dream alive. This legacy remains a constant source of inspiration and responsibility.

In honoring Martin Luther King, let us reflect on our place in his march for freedom and justice. We have a moral obligation to realistically examine how faithfully and how far we have carried "the dream." This reassessment is the first step in what Dr. King called his nonviolent campaign for justice. King noted four basic steps in his campaign: First, collection of the facts to determine whether injustices are alive; second, negotiation; third, self-purification; and fourth, direct action.

I believe we have a responsibility to continue Dr. King's campaign for nonviolent social change. A collection of the facts clearly indicates that domestic and foreign policy violations of civil rights, equality, justice remain prevalent in our domestic and our foreign policy. Certainly, blacks have made significant political, economic, and educational gains. Yet still, minorities in this country are still not given the educational and economic opportunities that are available to their white counterparts. There are heartwrenching examples of inequality and injustice all around us. Unemployment for blacks stands at 15 percent. Nearly half our black children are born into poverty. The median family income for black families is $15,432 compared with $27,686 for white families. Vestiges of prejudice are still prevalent in some of our social, political, and economic institutions.

Injustice and inequality remain a part of our foreign policy as well. In South Africa today there are millions of blacks who struggle and long for freedom and equality. This struggle parallels that of black Americans just 30 years ago. We have a responsibility to support and assist them in this struggle.

Negotiation is the second stage. Negotiation is different from concession or regression. Rather, it requires careful consideration and compromise as we work to promote freedom and equality for the disenfranchised. This is perhaps the most difficult stage, demanding tenacity, foresight and cooperation. As Dr. King observed, the negotiator is often confronted with "blasted hopes, and the dark shadow of deep disappointment."

A time of reflection and recommitment is important in this long difficult struggle for freedom. The Martin Luther King holiday provided us such time. The stage that Dr. King termed self-purification is a period for introspection and self-examination. This stage allows us to regain courage to confront the reality of injustice and the will to work for peaceful change. Dr. King provides us with the inspiration to recommit. We can gain strength from his unflinching determination to overcome racism and promote equality.

The final stage is that of direct action. "Nonviolent direct action seeks to create such creative tension that a community that has constantly refused to negotiate is forced to confront the issue," said Dr. King. Neglect of civil rights in America is something that we had to confront during King's lifetime and it is something that we must confront now. The issue and threat is as real now as it was then. For, as Dr. King observed, "injustice anywhere is a threat to justice everywhere." I am frightened by a complacency and a dullness that seems to have settled across America. Now, more than ever, we must heed Dr. King's advice that "we must use time creatively, and forever realize that the time is always ripe to do right. Now is the time to make real the promise of democracy, and transform our pending national elegy into a creative psalm of brotherhood."

In conclusion, I would like to share with you a few remarks from the Reverend Boesak. "I am convinced that there is another America. An America that remembers its own struggle, that cherishes its freedom and dignity, that therefore understands the aspirations of an unfree people. An America that lives up to the ideals of injustice and equality so jealously guarded by your constitution and so preciously held in the hearts of your people." It is this America that Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. envisioned. Let us gather the courage, integrity and commitment to make his dream a reality for all Americans.

Mr. RODINO. Mr. Speaker, I take this opportunity to commend Representative MICKEY LELAND, chairman of the Congressional Black Caucus, for taking the special order to honor a great American, Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr.

Dr. King's vision of America at its best—a land of equality, fairness, and compassion for all of its citizens—and his unyielding devotion to nonviolent protest (while facing death threats, jail, and ugly verbal abuse and physical brutality) helped lead our Nation through a turbulent, but necessary, period of growth.

This past Monday, our country of rich and diverse cultures came together to honor Dr. King's memory and rekindle its commitment to making his dream a reality. This national tribute was long overdue. In 1968, shortly after Dr. King's death, I sponsored a bill to designate a national holiday in his honor; 18 years passed before a day was set aside to honor his birth.

I am also pleased to note that I am cosponsoring legislation with Senator FRANK LAUTENBERG to name the planned Federal courthouse in Newark after Dr. King.

However, our celebration of Dr. King's legacy is tempered by the sobering fact that for many Americans, his dream has not yet become a reality: The gap between rich and poor grows dangerously wider each day; blacks continue to suffer disproportionately high unemployment and infant mortality rates; the future of essential social services is threatened by Gramm-Rudman and other budget-slashing schemes; the Department of Justice is working to turn the clock back on civil rights gains of the last three decades.

Let us join together to honor the memory of this great man by carrying on his work.

Dr. King's dream was a dream of social, political, and economic justice for all. He dedicated his life to securing a society that will judge its citizens not by the color of their skin, but by the quality of their character and the contents of their minds. The civil rights laws guaranteeing equal opportunity and equal rights would be legacy enough for most great men. But not for Dr. King. For his is also a legacy of hope and promise that bigotry will be erased, justice will be served, and human rights will be respected in this country and throughout the world. In 1975, I told the Southern Christian Leadership Conference:

They shot down the man—and they snuffed out his life—but they could not shoot down his dream. For his dream was stronger than life and more powerful than death. And the dream lives on.

Let us join together to honor the memory of this great American by working for the realization of his dream.

Mr. STOKES. Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank my distinguished colleague, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LELAND] for reserving this special order so that Members can participate in the observance of the first Federal holiday enacted in honor of a black American. That black American was Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr., whose young life was snuffed out by an assassin's bullet almost 18 years ago.

Mr. Speaker, much has been written; much has been said; and many events have been conducted in the last month relative to Dr. King and this new Federal holiday. Each event has focused on the monumental contributions and achievements of Dr. King on behalf of not just black Americans but for all Americans.

This historic occasion is a time for America to pause and memorialize, to perpetuate, and pay tribute to a man whose greatness was established through his leadership of a movement which pricked the conscience of a nation and changed the course of history. But more than that, the holiday is a time for all Americans to come together, to think, reason, and act if we indeed believe as Martin did in our Nation. Not only did Dr. King love his Nation—not only did he die for it—but more than that—he had a dream for it. His dream was a simple dream, uncomplicated and unencumbered. In essence, he believed in—worked in behalf of—and demanded that America live up to its creed that we hold these truths to be self-evident that all men are created equal. That they are endowed by their Creator with certain inalienable rights. That among these are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness.

This is basis for the King Federal holiday. The holiday observance has been an opportunity for all of us to remember and be thankful for the victories of Dr. King and the civil rights movement on so many battlefields: The Montgomery bus boycott, public accommodations, voting rights, housing, equal employment opportunity, and the abolition of our own brand of apartheid laws all over the South. It also has been a golden opportunity for all Americans to rededicate themselves to the proposition that Martin Luther King's dream cannot and must not be deferred.

Therein lies the challenge for those of us here in the Congress. In 1983, when the House finally passed legislation making the third Monday in January each year, the holiday in honor of Dr. King, I felt proud of this body and proud of America.

That was a good start. But, as the individuals who are directly responsible for the legislation affecting the lives of not only black Americans and the poor, but all Americans, we more than others, must realize that a great deal of work remains to be done in order to make Dr. King's dream a reality.

Our role in that effort can and must be to place laws on the books, to ensure the equitable administration of programs; and to provide opportunities so that all Americans—regardless of their race or economic status, can have a fair chance in our society.

This is the essence of Dr. King's dream and the American dream. The effort to reach this goal will not be easy, but I remember Dr. King saying, "The ultimate measure of a man is not where he stands in moments of comfort and convenience, but where he stands at times of challenge and controversy."

The struggle to make the dream a reality for all Americans must continue—here in Congress and around the Nation. If we in the Congress commit ourselves to relentlessly pursuing this goal today, we will help to make Dr. King's dream a reality.

Again, Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank my distinguished colleague, Mr. LELAND, for reserving this time.

Mr. COUGHLIN. Mr. Speaker, as we commemorate the birthday of Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr., it is my pleasure to pay tribute to a man for whom the struggle against bigotry, injustice, and immorality was the commitment of his life.

This is a symbolic occasion to reaffirm our own commitment to the brotherhood of man and to rededicate ourselves to his dream—not only for black Americans—but indeed for all Americans and all people.

The dark stain of discrimination is not some myth of the distant past. I remember as if it were yesterday my first trip south of Pennsylvania, as a raw Marine recruit, stopping at a gas station. It had two water fountains; one marked "colored."

In my ignorant innocence, I went to see what the colored water looked like and was strongly rebuked. That experience, among others, led to my involvement as a student in the early civil rights movement on the campus of Yale.

As we set aside a day each year to remember the just cause for which Dr. King stood, we, as Americans, can take pride in the knowledge that we recognized a serious injustice amongst our people and took action to change it. With the Civil Rights Act of 1964 and the Voting Rights Act of 1965, his work brought to us a change in law. But more importantly, his inspiration and leadership stirred the conscience of our people toward a higher standard of morality.

Dr. King's legacy challenges each of us to use the power of politics to confront those problems which cause racial friction and unrest, and to carry on the search for social justice and equality for which he lived and died. He sought not special privilege but equal privilege.

As we seek to confront the problems of apartheid in South Africa, the importance of Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr.'s message remains stronger than ever. He would have been in the forefront today. It is with sadness we accept that he is not with us to witness the historic strides we have made toward his goal both in our Nation and elsewhere in the world.

Certainly, the civil rights movement is not ended. As we honor Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr., we must pledge to strive together, as a democratic people, to persevere and fulfill his ultimate dream.

Mr. DYMALLY. Mr. Speaker, there are wretched souls around the world who believe that the life of a great human being can be snuffed out by a bullet. And in their delusion they steal life from the bodies of these great individuals, these Martin Luther Kings, these Mahatma Gandhis. Their blindness hides the truth from them: that greatness is an essence of soul, not of the body. It cannot be killed by a bullet but only by a loss of hope among those whose lives have been touched by the soul of greatness.

Martin Luther King's body rests in death in Atlanta. But his soul, his spirit, was not killed when his body was struck down that April night in Memphis. It lives in each of us who does truly believe that there will be a day when all God's children will be free. It lives in Martin's close friends. It lives in Coretta Scott King and the King children who built the Center for Nonviolent Social Change. It lives in Walter Fauntroy who struggles daily to lift the burden of apartheid from the black people of South Africa. It lives in Jesse Jackson who inspires young black people to free themselves of drugs and to achieve excellence. It lives in Andrew Young, who demonstrated the compassion and humanity of this Nation to the world as our Ambassador to the United Nations. Martin Luther King, Jr., kindled his spirit in each of these people. They are fruits of his hope.

But they are no more than crests in a sea of hope that touches every shore. This week and in all Januaries to come that sea will swell as thousands who had not before heard Martin's words will stop for a few moments transfixed by the magnificence of his dream, transfixed as were those who heard it first on that sweltering day in August on the steps of the Lincoln Memorial. And his dream will become their dream as well. And Martin Luther King, Jr., will live so long as his words swell the sea of hope, so long as the wave of freedom washes the shores of God's good Earth.

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Speaker, I would like to commend the chairman of the Congressional Black Caucus, Congressman LELAND for his leadership in calling for this special order to honor Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr.

Twenty years ago, black people finally succeeded in eliminating the last vestiges of Jim Crow from the legal codes and regulations of the States. The Civil Rights Acts and Voting Rights Act of 1966 brought an end to centuries of officially sanctioned apartheid and disenfranchisement. No longer could a restaurant owner legally refuse to serve black customers. No longer could a local ordinance set aside segregated entrances to theaters and businesses. And no longer would black people have to qualify to vote under racist grandfather clauses.

All black people can take pride at how far we have come in such a short period of time. We all participated in the struggles of the past, and we can all take pride in our victories.

However, one man stands out as the moving force behind the civil rights movement. This man was Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. Martin Luther King was a man completely committed to the cause of racial equality. His vision transcended political and religious boundaries, and looked to the day when all Americans would be provided with the same tools to build the American dream.

Mr. Speaker, Dr. King was a great humanitarian and, I would say, a true American patriot. He was not patriotic in the Ronald Reagan mold, glorifying arms buildups, conservatism, and social callousness. Rather, Dr. King questioned whether we as a people were living according to the mandates of our Constitution and our God. He questioned the way men in power had turned their backs on prejudice and poverty for so long. And he questioned the moral superiority with which we conducted our affairs internationally, while so many suffered here at home.

Martin Luther King was indeed a great man. He stands as a symbol of fairness and justice, and inspiration for achieving our best ideals. I would encourage my colleagues to reflect upon the great contributions of Dr. King. This is a moment for close reflection. The following articles are submitted for inclusion in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

THE GREAT REFORMER

(By Eleanor Holmes Norton)

We have just passed through the most fruitful period of progress for black Americans since Emancipation. Beginning with the 1954 school desegregation decision, it lasted a quarter of a century. It produced many memorable figures. The verdict of history is still out on all but one.

Hereafter Martin Luther King Jr. will be judged a great man by many who will know little of him except that a national holiday commemorates his achievements. But the judgment of history is not so easily summarized. For some time to come we must wrestle with the content and the meaning of King's legacy. The struggle is already apparent.

As the King celebration began, the attorney general justified his attempt to eliminate hiring goals for minorities and women as "very consistent with what Dr. King had in mind," on the same day that the Rev. Jesse Jackson, speaking from King's home pulpit in Atlanta, excoriated the proposed policy for betraying King's goals.

Thus King is not likely to recede easily into the historical distance and become an icon like the only other American honored with a holiday, George Washington. Washington was the paradigm unifying figure, the first American of the new republic. King was a profoundly unsettling figure who challenged the republic from the time he emerged amidst the racial placidity of the 1950s.

Yet King and Washington are not odd fellows thrown together by the fickle if democratic process that produces national holidays. Different as the two men were, they have been honored for the same reason. They managed to draw out the best in the American character. We honor them as an act of national conceit that is fully justified because the honor bestowed symbolizes our own striving to be as good as we sought to become when they lived. In today's racial climate, we need all that can be brought to bear through the symbolism provided by the King holiday.

Thus we honor King as the most appropriate way to signify that we are overcoming our own history. Race has been the single most tragic and insistent scar on an otherwise noble national undertaking. If the country has often met its baseline ideals, race has stood out for the way it has betrayed them. Inevitably the man most associated with racial accord would become a national hero.

If King's part in relieving the burden of race were all he had done, he would deserve a holiday. But his achievements go deeper. King was the most influential reformer in one of the most fertile periods of reform in American history. King was as significant to his period as John Kennedy and Lyndon Johnson were and, with the advent of the holiday, is likely to be a more lasting figure than either. King shaped the entire period of reform to which both of these presidents directly responded. Race was the anchor issue for King. But he moved to poverty and to war, teaching and leading in path-breaking ways, when many counseled him to stay within race boundaries. Nor did his early death end his influence on this period of restless reform. Every important movement of the 1960s and 1970s, from women to the environment, draws directly upon his philosophy or the social energy he inspired.

There has been much overwrought criticism of the unprecedented period of reform that characterized the last two decades. A time that produced less than it sought, it has been an easy target for those who sought—and brought—no change at all. But Americans North and South, right and left, have now closed in around King, the self-proclaimed drum major for justice of this period. The '60s and '70s were King's decades. In spite of ourselves, in honoring the great reformer, we have begun to accept the legitimacy of one of the most significant eras of American reform.

THE MAN CONSERVATIVES HATED

(By Richard Cohen)

The one and only time I met Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. was after he had called a press conference to announce that he would lead a massive march in New York to protest the Vietnam war. Another time, I sort of met him. I interviewed a former Mississippi deputy sheriff who had been convicted of conspiracy in the killing of three civil rights workers and, before that, had jailed the future Nobel Prize winner. He pronounced him a great man. "That Dr. King, he had something," said Cecil Ray Price.

I raise these two instances because, as Jesse Jackson has pointed out, the reality of Martin Luther King is being altered and his memory expropriated by people who were, when it counted, his critics and enemy. The truth of the matter is that King went to jail. The truth is that King was a dissenter. The truth is that King was, in some ways, a revolutionary—a dreamer, yes, but a brawler too. He fought like hell for justice.

This all has to be said because the King praised by Ronald Reagan and Edwin Meese III could take a place on the dais of a Chamber of Commerce lunch and get nothing but pats on the back. They have made him a flag bearer in the giant patriotic parade now marching down the middle of America. The real King, with sadness but with firmness, would have said that this parade is not for him. He would, if you don't mind, have dropped off in the ghetto where things are not going so well.

It is wonderful that Reagan and company have finally gotten around to recognizing King's greatness. More power to them. But if they are to recognize King, then recognize the man he was—not the man they wish he had been. He was the guy conservatives hated—the one they called a communist. He was suspected of being in the pay of the North Vietnamese or, variously, the Russians. He was a firebrand and troublemaker—the supposed catalyst of riots and crime. He was the civil rights leader whom the FBI bugged; they put listening devices in the motel rooms where he stayed, and his most intimate conversations were passed around Washington for the cheap thrills of creeps and racists.

Now, of course, Martin Luther King is being praised as a patriot who would have cheered "Rocky IV," but that, alas, is because he is dead and his cause—civil rights—is no longer controversial. If he were alive today, he would be called all sorts of names. At the very least, Jeane Kirkpatrick would call him a "San Francisco Democrat"—one of the Blame America First crowd who has no place either in American politics or, for sure, at the White House table. Certainly, he would not be called a patriot.

The patriot of today is not someone who questions authority or institutions. The new patriotism, so celebrated by magazines, beer commercials and professional football teams, is always linked to conformity in action—in particular, the military. Just say that word and you see someone in uniform, maybe saluting, maybe rushing across some rough terrain in an army-recruiting commercial in which war is indistinguishable from a boyhood game of guns—bang, bang, you're dead. They are milk-and-cookies patriots.

But Martin Luther King was a true patriot. He loved his country enough to challenge it to be better. He broke laws—bad laws, but laws nonetheless—and he went to jail for it. He agitated and condemned, exhorted and lambasted. He prayed for his enemies but never shirked from confronting them. He represented an institution—the church—but he challenged institutions he thought were doing wrong. He was an authority figure—a minister—who did not hesitate to take on the authorities when he thought they were wrong. He started in the South but was turning his attention to the North and, over the war in Vietnam, he was about to battle the very administration that had been his ally.

The real Martin Luther King was a critic, not a cheerleader. The real Martin Luther King appreciated America's ability to do better—to improvise, improve, make the country work better for everyone. The real Martin Luther King would never celebrate the status quo, and if someone proclaimed that America was standing tall, he would say, yes, but it can stand taller.

Like Albert Camus, Martin Luther King knew that the real subversion is conformity and that the true patriotism is criticism and action. Martin Luther King had a dream, but Martin Luther King, as his achievements attest, was no dreamer.

Mr. BROWN of California. Mr. Speaker, yesterday, for the first time, we as a nation celebrated the birthday of a black man. Special ceremonies were held all over the country, as people of all races and backgrounds paid tribute to slain civil rights leader Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. When we celebrate his birthday, we do so as a symbolic occasion to reaffirm our own commitment to the brotherhood of man and to rededicate ourselves to his dream for America.

Dr. King shared his dream with us on the steps of the Lincoln Memorial on August 22, 1963. I especially remember his "I Had A Dream" speech because, I along with 200,000 other people, gathered with him to show that we too shared his dream that one day "sons of former slaves and sons of former slaveowners will be able to sit down together at the table of brotherhood."

Although our Nation has not yet made it to the "promised land" which Dr. King envisioned, it is on the horizon. Although it is on the horizon and can be seen in the distance, sometimes I feel like our Nation may never get there. At present, officials in the Reagan administration are trying to undermine the civil rights legislation Dr. King and so many others have fought and died for. Currently under attack are the Civil Rights Act of 1964, the Voting Rights Act of 1965 and the Executive Order No. 11246. If Dr. King's dream is to remain alive, we will have to roll up our sleeves and work harder to make sure that these laws are strengthened, not weakened.

The current administrations actions are not the only reasons why we might not see Dr. King's dream come to fruition. Recently, I read an article featured in my home town's newspaper, the San Bernardino Sun, which disturbed me deeply. The American Council on Education predicted that the next decade could be ripe for civil unrest if more minority students don't start enrolling in colleges and universities. Ms. Sarah Melendez, associate director of the Education Council's Office of Minority Concerns said, blacks and Hispanics already comprise about half of California's population, and they'll make up about a third of the Nation's work force in the next 10 years. While their numbers are growing, fewer than 10 percent of college age minority students are going on to college, setting the stage for a decade when "you're going to have all the white people doing the good jobs, and the blacks and Hispanics will be relegated to janitorial and menial work. If that doesn't lead to civil unrest, I don't know what will. Now is the time to start doing something about it!" I agree.

The heyday of the civil rights movement and the decade following it created a boost in minority enrollments, but those numbers are failing, and in some cases are gradually declining. In 1976, blacks made up 9.4 percent of enrollments at all colleges in the Nation, but dropped to 8.9 percent by 1982. Blacks comprise about 12 percent of the population nationwide. Hispanics showed a slight increase, from 3.5 percent in 1976 to 4.2 percent in 1982. Hispanics represent 7 percent of the Nation's population. Studies show that over half of the minorities—56 percent—choose 2-year community colleges. The only problem is, most, however, never finish the community colleges and they never make it to the 4-year colleges.

If the American dream is to work for everyone then we must continue to work toward economic and educational parity. Allowing declines in minority representation to continue unchecked will return our society to an elitist system of a highly educated upper and middle class, mostly white, and a seriously undereducated working and poor class, mostly nonwhite—in other words, "educational and economic apartheid." Sooner or later, taxpayers will pay and, if not for better schools, then for more prisons, for welfare and for drug addiction programs that those locked out of the system will need.

It is essential that we continue to educate all those with the potential to make this country strong. Higher education is an investment, not an expense. Fulfillment of the American dream is based on upward mobility through education. So as we recommit ourselves to fulfilling the dream, let us continue to struggle for justice in education. Only if we work together, for change, will we achieve the day he dreamed of, the day when in Martin's words: "All of God's children, black men and white men, Jews and Gentiles, Protestants and Catholics, will be able to join hands and sing: Free at last! Free at last! Thank God almighty, we are free at last."

Mr. FASCELL. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to join our colleagues in this tribute to one of the truly great leaders of our Nation, the Reverend Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. It is with great pride and sincere gratitude that we remember Dr. King on the celebration of what was to be his 57th birthday.

Born on January 15, 1929, in Atlanta, GA, Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr., is, perhaps, best known for his advocacy of the philosophy of nonviolent resistance in the civil rights movement. In 1955, he gained international recognition and achieved a position of leadership in the American black community when he led the Montgomery bus boycott following the arrest of Rosa Parks. Dr. King was awarded the Nobel Peace Prize in 1963 for his adherence to the principles of nonviolence and for setting an example for others who were to follow in his footsteps. At that point, he had touched the Nation and the world with his philosophy.

An advocate of justice and freedom for all individuals, Dr. King taught the people of this Nation about themselves—about their past, about their present and about their future. The inspiration which he ignited in the hearts of millions was felt worldwide among people of all colors. Dr. King's unwavering devotion to justice, his commitment to peace and freedom, and his concern with the future of this Nation was an inspiration for us all, and it continues to be, particularly on this important day.

Martin Luther King, Jr., had a dream—he dreamed of the day when all men would, in fact, be equal, that blacks would meet with whites in peace, and that freedom and justice would reign supreme. Perhaps his most important hope was for children:

I have a dream that my four little children will one day live in a nation where they will not be judged by the color of their skin but by the content of their character.

He had a dream for all of our children. Dr. King long awaited the day when all children would walk together in peace and equality. He tragically never lived to see that happen. We can learn from the lessons which Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr., taught us—we can learn from his dreams, his bravery, his hopes, and his prayers. I am grateful to Dr. King for his Dream, and, today, we can be proud of the progress which this Nation has made since his death. We must now look to the future and recognize the steps which remain to be taken.

Mr. Speaker, on this day I am pleased to honor a great man, a dedicated leader, and an inspiration to all of us, the Reverend Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr.

Mr. DELLUMS. Mr. Speaker, on a bright April day almost 19 years ago Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr., came to the Berkeley campus of the University of California to speak against America's role in the Indochina war. I was one of many thousands in the audience that day—a Berkeley graduate and a newly elected member of the Berkeley City Council.

The memory of that moment in time is as vivid now as it was then, because I felt Dr. King was personally challenging us as individuals to respond to this national crisis of conscience by making a lifetime commitment to change society through constructive alternatives to the madness surrounding us.

He put the challenge in succinct but profound terms: "We have flown the air like birds and swum the sea like fishes, but we have not learned the simple act of walking the Earth like brothers." He then analyzed the dichotomy of leadership in contemporary America—those who lead by following the popular prejudices of the moment—and those who, like he did himself, sought to mold a new consensus by offering new visions and new alternatives.

Those verbal visions and constructive alternatives he proposed have been the twin foundations for your own growth and commitment on the global issues of war and peace, personal freedom and social justice—goals and aspirations for which he lived, struggled and died.

Eighteen years after his assassination, following a sustained legislative struggle, all Americans now have a national holiday to honor this true citizen of humanity who was the embodiment of the ideals professed in our Declaration of Independence and Bill of Rights. It ought to be a day of renewed commitment to conscience rather than commerce, one in which we recall that his words were more than matched by the deeds of his struggle to promote peace and broaden the boundaries of justice.

Martin Luther King, Jr. challenged the conscience of both church and state on the spiritual and political immorality of racism and segregation in our own society. In his stirring letter from the jail in Birmingham, AL, in April 1963, he wrote:

We know through painful experience that Freedom is never voluntarily given by the oppressor; it must be demanded by the oppressed * * *. We have waited for more than 340 years for our Constitutional and God-given rights. The nations of Asia and Africa are moving with jet-like speed toward gaining political independence, but we still creep at horse-and-buggy pace toward gaining a cup of coffee at a lunch counter * * *."

It was Martin Luther King, Jr., standing in the shadow of the Lincoln Memorial on August 28, 1963, who spoke for all citizens of conscience in challenging the foundations on which this Nation was built, saying:

When the architects of our Republic wrote the magnificent words of the Constitution and the Declaration of Independence, they were signing a promissory note to which every American was to fall heir * * *. It is obvious today that America has defaulted on this promissory note, insofar as her citizens of color are concerned. Instead of honoring this sacred obligation, America has given the Negro people a bad check; a check which has come back marked "insufficient funds". We refuse to believe that there are insufficient funds in the great vaults of opportunity of this Nation. And so we've come to cash this check, a check that will give us upon demand the riches of freedom and the security of justice.

Martin Luther King, Jr. was also a leader in the effort to make human rights and real reductions in the nuclear and conventional arms race major priorities on the global agenda. In his 1964 Nobel Peace Prize acceptance speech he spoke of "the need to overcome oppression and violence without resorting to violence and oppression." He went on to say: "I refuse to accept the cynical notion that nation after nation must spiral down a militaristic stairway into the Hell of thermonuclear destruction. I believe that unarmed truth and unconditional love will have the final word in reality. That is why right temporarily defeated is stronger than evil triumphant."

Dr. King then used his eminence as a Nobel Peace Laureate to speak out on the insanity and immorality of the Indochina war. He understood that the bombs being dropped in Vietnam would explode in the ghettoes of America. In a Los Angeles speech he challenged Lyndon B. Johnson's false claim that America could have both guns and butter, saying:

The promises of the Great Society have been shot down on the battlefields of Vietnam. The pursuit of this widened war has narrowed domestic welfare programs, making the poor, White and Negro, bear the heaviest burdens * * *. It is estimated that we spend $322,000 for each "enemy" we kill, while we spend in the so-called war on poverty in America only about $53 for each person classified as poor.

Finally, who can ever forget the moral rigor and the searing sadness of his brilliant speech at the Riverside Church in New York on April 4, 1967, when he unburdened his soul on the agony of that war's destructive impact on every segment of American society? The frustration was manifest as he admitted.

Over the past two years * * * many persons have questioned me about the wisdom of my path * * *. Peace and civil rights don't mix, they say. Aren't you hurting the cause of your own people they say * * *. Indeed, their questions suggest that they do not know the world in which they live * * *.

He then went on to make one of the more cogent critiques of contemporary American foreign and military policy ever uttered in a public forum. His peroration was a cri de coeur that is even more poignant when read in the context of the contemporary nuclear and space weapons race:

Somehow this madness must cease. We must stop now. I speak as a child of God and brother to the suffering poor of Vietnam * * *. I speak for the poor in America who are paying the double price of smashed hopes at home and death and corruption in Vietnam. I speak as a citizen of the world, for the world as it stands aghast at the path we have taken. I speak as an American to the leaders of my own nation. The great initiative of the war is ours. The initiative to stop must be ours.

A year to the day after making that speech Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. was the victim of an assassin's bullet. America and the world are still suffering his loss.

Tragically, as we enter the new year of 1986, many of his dreams are still unrealized. The world spends trillions on even more fearsome weapons of destruction, but a virtual pittance on food, clothing, shelter, health care and education for the billions on this planet who are still mired in poverty. Human dignity is stifled in South Africa, and personal freedom is at risk around the globe because of oppressive regimes, both right and left. Here at home, the ravages of Reaganomics and the impending disaster of Gramm-Rudman-Hollings are sad testimony that economic democracy in this society is more rhetoric than reality.

However, on this day of national commemoration, let us remember that Dr. King's greatest legacy to us is one of hope, based on the commitment to persevere with integrity and compassion in the struggle for equality and justice, peace and personal freedom. It is for us, the living, to pick up his fallen torch and to go forward, as he said, to "make of this old world a new world." We have that moral obligation to his memory—and to our children and our children's children.

Mr. DAUB. Mr. Speaker, on January 16, 1986, I was pleased to participate in the first Martin Luther King, Jr. Luncheon sponsored by Metro Tech Community College, of my home district.

I would like to submit for the RECORD my remarks in honor of Dr. King's achievements:

MARTIN LUTHER KING, JR.—JANUARY 1986

Two decades ago—on August 28, 1963—the centennial year of the Emancipation Proclamation—in Washington, DC—on the steps of the Lincoln Memorial—the nation and the world listened to the dream of a man.

His dream was one of equality and of freedom—of peace and of justice. And as we listened, we realized that this man spoke not just of his dream—but of the American dream.

This man—and his dream—is why we gather today—to honor the man and to rekindle the dream, for while peace and justice seem a simple proposal, we know that they prove to be not simple but elusive, and that they demand our constant attention and nurturing care.

Why do we honor Dr. Martin Luther King today? If you answer—"Because he was a great Black American"—you have missed the message. If you answer—"because he was a great American" you understand and live the legacy of Dr. King. You understand his dream—our dream—that one day we will live in a nation and a world where people are judged not by the color of their skin but by the content of their character.

I have had the opportunity to travel to many countries throughout the world. In every case—in every part of the world—I am reminded that the people of these nations look to America not only for economic aid, for defense assistance, for education and for technology. They look to America for something more important than any of these. They look to America for a standard of justice—of fairness and freedom.

In that knowledge, I voted for the sanctions against South Africa where justice is reserved for people of only one color. In that knowledge, I have joined with my colleagues in Congress in pressing for human rights in the Soviet Union—especially for the rights of the Jewish minority to emigrate to freedom. In that knowledge, I voted for the national holiday to recognize the achievements and the dream of Dr. King—a dream that awakened in us the best qualities of the American spirit.

The world recognized Dr. King's contributions to these qualities and to this higher standard when—in 1964—he was awarded the Nobel Peace Prize. This Award recognized the truth and substance of his message that "injustice anywhere is a threat to justice everywhere."

This week—in cities across the nation—we recommit ourselves—in the spirit of Dr. King—to fighting injustice everywhere. He is with us today in spirit—watching from the mountaintop and asking us to live the dream not just today, but every day, and not to honor him, but to honor the dignity of all God's children.

If we do this in our daily lives, we can someday embrace him on that mountaintop and know that we have lived the legacy of Dr. King and bequeathed it to our children and our grandchildren.

And that will be the greatest honor we can give to a man who is not with us today because he had the courage to do what was right.

Mr. TORRICELLI. Mr. Speaker, I am honored to be able to help celebrate the memory of Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr., on this first national observance commemorating his birthday. As a result of his efforts minorities and women have finally begun to become part of mainstream America.

There is perhaps no better way in which to preserve the memory of Dr. King than by striving to protect those civil rights victories obtained as a direct result of Dr. King's vision.

This is especially true today when the Justice Department seeks to undercut efforts against employment discrimination in the workplace under the guise of civil rights reform. Although not as blatant as the discrimination practiced in the 1960's, such subtle means of eroding civil rights gains are just as harmful.

Dr. King sought social justice for all men and women. We have the obligation today to continue with this goal. And not only in the United States.

Apartheid in South Africa represents the worst form of oppression of civil rights. The Government of South Africa, in its attempt to perpetuate apartheid, has sought to overcome its opposition and avoid any meaningful negotiations leading to elimination of race discrimination. And violence in South Africa continues daily.

Nelson and Winnie Mandela represent the difficulties faced for all South Africans who seek freedom and justice. Yet, despite jail and banishment their ideas and the force of their beliefs have broken through the obstacles which surround them towards a peaceful transition to the end of apartheid.

To honor Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr., we should support those who seek to continue his work for social justice and continue such work ourselves.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. LELAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on the subject of my special order today.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

DR. ANDREI SAKHAROV

The Speaker pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. FRANK], is recognized for 60 minutes.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. FRANK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on the subject of this special order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. FRANK. Mr. Speaker, let me say to my colleagues who are here that I intend to say some things about Dr. Andrei Sakharov, and I will than have some time available for those who want to join in and continue particularly on Dr. Martin Luther King.

I would like to begin, because there are some other Members who came here on this special order, and I would like to begin, Mr. Speaker, by saying that sometimes when you have an important special order, you feel slight chargin when it has to share the bill with another important special order. But today I feel very much reassured by this coincidence. And it is a coincidence that yesterday was the first time this country celebrated the holiday, well deserved, to commemorate the enormous contribution to humanity made by Dr. Martin Luther King.

Tomorrow is a much more tragic anniversary, the sixth anniversay of the inhumane and illegal and unjustified decision of the Soviet Union to banish Dr. Andrei Sakharov to internal exile in Gorki.

We have two Nobel Prize winners, two men of enormous moral courage, who confronted flaws in their own societies. It is, I think, very important to note the very great differences in the ways in which the two societies responded.

With Martin Luther King, there was, as people have said, opposition, there was anger, there was hatred, and, ultimately, there was recognition that he was right. And there has been not fast enough and not far enough but a consistent effort since he began to raise these issues 30 years ago to try to abolish that terrible scar of racism, which is less than it was although still more than it ought to be in this country.

How different it has been in the Soviet Union, where a society lacking the commitment to openness in democracy that we have had and that we are striving continuously to improve in this country, treated its great hero, Andrei Sakharov, not simply with an initial skepticism and anger, but with a brutal and systematic effort to break his spirit. Fortunately, for humanity, Andrei Sakharov's spirit has not been breakable. His wife, Yelena Bonner, happens as we speak to be here in the United States. And I think those of us here who have participated in this effort to draw attention to the inhumane treatment of Dr. Sakharov are entitled to feel that our efforts were helpful in alleviating that tyrannical state of oppression enough so that Mrs. Bonner was able to come here for medical treatment.

I had the very great honor of being able to bring my own mother in Newton, MA, to meet Mrs. Bonner, to be there as she spent time with a grandchild she had never seen before and her children.

But the poignancy was overwhelming as you realize that this woman will voluntarily in the next couple of months go back to the bleak and terrible and inhuman oppression of internal exile at Gorky because she chooses to stay side-by-side with her husband in their joint effort to bring the Soviet Union's leadership to some recognition of the importance of freedom and humanity.

By the Soviet Union's own legal system, this has become more and more outrageous. There was, of course, never any reason to punish Andrei Sakharov. What Andrei Sakharov tried to do in the Soviet Union that has made him a prisoner is what Martin Luther King did in this country and it made him, sadly, too late, and after he was murdered, but it made him officially a hero. The Soviet Union has reacted in the opposite way.

Andrei Sakharov has tried to bring the Soviet Union to some recognition of humanity in its society. But even if it had been a crime, and of course, by no standard of imagination should it have been, internal exile by Soviet law is limited to 5 years. He begins tomorrow his sixth year in that terrible state of deprivation and oppression.

He is an older man now; he is a sick man. He is a man who has contributed enormously through his spirit, through his technical knowledge. Mrs. Bonner reminded me, by the way, that he was one of the first to advocate a test ban on nuclear testing. He has a very distinguished record in trying to bring about peace between the superpowers. His reward from the Soviet Union has been this terrible oppression.

So as we today celebrate Martin Luther King, and I am delighted that our colleagues from Texas gave us this opportunity to do that, I have to join with those who said that there is an element of hypocrisy around us today. I do not remember which French wit it was who said,

"Hypocrisy is the homage that vice pays to virtue." Martin Luther King is getting a lot of homage today. People who disagreed with everything he stood for when he was alive and do not agree with much of it now that he is no longer with us are paying tribute to him. We will take that. We will take that because it is at least a recognition that the terrible problems of racism and injustice and poverty that he confronted head-on 30 years ago, while we have diminished them, we have not removed them by any means, and we ought to be as dedicated to removing them today as he was when he started 30 years ago.

We also now want to turn our attention to Andrei Sakharov and say to the Soviet Union: In the name of humanity, must you continue to torture this decent human being? Because that is what we are talking about. No one is here insisting that the Soviet Union tomorrow become the kind of democratic society that we have here, that I would like to see. That is very desirable. But we have a somewhat lesser goal today.

Do not inflict on Andrei Sakharov and Yelena Bonner and many, many others in the Soviet Union, religious people, Baptists and Jews and others, thinkers, independent individuals who simply want even to be allowed to live in freedom in the Soviet Union, or falling that, let them go. Let them, if the Soviet Union cannot tolerate the presence of independent and honest and free-thinking individuals, let them go to those many places in the world where they will be welcome.

It is unbecoming of a nation of the power of the Soviet Union to act as if it is so terrified of the moral force of even as distinguished an individual as Andrei Sakharov. So again today, we plead, as we have pled before, for them to recognize the demands, the minimal demand of humanity and to allow Andrei Sakharov and Yelena Bonner this freedom.

Mr. Speaker, I now yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. GILMAN] a gentleman who has worked with me on a number of cases involving efforts to bring freedom to people in the Soviet Union.

Mr. GILMAN. I thank the gentleman for yielding to me.

Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise to join the gentleman from Massachusetts, Mr. FRANK, in commemorating the sixth anniversary in exile of the renowned Soviet scientist and Nobel Peace Prize winner, Dr. Andrei Sakharov. I commend the gentleman for making this time available to us today to discuss this critical issue. It is the first opportunity for many of us to speak out following the completion of the first session of the 99th Congress.

Over the past 3 months, many developments have taken place on the human rights front in the Soviet Union—some good, while others are extremely distressing. We are not yet able to decide whether these positive changes are indicative of any significant change in Soviet human rights policy, or whether the most recent negative events are the dominant course in Soviet attitudes. Andrei Sakharov and his wife, Dr, Yelena Bonner, suffered in exile in the closed Soviet city of Gorky for these many years. It was a fortuitous event that Dr. Bonner was finally given a temporary visa to the West in order to consult with medical experts about her eye and heart problems. While Dr. Bonner's health problems are now being treated, Dr. Sakharov continues to suffer through the harsh winter without his wife, and when he returns to the Soviet Union, her own exile will once again be imposed.

The Soviet Union is signatory to a number of bilaterial and multilateral documents, among them the Universal Declaration on Human Rights and the Helsinki Final Act. Yet it continues to flout both the letter and the spirit of the these agreements time and again. In fact, the Soviet Union does not comply most of the time. This deplorable state of affairs must be rectified if, in fact, the Soviet Union is seriously supportive of preserving the spirit of the recent Geneva summit.

Just prior to the Geneva summit meeting between President Reagan and Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev, a 15-year Soviet Jewish refusenik and a former Prisioner of Conscience was finally allowed to emigrate to Israel. Dr. Mark Nashpitz, whom I adopted when I first was elected to Congress, was one of the fortunate few to be reunited with his family in Israel. That 1,139 individuals were allowed to emigrate in 1985, a slight increase over the previous year, was, however, miniscule, in advance in the plight for Soviet Jews.

Over the past few weeks several, Soviet spouses, after many years of separation, were reunited with their families in the West.

Lydia Staskevich, a prominent member of the Soviet Pentacostal community, was also allowed to leave—again signalling a possible thaw in Soviet human rights policy. But, despite these positive developments, the new year has heralded some new, and very negative developments of which my colleagues should be aware.

Anatoly Shcharansky remains in prison, and yesterday had to celebrate his 38th birthday in solitary confinement. This courageous young man carries on his shoulders burdens and deprivations that we cannot even imagine. Recently, Anatoly conducted a hunger strike to protest the Soviet's prohibition of his receiving mail. For this demonstration he received an additional 5-month sentence in solitary confinement. Our thoughts and prayers go out to him and to his wife, Avital, who continues her vigil on his behalf with such noble fervor and passion that all corners of the Western world sit up and take notice.

Iosef Begun, a three-time Prisoner of Conscience, currently serving a 12-year sentence in the Chistopol prison system, continues to languish alone silently. His wife, Inna, has relayed from Moscow her desire that we use these next few days to express our solidarity with Iosef, and with all Soviet Jewish Prisoners of Conscience. She can be assured that the Congress of the United States cares, and that the American people are dedicated to pursuing her husband's case with the highest authorities.

And the case of Iosef Berenshtein stands on its own merits—a family man arrested while arranging the purchase of a gravestone—and who was deliberately attacked by brutal inmates in prison, egged on by prison guards. Iosef's eyes were severely gouged with broken glass, to the point that he is almost blind. Yet, to date, he has not received comprehensive medical treatment, nor do we know in which prison he is being kept.

And, most recently, an individual on whose behalf Congressman FRANK has been working for a long time, was arrested on January 8. Vladimir Lifshitz, a young man and an activist in the Leningrad community, was arrested on charges of violating articles 191 of the Soviet criminal code, specifying that he "circulated information known to be false which defames the Soviet state and social system." This alleged infraction consists of nothing more than writing letters, which the Soviet authorities have admitted opening. Vladimir's wife is not immune either, as she has been informed that her own situation is "delicate."

Mr. Speaker, the individuals whom I have just described are not guilty of the charges hurled against them. Each one only desires that measure of freedom to speak out which we in the United States take for granted. Soviet Jews and others, under the previously mentioned arragements, have a right to family reunification. This is most certainly not taking place—instead, it appears that the new year has brought a redoubling of the harassment and arrests against human rights activists, regardless of their religious affiliation, cultural heritage, or political leanings. But I urge the Soviet Government to take heed to what is said today, because their actions will strongly influence our reaction in the Congress.

Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Massachusetts again for providing us this opportunity.

Mr. FRANK. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from New York [Mr. GILMAN]. The specifics he gave are very important ones. The lists of people who were the victims of this oppression are unfortunately very long, and I want to echo what he said.

There are many of us who believe that despite our very strong differences with the Soviet Union about how to govern, we have mutual interests in reaching agreements that will help preserve peace and allow us both to save money on armaments. Inevitably, their actions in this regard become obstacles in the way. With the best will in the world of people on all sides, those things are obstacles. So if humanity along is not enough reason for them to behave decently toward these people, their self-interest ought to be.

I want to yield now to a gentleman who, in his role with the Helsinki Commission, has been a leader for this House in trying to see that people across the world, whether they are the victims of oppression from the right or from the left, are given the basic human rights they ought to have. I yield to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. HOYER].

Mr. HOYER. Mr. Speaker, I rise to join my colleagues on the floor to speak out against the persecution of Dr. Andrei Sakharov and Dr. Elena Bonner. I would like to associate myself with the eloquent remarks of my distinguished colleague, Representative BARNEY FRANK, who has been a leader in this House on the issue of human rights. I also thank my good friend for taking this time so that other Members could speak out on the human rights policies of the Soviet Union. Representative FRANK's involvement has been not just today but throughout his career. It is a tribute to our Nation and to our democracy that so many come on the floor today in a spirit of unity and solidarity to focus upon the desire to help in any way we can to change the plight of so many individuals in the Soviet Union.

Mr. Speaker, in focusing on the plight of Dr. Andrei Sakharov and Dr. Elena Bonner, we hope to impress upon the Soviet Union's leaders, indeed the world community, that we are deeply concerned and that we have an obligation to raise our voices. We shall not cease to be concerned or to raise our voices until that day when the human rights and fundamental freedoms of all individuals are upheld by all governments whether that nation be the Soviet Union, Romania, or South Africa.

Clearly, Dr. Sakharov and Dr. Elena Bonner have been deprived of their human rights. They have been denied freedom of expression and have been isolated because of their political beliefs. As individuals committed to the human rights cause throughout their lives, Dr. Sakharov, and Dr. Elena Bonner deserve our support. Indeed, the support of the global community. In his book, "Progress, Coexistence and Intellectual Freedom," Dr. Sakharov explains that:

> Intellectual freedom is essential to human society—freedom to obtain and distribute information, freedom for open-minded and unfearing debate and freedom from pressure by officialdom and prejudices. Such a trinity of freedom of thought is the only guarantee against the infection of people by mass myths, which, in the hands of treacherous hyprocrites and demagogues, can be transformed into bloody dictatorship.

The freedoms Dr. Sakharov extols are those which are guaranteed by the Helsinki Final Act, to which the Soviet Union is a signatory. Article VII of the accords specifically ensures freedom of thought, opinion, and expression. Today, the Soviet Union continues to disregard the standards set forth in the Helsinki Final Act and to trample upon the political and civil freedoms of its citizens. Over the past few years, hundreds of prisoners of conscience have been silenced and isolated in the gulag and elsewhere. Emigration has been brought to a halt. Helsinki monitors are repressed within the Soviet Union and denied fundamental freedoms.

Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to join my good friend and respected colleague. Representative BARNEY FRANK, in cosponsoring the concurrent resolution which calls upon the President to protest the blatant and repeated violations of the Sakharovs' rights by the Soviet authorities and to call upon all other signatory nations of the Final Act to join in such protests.

Again, Mr. Speaker, I want to thank my learned colleague for bringing this important issue to the floor today. As the United States and Soviet Union search for areas of mutual concern in which agreement and cooperation are sought, let the Soviets know that the issue of human rights is inextricably intertwined with United States foreign policy.

Mr. FRANK. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Maryland for his leadership. The gentleman's leadership on the Helsinki Commission has been important, and as I said, the gentleman is one of those who understands that our ability to fight for the human rights of people being mistreated in the Soviet Union depends on our sensitivity to racism at home and to oppression anywhere else, whether it is a rightwing regime or a Communist regime. We have got to be absolutely evenhanded in our insistence on human rights if we are to have the moral force that we need.

Mr. Speaker, I am about to conclude. I want to thank those who participated by sending in remarks and orally here today.

I want to conclude again by noting what seems to me to be the important fact, that we deal today with the memory of Martin Luther King and with the legacy that he left this Nation of insisting that we continue to confront racism and economic injustice and inhumanity.

As I said, thanks in part to him substantially, we are a lot better than we used to be, but we have a considerable way to go. Many of us feel that we have been slipping backward rather than forward these past few years, so it is an important day to rededicate ourselves, not just to some vague concept of Martin Luther King, the great man, but to the very specific concept of Martin Luther King, the opponent of racism, the fighter for economic justice, the opponent of excessive militarism, the individual who fought for making human rights very real here as well as elsewhere in the world, and simultaneously we hope that before too much longer Andrei Sakharov and Yelena Bonner will be released by the Soviet Union from the inhumane and oppressive imprisonment that has been so unjustly visited upon them. These people deserve to be honored.

I guess I would hope we would see a day not too far off, perhaps it is dream time, when a Martin Luther King is not only honored in this country after his death, but people who advocate the kind of bold assault on injustice that he advocated are fully appreciated during their lives and simultaneously that we may see a day when the Soviet Union would emulate us by celebrating their Nobel Prize winner and celebrating an individual who did them the great service that Martin Luther King did, pointing out exactly where we had gone wrong.

Mr. Speaker, I am very delighted now as I prepare to step aside, to yield to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONYERS].

Mr. CONYERS. Mr. Speaker, I could not resist before the gentleman leaves the well to add my word of commendation not only the appropriateness of the conjunction of the two special orders today, but to the gentleman personally for his services in the House and on the Judiciary Committee which the gentleman and I are privileged to serve where we work on civil rights activities, many of which were areas that out of Dr. King's work came the legislation that was so historic in 1964 and 1965.

I may say, as we all know and appreciate, the gentleman from Massachusetts is eloquent, throughful, and right on the mark as always. I thank the gentleman for his excellent work here today in leading this discussion.

Mr. FRANK. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Michigan. It means a great deal to me, given his own record of commitment on some of these very tough issues, to have him say that and I am confident that he is going to give others of our colleagues, the gentleman from Virginia who has been waiting very patiently, a chance to pay his tribute to the principles of Dr. Martin Luther King and others a chance to continue his work.

Mr. COYNE. Mr. Speaker, today I rise to express my strong support for this resolution introduced by Congressman FRANK. This bill expresses the sense of the Congress that while the Soviet authorities are to be commended for allowing Elena Bonner to visit the United State for medical treatment, the Soviet Union is obligated under several international agreements to extend the rights of freedom of expression, of movement, of association, and of communication, to her, and to her husband, Andrei Sakharov.

We all know that the Soviet Government is a signatory to many international treaties relating to human rights. One of these agreements to which the Soviets are committed is the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, which states that "everyone should be free to leave any country, including his own" (article 12(2)). The final act of the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe provides that each of the "participating states will respect human rights and fundamental freedoms, including the freedom of thought and conscience." The Universal Declaration of Human Rights also guarantees to all the rights of freedom of thought, expression, religion, opinion, and conscience.

So why are we here today? Partly, to express our appreciation to the Soviets for having the decency to allow Elena Bonner to leave, temporarily, the Soviet Union so that she may receive much needed medical treatment. The Soviet Government was kind enough to grant this exit visa to Ms. Bonner. Aside from this, and other recent actions, the Soviet Union's track record on human rights is deplorable.

Last year, Soviet President Gorbachev wished to establish a new image for the Soviet Union: an image that was different from that held by its critics in the West. Mr. Gorbachev captured the attention of the world with his ideas on improving East-West relations. We heard of his plans for arms reduction, of a renewed interest in cultural exchanges with the West, and of the upcoming summit meeting with French President Mitterand and President Reagan.

The Soviet image would have to be improved before these meetings took place. Suddenly, the world witnessed events which had become rare in recent times: Soviet disidents were being allowed to leave the country, finally gaining the freedom that they desired for so long. Many of these victims were reunited with spouses from whom they had been separated for many years.

Then came news from the Soviet Union that Elena Bonner, one of the most famous dissidents, would be granted a temporary exit visa, so that she might receive medical treatment.

By these actions, should we conclude that the Soviet Government has had a change of heart regarding human rights? I think not. The Soviet's recent actions served the purpose of lessening the hard-line, critical image that the West held of them. And these recent actions are probably temporary, at best.

Although the Soviet Constitution formally provides for all internationally recognized human rights, including civil and political rights, these actions must be carried out with the "interests of the people and the strengthening and development of the socialist system." Outside of this, there is little tolerance of actions and practices incompatible with continued Communist Party control. The suppression of these constitutionally guaranteed rights are accomplished under the auspices of a number of broadly worded provisions stating that constitutional rights may not be exercised in a manner contrary to the "interests of the society" as defined by the party. In practice, the government does not tolerate deviant behavior and does not hesitate to imprison persons for exercising basic human rights.

Elena Bonner is one of these dissidents. So is her husband, Andrei Sakharov. According to the Soviet Government, both individuals went against what was in the interest of the Soviet system.

At one time, Sakharov was one of the most notable Soviet citizens. Sakharov was instrumental in his work and assistance in developing the first atomic weapon for the Soviet Union. For this, he was elected to the Soviet Academy of Sciences.

His work in the field of developing nuclear weapons was done with a hope that it would ultimately rid the world of these weapons. When Sakharov's vision did not come to fruition, he began to speak out against the Soviets and called for an end of the development of nuclear arms. But his call went unheard.

Sakharov then openly criticized the Soviets for other acts, and began to work for human rights by assisting the many Soviet Jews detained in the U.S.S.R. For this work, he was awarded the Nobel Peace Prize in 1975—an award which stunned and outraged the Soviet Government. But when Sakharov condemned the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan, in 1979, as an outright violation of international law, the Soviet Government responded by arresting Sakharov for his deviant behavior.

Today, Andrei Sakharov lives in exile, confined to a state-controlled apartment in Gorki. He has absolutely no private life: Sakharov is not allowed to travel, he is refused contact with the outside world. Andrei Sakharov is not permitted visitors, and has not seen his family for years. Only through Elena Bonner, does the free world know of his condition, and, only through her does he remain in touch with the outside.

For the Soviets, Sakharov's confinement is a solution to their problem. If Sakharov is quarantined the Soviets do not have to deal with his actions against the Communist system.

But we in the United States shall not forget Andrei Sakharov, Elena Bonner, and the thousands of other victims of the Soviet Government for which they fight for and represent. As long as repression continues, as long as basic human rights are ignored and violated, as long as one dissident remains in the Soviet Union, Sakharov will still exist. The United States must continue, with the help of all civilized nations in the world, to fight for the human rights of people everywhere.

Mr. FASCELL. I am honored to join our colleagues today in observing the sixth anniversary of the forced exile of a true champion for human rights, Dr. Andrei Sakharov. I commend our colleague, BARNEY FRANK, for organizing this special order to once again draw public attention to the plight of Dr. Sakharov and his family.

It is fitting that we discuss the fate of Dr. Sakharov today, 1 day after our Nation officially commemorated for the first time the birthday of Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr., for Dr. King and Dr. Sakharov have much in common. Both men received the Nobel Prize for Peace, both became eloquent advocates for freedom and against oppression, and both believed firmly in the inherent linkage between respect for human rights and the achievement of genuine and lasting peace. Dr. King and Dr. Sakharov also shared a deep compassion for their fellow man. Dr. King once said that "injustice anywhere is a threat to justice everywhere." I have no doubt that, if this great man were alive today, he would join us in protesting the continued mistreatment of Dr. Sakharov by Soviet authorities.

Mr. Speaker, the decision by Soviet authorities to allow Dr. Sakharov's wife, Elena Bonner, to travel to the United States to visit her children and to receive much-needed medical treatment was most welcome and encouraging. I urge the Soviet leadership to follow this step by restoring to Dr. Sakharov his full rights including the right to freedom of movement both within the Soviet Union and abroad. By allowing Dr. Sakharov to return to his home in Moscow, to maintain contact with his family and friends, to pursue his scientific work and, if he wishes, to visit with his relatives in the United States or accept one of the many invitations he has received to teach abroad, the Soviet Union will be fulfilling its international commitments.

Such actions would demonstrate to the world Soviet fidelity to the Helsinki Final Act, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, and the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights. Without such steps, the Soviet authorities will continue to earn the mistrust and contempt of men and women of good will everywhere.

As we move toward expanding ties between the United States and the Soviet Union, it must not be forgotten that we in the Congress consider improvements in the Soviet human rights record to be an essential element of progress in our bilateral relationship. The Soviet Government now has before it an excellent opportunity to address our concerns. I urge the Soviet leadership to end the 6-year-long ordeal of Dr. Sakharov and his family.

Mr. SMITH of Florida. Mr. Speaker, tomorrow is the sixth anniversary of Andrei Sakharov's arrest and exile to the closed city of Gorki, U.S.S.R. Dr. Sakharov, a human rights activist and Nobel Peace Prize recipient has showed the world tremendous courage and tenacity in his personal struggle for world peace. As a dissident he has protested Soviet policies, wrote extensively for publications critical of the Soviet state, and attended political trials on behalf of all Soviet political prisoners.

Soviet officials ignored him hoping he would concentrate on science and not politics. When he condemned the Soviet state in late December 1979 for the invasion of Afghanistan as a violation of international law, he was exiled to Gorki without officially being charged and without the pretense of a trial. His case has received international attention, and his name is synonymous with the basic denial of human rights.

The Soviet Union signed the Helsinki Final Act 10 years ago. Instead of complying to the provisions, the Soviet officials violate it constantly. Today, we rise to pay special tribute to this man and hundreds and thousands of men like him. These men live in a society where persecution, exile, surveillance, and imprisonment is a known way of Soviet life.

Dr. Sakharov's wife Dr. Yelena Bonner has also suffered hardship. Only recently did Soviet officials allow her to leave the Soviet Union to receive proper medical treatment. The time has come to end this inhumane treatment of people like Dr. Andrei Sakharov and Dr. Yelena Bonner who have committed no crimes, except expressing the freedom of speech.

Mr. LANTOS. Mr. Speaker, I am proud to join our colleague, BARNEY FRANK, and other Members of the House in today's special order calling attention to Dr. Andrei Sakharov's continued exile.

Tomorrow marks the sixth anniversary of Dr. Sakharov's exile. This virtual imprisonment of Dr. Sakharov strikes a tragic blow to the cause of human rights in the Soviet Union and silences one of the world's strongest advocates for human rights and peace. As one of the founders of the Moscow Helsinki Monitor Group, Dr. Sakharov spoke out courageously on behalf of individuals who were persecuted because of their religion, their desire to emigrate in accordance with the Helsinki Final Act, or their expression of viewpoints counter to the official government line.

In preparing for this special order, I reviewed an interview which Dr. Sakharov gave to the Washington Post in 1980, in which he answered a question on international terrorism. His answer is still as valid today as it was then:

Among the problems which trouble me is the irrationality of international terrorism. No matter how high the aims predicated by terrorists (and often there are no such justifications), their activities are always criminal, always destructive, throwing humankind back to a time of lawlessness and chaos, provoking internal and international complications, contradicting the goals of peace and progress . . . I hope that people all over the world will understand the deadly nature of terrorism whatever its goals and will deprive them of any kind of support, even the most passive, and surround them with a wall of condemnation.

It is an unspeakable tragedy that Dr. Sakharov fell victim to another sort of terrorism: internal suppression. One of the great men of our generation—a man with a remarkable combination of intellectual curiosity, moral vision, and outspoken leadership—has been stifled by the country which should herald him for his scientific accomplishments, because he dared to question the Soviet Union's treatment of its dissidents and minorities, and because he was bold enough to criticize the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan.

We live in a dangerous age, made more dangerous by the nuclear missiles pointed at each of our countries, and by the barbaric acts of international terrorists. It is because of this dangerous climate that I call on the Soviet Union to release Andrei Sakharov from internal exile, and allow him to join the ranks of those of us who are searching for a peaceful and just solution to the major problems facing this world.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to join my colleagues in wishing Dr. Sakharov's extraordinarily courageous wife, Yelena Bonner, a swift return to good health following her operation in Boston. She complemented Dr. Sakharov's devotion to human rights and freedom with a corresponding personal commitment and has been an inspiration to all of us here in Congress.

Mr. SWIFT. Mr. Speaker, Dr. Andrei Sakharov and his wife Dr. Yelena Bonner reside in exile in the town of Gorki, which is a drab town 250 miles east of Moscow. It is closed to Westerners. Their apartment is bugged. Dr. Sakharov, who has a weak heart, has to carry his papers around with him in a 30 pound bag since the KGB periodically ransacks their house. But even with these hardships, he hasn't suffered the fate of less well-known dissidents who are now dead or serving long terms in Soviet labor camps. Dr. Sakharov's efforts have succeeded in granting his wife a visit to the West for medical reasons. The fact is that he and his wife live by their reputation. As he himself has said, "It is impossible to foresee what awaits us. Our only protection is the spotlight of public attention on our fate by friends around the world."

Dr. Sakharov's writings on achieving peace and his scientific accomplishments are a contradiction to many. He is one of the primary contributors to the Soviet's H-bomb and the winner of the Nobel Peace Prize in 1975. He is critical of both the zealous pacificist and the over-militarized military. He asks scientists to assess the harmful risks inherent in their work. He is an intellectual who criticizes the leftist thinking in the West. He eloquently cries out for human rights while being forced to live in the middle of a totalitarian country. He stresses the "absolute inadmissibility of nuclear war," yet calls for the West to maintain its military strength in the path toward nuclear disarmament.

The United States and U.S.S.R. are similarly caught in contradictory situations. Both have more weapon power than anyone could imagine they would need for a military victory, yet victory for either would result in mutual suicide. The leaders of both the United States and U.S.S.R. have recently made overtures for eliminating nuclear weapons and proposals for decreasing them. Their approaches almost begin to sound like the cautious and realistic plans set forth by Dr. Sakharov. As stated by Edward Lozansky in a recent book he edited, "Andrei Sakharov and Peace": "In addition to our respect and admiration for Sakharov, we also intuitively understand that we need him perhaps even more than he needs us."

Mr. BERMAN. Mr. Speaker, it is now 6 years since the U.S.S.R. officially silenced Dr. Andrei Sakharov. The Nobel Peace Prize recipient, and perhaps the Soviet Union's most brilliant scientist, became the international symbol of the human rights struggle when he was arrested and exiled to the closed city of Gorki. No formal charge was ever issued.

Until 1984, Yelena Bonner, Sakharov's wife, was his only link to the outside world. She too was then confined to Gorki. For the past several years we have heard only reports of Dr. Sakharov's hunger strikes, the subsequent forced feedings, and the deteriorating health of he and his wife. Occasionally, forged messages are sent from Gorki futilely attempting to convince the world that the Sakharov's are not being brutalized.

After years of pressure from the West and Dr. Sakharov's recent 6-month hunger strike, Mrs. Bonner was allowed to leave the U.S.S.R. to travel to the West for medical treatment. That Mrs. Bonner has finally received medical care she has desperately needed for several years is a welcome victory. Although we are grateful that Mrs. Bonner will benefit, we cannot ignore that the "privilege" she has been granted after years of struggle is in reality one of the elemental rights guaranteed by the Helsinki accords.

I am pleased to join my colleague, Mr. Frank, in today's special order calling for freedom for Dr. Andrei Sakharov and Yelena Bonner. I strongly support Congressman FRANK's resolution expressing the sense of the Congress that the Sakharov's be allowed to exercise the rights guaranteed them by the Helsinki accords.

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to commend the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. FRANK] for calling this special order today and join with him in strong support of the resolution expressing the sense of Congress that Andrei Sakharov and his wife, Yelena Bonner should be allowed to exercise their freedoms of expression and movement guaranteed them by the Helsinki Final Act.

Mr. Speaker, Andrei Sakharov, a world renowned physicist and "father of the Soviet H-bomb" once viewed the United States and the West as implacable adversaries. Nikita Khruschev once described Sakharov as a "crystal of morality." But in 1968, Sakharov broke with the Moscow leadership over questions of oppression, censorship, economic planning, and arms control. He was awarded the 1975 Nobel Peace Prize for his leadership in the fight for Soviet observance of its human rights commitments.

Although, once praised by Soviet leaders for his contributions to Russian society, 6 years ago Andrei Sakharov was arrested without formal charge and today, still remains in internal exile in the Soviet city of Gorki.

The struggle of the Sakharov family is not easy to understand. It has been only recently that Soviet authorities gave Yelena Bonner permission to travel to the West to seek medical treatment. However, for years the Sakharovs, both suffering from poor health, were continuously denied medical attention and the Sakharov children have had frequent difficulty communicating directly with their parents. Although the Soviets may be attempting to appease many of its critics by allowing Yelena Bonner to come to the West on a temporary visa, we cannot or will not be satisfied until Yelena Bonner and her husband are living together in freedom permanently.

Yet, Andrei Sakharov, isolated seriously ill, harassed by authorities, and without the companionship of those who love him, continues to advocate freedom of emigration, amnesty for all prisoners of conscience, and other rights set forth in the 1975 Helsinki Final Act and other human rights documents. Dr. Sakharov commands the admiration for his courage and he will never be abandoned by those who cherish freedom.

For years Yelena Bonner suffered from a campaign of slander and from intense pressure exerted on her, as well as her children and her grandchildren. When her children and their families left the Soviet Union, the separation and distance of the family added to her pain, while the whole responsibility of her husband's actions, as well as the distance between Moscow and Gorki, contributed to her struggle. Hunger strikes by Sakharov and Bonner demonstrating their commitment to human rights were thorns in the sides of the Soviet authorities and added to the pressure of Yelena Bonner's deteriorating health. In 1983, Bonner, too was confined to Gorki and placed under investigation for "defaming the Soviet state."

The Sakharovs have become a symbol to all the brave individuals known and unknown, who dare to assert the calls of conscience against the whims of Soviet power. Yelena Bonner's presence in the West cannot be fully celebrated until she can remain here permanently or until her husband is allowed to join her.

People throughout the world cannot understand why the Soviets continue to punish independently minded people by cruelly persecuting their own citizens who dare to speak out. If a system of government cannot tolerate criticism, it is obviously a system that will ultimately fail.

We all must join together and continue to call for freedom until the persecution of Andrei Sakharov, Yelena Bonner, and the thousands of other individuals whose rights are being violated by the Soviet Government is ended.

Mr. BOLAND. Mr. Speaker, I want to commend my colleague from Massachusetts, Mr. FRANK, for reserving this time to allow Members of this body to voice their indignation over the treatment the Government of the Soviet Union accords to certain of its citizens. I also want to express my support for Mr. FRANK's resolution expressing the sense of Congress that Andrei Sakharov and his wife Yelena Bonner should be allowed to exercise the rights guaranteed them by the Helsinki accord.

Tomorrow marks the sixth anniversary of Dr. Sakharov's arrest and subsequent exile to the city of Gorki. Four different leaders have served in the Soviet Union since Dr. Sakharov has been imprisoned, and each leader has refused to release him. For 6 long years Dr. Sakharov has had to deal with improper medical care, little communication with his family, and inhumane treatment.

This resolution is also on behalf of the thousands of Soviet Jews who have been denied emigration from a country which punishes them for their religious beliefs and belittles their values. This is a chance to recognize and remember those who are imprisoned, their families, and so many others who suffer from separation and anxiety for their loved ones who have sought permission to emigrate.

Day in and day out the Government of the Soviet Union denies the rights of Jews and others to practice their faith, and subjects them to physical and psychological harassment, beatings, imprisonment, and confinement. This treatment flagrantly violates international obligations set forth in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, and the Helsinki Final Act. This behavior must not go unchalleged by those governments and societies which do honor their obligations to respect human rights under those documents.

People all over the world must be reminded of the plight of the Soviet Jews. The conditions under which they must live are totally unacceptable. The efforts of those in this Chamber, and the efforts of all concerned Americans, to call attention to those conditions are essential means of assisting the courageous Jewish men, women, and children of the Soviet Union. It is our vocal concern that provides them with the encouragement, and the confirmation of the justness of their cause, which allows them to go on. I am pleased to renew that call today and in so doing to serve notice that our voices will not be stilled until our protests succeed.

Mr. FLORIO. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to join my colleague, Congressman BARNEY FRANK of Massachusetts, in his special order on behalf of Yelena Bonner, the courageous wife of Nobel Laureate Dr. Andrei Sakharov. January not only marks the sixth anniversary of Dr. Sakharov's exile in Gorky, but also signals several fortunate developments in the Sakharov's long battle for human rights and freedom in the Soviet Union.

For a number of years, Yelena Bonner and Andrei Sakharov have become a symbol of the unending struggle for the right to live, speak, and think freely in a country where these fundamental rights are routinely stifled. Both suffering from illness, they have nevertheless continued the fight for the right to live where they choose and exercise their religious and political beliefs.

Yelena Bonner has spent years requesting permission to leave the Soviet Union to seek medical care for her illness. For years, the Soviet authorities denied her this humanitarian right, despite numerous hunger strikes by Dr. Sakharov, and constant pressure from nations and individuals concerned with this unwarranted repression of human rights.

After years of pressure, the dreams of the Sakharovs were partially realized on October 23, 1985, when Soviet authorities indicated to Dr. Sakharov that they would grant Yelena Bonner the long-sought permission to exit the Soviet Union. On that day, Dr. Sakharov ended his latest hunger strike which had lasted for 6 months. On December 2, 1985, Yelena Bonner left the Soviet Union and is currently being treated for her heart disease in a Boston hospital.

Dr. Sakharov, however, remains in exile, under strict surveillance. Calls from Yelena Bonner to her husband have been interrupted and Dr. Sakharov's true condition remains a mystery. I would like to join my colleagues in offering my support to Yelena Bonner for her efforts and in wishing her a speedy recovery. I hope that she and Dr. Sakharov will be reunited once again and will realize their dream—and the dream of the nations committed to the preservation of human rights—to live in peace and freedom. The very fact that Yelena Bonner was finally permitted to leave the Soviet Union and seek medical care in our Nation is a product of years of perserverance and pressure. It is only through constantly speaking out in defense of human rights that we will be able to achieve change.

Mr. FRANK. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

THE 1986 ELECTION YEAR MAILING RESTRICTIONS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. UDALL] is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. UDALL. Mr. Speaker, with the 1986 election year upon us, the House Commission on Congressional Mailing Standards wishes to remind Members of the House about the franking statutes, rules, and regulations governing mass mailings by candidates prior to elections.

Generally, Members of the House seeking reelection are prohibited from sending franked mass mailings during the 60-day period immediately before the date of any public election—whether primary, general, special, or runoff—in which the Member's name appears on the ballot.

Further, any Member who is a candidate for other public office may not frank mass mailings outside of the congressional district from which the Member was elected, beginning at the time the Member is certified for candidacy.

Members should ensure that staff persons responsible for mass mailings are knowledgeable concerning State election laws as they affect mailing privileges during the period prior to primary and general election periods. Members' staff seeking advisory opinions from the Commission must certify that, to the best of their knowledge, the frankability of the proposed mailing is not adversely affected by applicable State election laws.

Mr. Speaker, I cannot emphasize strongly enough the importance of compliance with these regulations. I urge my colleagues to unsure that their staffs are familiar with the statutes, Rules of the House, and pertinent regulations and guildelines governing the proper use of the franking privilege.

The Commission staff is ready to assist in every possible way.

A detailed explanation of the mass mailing provisions, along with a listing of cutoff dates for the congressional primaries in the various States, follows:

LIMITATIONS ON THE USE OF THE FRANK BY CANDIDATES FOR PUBLIC OFFICE

39 U.S.C. 3210(a)(6)(A) provides that, "It is the intent of Congress that a Member of, or Member-elect to, Congress may not mail any mass mailing as franked mail—

(i) if the mass mailing is mailed fewer than 60 days immediately before the date of any primary election or general election (whether regular, special or runoff) in which the Member is a candidate for reelection; or

(ii) in the case of a Member of, or Member-elect to, the House who is a candidate for any other public office, if the mass mailing—

(I) is prepared for delivery within any portion of the jurisdiction of or the area covered by the public office which is outside the area constituting the congressional district from which the Member or Member-elect was elected to; or

(II) is mailed fewer than 60 days immediately before the date of any primary election or general election (whether regular, special or runoff) in which the Member-elect is a candidate for any other public office.

Mailings made through the facilities of the Publications Distribution Service of the House of Representatives (House folding room) shall be deemed in compliance with this statute if such mailings are delivered to the House folding room not less than 62 days before the date of such election, with instructions for immediate dispatch.

DEFINITIONS

Mass mailings

Mass mailings are defined by law (39 U.S.C. 3210(a)(5)(D)) as newsletters and other similar mailings (including town meeting notices) of more than 500 pieces in which the content of the matter mailed is substantially identical. Mail matter is deemed to be a mass mailing when the total number of pieces exceeds 500, whether in a single mailing or in cumulative mailings during the 60-day period.

Candidate for election or reelection to the House of Representatives

For purposes of the subject statutes and regulations, a Member of or a Member-elect to the House of Representatives is deemed to be a candidate for public office at any election if his or her name appears anywhere on any official ballot to be used in a public election.

Candidate for "any other public office"

For the purpose of 39 U.S.C. 3210(a)(6)(A)(ii), "any other public office" means any local, State, or Federal office. (Examples: President, Governor, U.S. Senator, State Supreme Court Justice, State Senator, Assemblyman, etc.) "Candidate" means a Member who has qualified under State or local law for the official ballot in a primary, runoff, special, or general election, or who has been certified for candidacy by an appropriate State or local election official.

EXCEPTIONS

The subject statutes, rules, and regulations provide three exceptions to the mass mail prohibition prior to elections, as follows:

(i) mailings which are in direct response to inquiries or requests from the persons to whom the matter is mailed;

(ii) mailings to colleagues in Congress or to government officials (whether Federal, State, or local); and

(iii) mailings of news releases to the communications media.

The Commission believes the latter two exceptions are self-explanatory.

In application of the first exception, the Commission stresses the phrase "direct response to inquiries or requests." Therefore, response to a signed petition with a form or identical letter individually addressed to each of the signers of the petition is frankable. However, a follow-up letter to the same list of petitioners is not frankable under this section in that it would not be in direct response to an inquiry.

Similarly, follow-up letters to persons who had previously written and had been answered on a particular subject, if such letters by their form and volume constitute a mass mailing, are not frankable during the 60-day period prior to elections. Also, requests for questionnaire results or other material, when solicited by Members on questionnaire forms or newsletters, are not deemed to be in direct response to any inquiry or request.

The above restrictions on mass mailings by candidates do not apply to mass mailings by the chairman of any standing, select, joint or other official committees of the Congress, or subcommittee thereof, and which relate to the normal business of the committee. [39 U.S.C. 3210 (a)(6)(B)]

TIME OF MAILING

Processing by a postal facility

Mass mailings as defined under 39 U.S.C. 3210 (a)(5)(D) may not be mailed as franked mail by a Member of or a Member-elect to the House of Representatives when the same is mailed at or delivered to any postal facility other than the Publications Distribution Service of the House of Representatives, hereinafter referred to as the House folding room, less than 60 days immediately before the date of any primary or general election (whether regular, special, or runoff) in which such Member or Member-elect is a candidate for any public office.

Processing by the House folding room

Such mass mailings, if processed through the House folding room, shall be deemed to be in compliance with the subject rule and these regulations, if delivered to the House folding room, with instructions for immediate dispatch, not less than 62 days immediately before the date of any such election. In the case of mass mailings delivered to the House folding room prior to the 62 day cutoff period, the requirement of instructions for "immediate dispatch" may be modified to the extent that instructions are given for delivery of the mailing to the addressee not later than the 60th day immediately before the date of such election.

The House folding room shall issue a receipt, which shall specify the date and time of delivery and a brief description of the matter to be processed, to the Member at the time he or she delivers such mass mailings to the House folding room.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. CONYERS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent under special orders to address the House for 60 minutes at this time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

TRIBUTE TO DR. MARTIN LUTHER KING, JR.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONYERS], is recognized for 60 minutes.

Mr. CONYERS. Mr. Speaker, I yield to my colleague, the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SISISKY].

Mr. SISISKY. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Michigan. I do have a statement in honor of the holiday of Martin Luther King which I will insert into the RECORD after these remarks.

Mr. Speaker, in one sentence in my statement, it says that above all, Dr. King taught us to live a dream.

I am from Virginia, an original part of the South. I remember and I was going to tell the gentleman from Texas who stood in the well that some 7 months ago when I approached him as chairman of the Black Caucus and told him that a friend of mine, a gentleman with broad experience, a Senator in the Senate of Virginia that chaired some three committees in the Senate, major committees, and a lot of commissions, was going to run for statewide office in Virginia.

Dare we dream that this gentleman would ever get elected to a statewide office in my State? He did get elected and yesterday in a comment to a school group he gave full credit to Rev. Martin Luther King. Only because of his work would he be standing and presiding as President of the Senate of Virginia, only through this dream.

I would like to just leave with that and put my other comments in as part of the RECORD.

The dream is fulfilled and with that hopefully our democracy will be better served.

Mr. Speaker, yesterday America celebrated the first national holiday commemorating the birthday of the late Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. At the time of his death, Dr. King was just 39 years old. In those short 39 years, Dr. King stirred the conscience of a nation and changed America forever.

As a nation, we have traveled a great distance since that day in 1955 when Rosa Parks courageously refused to move to the back of the bus. The road has been long, it sometimes has been painful, but together, as a nation, we have made major strides toward equality for all peoples.

This celebration of the birthday of Dr. King recognizes not only the strength of his leadership and the courage of his commitment to human rights, but also his unique contribution to the fundamental principle that all people are created equal.

This day of remembrance will heighten the Nation's awareness that legal, economic, and social justice for all people must always be the cornerstone of our democracy.

The American Revolution would not be complete without the commemoration of the civil rights resolution.

Dr. King became the voice of a nonviolent civil rights movement and through his own life's example, symbolized what is right about America, what is most noble and what is the finest in our American heritage. He led marches and rallies, he challenged us and he inspired us through his commitment to his faith and by his commitment to the brotherhood of mankind.

But above all, Dr. King taught us to live the dream, the dream of freedom and justice, with a new pride in America and a determination to make her an even greater nation.

As a nation choose its heroes and its heroines, it interprets its history and shapes its destiny. The commemoration of the life and work of Dr. King will help this Nation realize its true destiny as the global model for democracy and social and economic justice for all.

Mr. CONYERS. Mr. Speaker, could I say to my colleague, the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SISISKY], that his remarks are deeply appreciated. We in this body know too well the difficulties with transition from the past to the present in the gentleman's State, its leaders and some of its citizens have undergone in this movement.

I cannot help but feel that the gentleman himself is in the vanguard of change, because he stands here in the well with many of us today as we reflect and celebrate the life and work and finally the legal holiday of the late Dr. Martin Luther King.

I know that the gentleman himself has a story to tell, and that he could reflect on all of the things that have come his way and happened to him as a result.

I am deeply appreciative and I know all of my colleagues are as I know all the men and women who supported the King holiday bill in this body are.

We think that Virginia now symbolizes the direction in which all America must go. It seems to me there may be a lesson there, because for a while, with all respect to the gentleman's great State, it was not thought of as a State that would go forward any time soon in terms of this movement toward total justice, and yet you now have a black man as Lieutenant Governor.

What happened to strike me is that it occurred so rapidly. It did not take a long time. There were no howls of pain or anguish imanating from Virginia. As a matter of fact, it happened so smoothly that some of us were not sure that it was happening. I know that the gentleman's role in that instance and many others, not recorded nor ever referred to in the House, places us all much closer together than any of us heretofore would have imagined.

So I thank the gentleman for his comments.

Mr. SISISKY. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman. I just would add, if the gentleman would yield for a moment, that I was at the inauguration. Of course, we had a black Lieutenant Governor, and I want you to know, a female Attorney General.

I have got to tell you that when they talked about the New Dominion, not the Old Dominion, I think most Virginians felt good about this. In fact, I know that they did. There was an upsurge of feelings and it did come across fast, but it did one thing more, an important thing I believe nationally, that a person was elected on the basis of his skill and experience and not the color of his skin or sex. To me that is the important lesson in Virginia and the dream of Martin Luther King I believe, as our Lieutenant Governor said, made it all possible.

I thank the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. CONYERS. Well, there were those nay-sayers who, many times during the 17 years between 1968 when I first introduced the Martin Luther King, Jr. holiday bill up to 1983, they rhetorically asked:

But this is a symbol. This doesn't represent any actual progress. This is not substantive. There is no appropriation connected. There are not programs. What difference does it make?

The gentleman has answered that question in at least one very thorough way and I thank him again.

Mr. Speaker, I yield to my friend and colleague and an original cosponsor of the Martin Luther King legislation, the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. HOYER].

Mr. HOYER. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding. Again I reiterate how proud I was to join him as an original sponsor in 1982 and 1983 and to follow the gentleman's leadership to make a reality of the national observance of the birthday of Martin Luther King, Jr., that this Nation first undertook yesterday.

I think it also is very appropriate that the gentleman has taken this special order because of the fact that shortly following the tragic death on April 4, 1968, of Martin Luther King, Jr., it was the gentleman in the well, JOHN CONYERS, a Member of Congress from Michigan, relatively new to the Congress, who took the leadership on the King holiday proposal, along with a Member of the Senate from Massachusetts, Edward Brooke.

They said that the contributions made by Dr. Martin Luther King in the approximately 12½ years of his public ministry warranted that recognition. That period began December 1, 1955, when Rosa Parks said, "I am a human being and deserve to be accorded the dignity of every other human being." She said to herself and to the world, really, "This seat was mine because I first got here. I am tired. I have worked all day and I am going to stay in this seat."

As a result, that incident brought forth the leadership of Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. It could have been just another one of hundreds, and indeed thousands of individual attempts to stand up for individual dignity and say:

I am a child of God, too, and deserving of the respect and the equal protection of the laws that this nation promises, supposedly, to all its citizens.

We know that following that event, within 5 days—4 days, really, by December 5, the Montgomery Improvement Association had been formed and had unanimously selected Martin Luther King, Jr. to be its president. In the 12½ years between that date and April 4, 1968, when he was taken from us, he became the greatest civil rights leader. Shortly after his death, Robert

F. Kennedy would be assassinated, before that John Fitzgerald Kennedy had been assassinated, Medgar Evers had been assassinated, Malcolm X had been assassinated. It was a violent era taking from us men of conscience and commitment.

JOHN CONYERS of Michigan, the gentleman in the well, my friend, began the King holiday effort and, John, I believe there were some who said that was just ceremonial, that it was not substantive, that it would not mean anything.

The gentleman's efforts, of course, were successful. He kept the faith over those many, many years, some 14 years that the gentleman fought that battle.

I can say, and I think probably thousands of others have told the gentleman or will tell him, that yesterday was a very special day in my community in Prince Georges County, MD, because of the work that he did to honor Martin Luther King, Jr.

Also, a bust of Dr. King was dedicated last week and now sits in the Rotunda, the first black man to be so honored by this country, late but never too late. I suggest that it is the direct result of the gentleman's effort, that we recognize the effort and the magnitude of the impact Dr. King had on this Nation and all the world.

In Prince Georges County yesterday, I am proud to tell my friend that we dedicated one of our major roadways to Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr.

The SCLC, which was the organization, of course, that he helped found, and was president of during the course of his lifetime, and which was really the focal point for most of the activity of the movement during his lifetime, held a number of events, where I was proud to speak. It was a time in Prince Georges County, it was a time in Maryland, it was a time in America, and indeed, a time throughout the world when as a result of this effort of yours, we focused not only on the dream, but as Jesse Jackson has so well pointed out, on the action that Martin Luther King instituted to carry out that dream. We focused on the committment to the continuing realization of that dream, the continuing need for reconciliation of our peoples in America.

We must remember also our continuing commitment to ensure adherence to human rights among our friends and foes. We talked about the Soviet Union in the past special order, and in the course of that special order, I talked about South Africa, our allies, who are nevertheless not according the majority of their citizens, 80 percent of their citizens, the dignity that they deserve as human beings. The holiday focused yesterday, and it is going to lead to a recommitment to the efforts that Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. led so well.

So I want to revise and extend my remarks specifically as they related to Dr. King, and also to again congratulate the gentleman in the well, JOHN CONYERS of the State of Michigan, who had the dream with Dr. Martin Luther King, and who kept the faith over some long and discouraging years where there were many naysayers indicating that the King holiday bill was not worth the effort. I want to say to you today as one Member of this body that what you and so many others accomplished, your spark of leadership, had a great effect in Prince Georges County, in our State, and throughout the world.

So I congratulate you as I rise to recognize one of the greatest leaders of this Nation and of the world. We have one other holiday accorded to an individual, our founder, Father of our Nation, George Washington, and then Martin Luther King, Jr. It is appropriate, a white man from Virginia and a black man from Atlanta, GA, both of whom gave so freely of themselves, of their character and of their intellect to make sure that this Nation did as our colleague from Washington, DC, WALTER FAUNTROY, observed, that this Nation would rise up and indeed make a reality of the creed of which it speaks, that all men are created equal and will in this Nation be treated that way.

So I am pleased that this gentleman from Michigan, one of the leaders of this effort, took this special order so that I could not only congratulate him, but with many recognize the immeasurable contribution made to this country and to this world by Martin Luther King, Jr.

Mr. Speaker, yesterday our Nation marked the first observation of the Federal holiday in honor of Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr.

There are only two Americans who are so honored. George Washington and Dr. King.

Why did we choose to honor Dr. King in this way when so many other great Americans do not have a special day set aside to remember their contributions to our country? Was our decision based on politics? No. It was based on principle. Dr. King led us closer to the fulfillment of the promise of America.

His was a voice of hope, of love, of peace and of justice, economic equity and reconciliation.

His message was based on his faith in God, in the morality of mankind and in the ultimate triumph of justice.

Our Nation's founders had a dream for America. For nearly 200 years, however, that dream which promised equality for all did not apply to every American.

It took the civil rights movement and its leader, Martin Luther King, Jr. to remind us of the dream. Dr. King called us, confronted us, and passionately pleaded for its realization. He led us to a better understanding of the dream.

His legacy in part lies in the Civil Rights Acts of the 1960's, which opened up new vistas to black Americans by requiring voting rights, access to public accommodations, fair housing and equal opportunity in employment and education.

Now, we are being asked to retreat from that legacy. But I feel confident that the Martin Luther King, Jr. holiday and the renewed commitment to the dream that this celebration has instilled in millions of Americans will halt that retreat.

The holiday served to remind us of the greatness of Dr. King, of the odds he faced, and of his successes. Surely we can meet the challenges of our day, if we take his leadership as our guide.

We have the opportunity to preach and practice reconciliation, openess and inclusion. This is not an easy process nor an unbending path, but it is the only moral course for our Nation.

The day before Martin Luther King, Jr. was killed, he told an audience in Memphis that he had been to the mountaintop, he had seen the promised land. Yes, he knew that he might not get there, but he assured his audience that the brotherhood of man would become a reality.

Our national holiday in honor of this great man has reminded us of his dream and his promise. It has renewed our determination and our spirit to march toward that goal.

Mr. CONYERS. I thank my colleague from Maryland [Mr. HOYER] whose eloquence humbles me, and who is very generous in his praise for me.

I happen to know that your participation in this measure across the years was not inconsiderable, and that he led in many of the activities in the House and in the other body which ultimately led to its passage when so many of our colleagues to that overwhelming vote that occurred on that day in 1983.

I am also impressed by your sense of history not simply civil rights history, but our history. Every year when I begin to think I have just about taken in all that I can, and that I have a fair knowledge of our historical underpinnings, each year reveals other rich information, sparkling jewels of history, incidents, facts that were not known to me all of these years before. So this education and reeducation of mine my colleagues and of America continues because this celebration is very important for this reason.

I do not know what forces lent their way upon you to help form the feelings that led to the energies that you contributed to the bill, sir, that I can tell you that in addition to Martin himself, there were two that were very close to me. First, there was Rosa Parks, whom you mentioned. Rosa Parks has been with me every step of my congressional career. Can you imagine what an enormous, incredible force to have a saintly person like this impacting upon an unpredictable and mercurial force like myself. It is the most important single thing that has ever happened to me, because her conduct, as she conducted herself before the world on that fateful day in Montgomery, AL, is precisely the way she acts and lives every day of her life. And for all who know her and have come in contact with her in the State of Michigan, she exudes that wonderful sense of respect and humbleness and love that only can come from a person as genuine as she.

The other force from Saginaw and Flint, MI, and Detroit is the incredible Stevie Wonder. Here on the Hill today, here at Kennedy Center yesterday, and by satellite all over the world. He who eschews politics, do not let him begin to tell you what little faith he has in the political force, but in the King era, in the King dynamism, once you understand, it reaches out and gets you, and something reached out and got Stevie Wonder. It not only led him to get us the critical support of many artists and entertainers, but it also hooked us into a new dimension of American, the young people, black and white, North and South, rich and poor, all who Stevie brought to these activities.

Then he began to join us in, as you recall, the marches and tributes every day in Washington, on January 15, without fail, and the gentleman was there he would come and join us with his presence, his family, his staff, his friends from the far West of our country. And I do not know how he did it. I wish I could remember. He thought it appropriate to strike off this tune that really turned the observance into a celebration. If anybody did that, it was Stevie Wonder when he wrote the words, and the lyrics to "Happy Birthday, Happy Birthday, Dr. Martin Luther King."

How can you make the celebration of a great man, violently taken from us at the bloom of his life, a cause for celebration? In Stevie Wonder lies the genius of that phenomenon.

Stevie Wonder did that. And as I used to come before these thousands of people with Stevie, everybody knew the words of the song, perhaps save the one Member who introduced the original legislation. I could not help but be thunderstruck by the importance and the significance of his contribution.

Between these forces, one from our State and one who migrated to our State, I was a man working under the forces, as it were. There was nothing but for me to elevate this to the highest of my legislative priorities. Many others have come forward. The contributions were bipartisan. The leadership in the House, the Republican leadership came forward. I want to say to you I am one who frequently disagrees with our Chief Executive, but I do not take away any credit from him on this celebration. He signed the bill, it was all we wanted him to do. He did not stand in the way of it. It was more than what I could expect from him.

So I am very pleased that we all stand here today having introduced the bill, having worked on the bill for many years and seen it come into law and seen the remarkable celebrations that have taken place across the United States.

We now see that there is a great outpouring of understanding and sympathy for the struggle for peace and justice in this country. In that regard, it seems to me that this holiday becomes one of our most important.

Who celebrates Martin Luther King's birthday? Well, first of all, those who understand Martin, those who loved Martin, those who struggled for peace and justice celebrate it.

But there are others who are now coming forward, some who are learning about Martin, some who are not sure if they yet agree with him, some who are not sure about propriety and significance of the civil rights struggle, which is understandable. Hopefully we are here, and the holiday stands to teach, to show, to demonstrate, to argue, and even debate this great, important movement in American history.

This question has been asked of me: But what about those white citizens who do not celebrate Martin Luther King's birthday? Are you not disturbed that there are not more of them there?

I would like my colleagues in the House to know that I am not disturbed because if there were no problem, there would have been no King. If there were no struggle, there would not be a need to observe his holiday.

We are here not by our word but by our deeds to teach those, to instruct those, not from some superior point of view but hopefully to impart to them the fact that the very blood and dynamism of our democracy are deeply tied into the premises and policies on which Dr. King worked, lived, and died.

So I am not afraid, disturbed, or troubled by the lack of those who chose not to observe this holiday. Instead, I am overjoyed by the millions of new people from all of our many States who have come forward to join with us in this celebration.

By our example in the Congress, by the citizens' examples who gave us the support that persuaded many Members to join with us in this remarkable activity, I am not in any doubt that as the years roll on, this celebration, the glitter, the glamor, the music, the television spectaculars will all recede away to the important work of the man who helped save America from a self-defeating path and who has received the highest honor that the American people can confer upon one of their own, a national holiday in his honor.

At this point in the RECORD I wish to insert the following:

[An advertisement from the Washington Post, Jan. 21, 1986]

A GOAL SET—A GOAL MET

I feel terribly blessed to know that the people of this country believe that peace and unity are important enough to celebrate in the manifestation of a national holiday for Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr.'s, birthday. I am also in debt to the Creator for allowing me to express my feelings of love for this man through the gift of a song, "Happy Birthday". It was then that I knew we were not alone in our desire for a celebration of these principles.

In reflecting on our experiences with a goal set and a goal met, the very process of achieving this national holiday has strengthened as well as challenged our commitment to peace, unity, and love. Many people, with many colors, ideals, histories, hopes, and aspirations, came together for a common goal.

To each person who withstood the elements of cold marches, I salute you. We shared that together.

To each signature on the millions of petitions, I applaud you. It was a monumental collective effort.

To each of the many unsolicited volunteers who contributed in every state and every city, I embrace you. It was your initiative and follow-through that made our efforts successful.

To all of my friends, my colleagues in the arts, my family, my staff, and well-wishers, I thank you for your support and patience. You know that's what friends are for.

It was our faith in this cause that sealed our solidarity, and it was our commitment to victory that allowed us to honor the principles of Dr. King, even when we were most challenged by those who were blind to our vision.

Now that we officially celebrate the birth of a man who has changed this country, never let anyone or anything steer us away from promoting unity, peace, and love in the name of Dr. King.

Our celebration of his birth is the acknowledgement of one of the Creator's most precious gifts to humanity. We must treasure it in our hearts and protect it in our deeds.

As a humble soldier in the army of love, I want to personally thank some of the legislative leadership who guided us through this process unscathed: The Honorable John Conyers, Jr., The Honorable Edward M. Kennedy, The Honorable Charles McC. Mathias, and The Honorable Katie Hall.

If I could name every name, hold every hand, touch every spirit that has ever helped in any way, I would. Please believe that my spirit embraces all of you, and that you are the sunshine of my life.

STEVLAND MORRIS,

"HAPPY BIRTHDAY 1986"

REVISED LYRICS FOR THE VICTORY

We knew it
Didn't make much sense
For anyone to be against
Or try to take offense
At a day
In your celebration
'Cause we

All knew in our minds
That there soon would be a time
That we would set aside

To show
Just how much we love you

So together we agreed
What could fit more perfectly
Than to have a world party
On the day you came to be

Happy birthday to ya
Happy birthday
Happy birthday to ya
Happy birthday

We just never understood
How a man who died for good
Could not have a day that would Be set aside
For his recognition

Because it should never be Just because some cannot see
The Dream as clear as we
That they should make it
Become an illusion

And we all know everything
That he stood for time will bring
For today our hearts can sing
Thanks to Martin Luther King

Happy birthday to ya
Happy birthday to ya
Happy birthday
Happy birthday to ya
Happy birthday

America now has a holiday
Let's spread his dream of unity
Throughout the world
Throughout the world

The time is overdue
For People like me and you
Who know the way to truth
Is love and unity
To ALL GOD'S CHILDREN
Let us share this great event
Where the whole day can be spent
In full remembrance
Of those who lived and died
For the oneness of all people

So let us all begin
We know that love can win
Let it out, don't hold it in Sing as loud as you can

We know the key to unity of all people. It was the dream that we had so long ago, that lives in all the hearts of people that believe in unity. We will make the dream become a reality. I know we will, because our hearts tell us so.

Happy birthday to ya
Happy birthday
Happy birthday to ya
Happy birthday to ya
Happy birthday
Happy birthday to ya
Happy birthday to ya
Happy birthday
Happy birthday to ya

Special thanks for all your help in these historic marches: Ofield Dukes, and Guy Draper.

Extra special thanks to Theresa D. Cropper whose legal talents and sensitive leadership not only helped to coordinate local and national human and economic resources in the organization of our marches, but also gave substantial input to the development of our legislative strategies and efforts.

I also extend my deep appreciation to Donna Brazile, who has steadfastly served as an advocate and preceptive liaison between our staff and the various community organizations ensuring our understanding of their concerns and interests in this successful realization of my dreams.

I now want to yield to my colleague from Missouri whose contribution and leadership in the successful passage of the bill was important, and in many other activities of which Dr. King would have readily identified himself.

The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. GEPHARDT].

Mr. GEPHARDT. I thank the gentleman for yielding some time and for taking this hour to spend in recognition and in refreshing all of our memories about the importance of what happened yesterday and, obviously, the importance of the great life of Dr. King.

I am very pleased that the House Democratic Caucus took a position last year in recommending that we finally move forward with the passage of this day as a national holiday in recognition of the contribution and the life of Dr. King. Then that action was followed by aggressive actions by the House of Representatives as a whole, both Republicans and Democrats, joining together and saying, "We want this to be a national holiday."

That followed by action in the Senate and then passage and signing of that bill by the President.

There was a controversy, I guess, for some time about whether or not this should be a national holiday. That is behind us. That decision has been made. We have decided, as a country, that this should be a national holiday. My belief is that what happened yesterday is the most eloquent testimony of all, of the wisdom of making this a national holiday. The reason I say that is not because of any one event but because of the overall education that went on yesterday for all of our people and the refreshing of our memories as to the significance and importance of the life of this great man. I think that this first day was simply a precursor of the importance that this national holiday will take on as it goes on year after year.

A few weeks ago, I had the chance to visit with Coretta King on a visit to the Martin Luther King Center for Nonviolent and Social Change in Atlanta. Mrs. King led us on a tour of the facility built to ensure the continuation of the people's dream, a martyr's philosophy, and a Nation's struggle.

Up until we had a national holiday yesterday, one could not have their memory refreshed without going to Atlanta. I hope many of our citizens will now go to Atlanta to visit the center. But if citizens are not able to do that, we now feel sure that they will, through the activities of this national holiday, be refreshed on an annual basis.

From my experience in being there and from what I learned yesterday, I think the overwhelming significance of this great man's life is the recognition that I think we all have from his life that one man can make a difference and that this Nation, as great as it is and as good as it is, can continually grow and be better and right our wrongs.

A quote from Dr. King that I think, among many great quotes, that I liked best was in his speech accepting the Nobel Peace Prize on December 11, 1964, when he said:

I refuse to accept the idea that the "isness" of man's present nature makes him morally incapable of reaching up for the "oughtness" that forever confronts him.

His entire life was about growing, and becoming, and reaching for goals.

Through his life, he inspired a whole nation to not be satisfied with "isness" but to be reaching for "oughtness" and because of his life, we were able to move away from "isness" and we were able to realize our goals and our dreams and his dreams. So I am thrilled at what happened yesterday because I think it gives us the opportunity every year to understand that we still have to fight "isness" and that we have to look for "oughtness." I commend the gentleman not only for taking this hour today but for his longtime leadership as a Member of Congress and American citizen in reminding all of us, urging all of us, to make this national holiday so that the significance of this man's life could be forever remembered.

Mr. CONYERS. I thank the gentleman from Missouri.

As head of the SCLC, he led peaceful demonstrations in Southern cities which were met with hostility and brutality. He was jailed several times. He was the object of an intense FBI investigation. But throughout all this, Dr. King continued to strictly observe and urge nonviolence as the best tool to win full civil rights for black Americans.

From Montgomery, AL, where, in 1955, he first captured the Nation's attention by leading a 381-day boycott of the bus system which brought an end to the policy of segregated seating, to Memphis, TN, 13 years later where he died fighting to improve the wages of black sanitation workers, Dr. King built a record of social and legal reforms that have improved the lives of millions of Americans.

I went South during 1964 to represent civil rights workers who were being arrested in nonviolent protests. When I arrived, I was confronted with a raging war between blacks and whites. Dr. King wanted it to be a nonviolent war, but the segregationists would not let it be one.

Shortly after his death in 1968, I introduced a bill in the U.S. House of Representatives seeking to honor Dr. King by designating his birthday, January 15, as a national holiday. I continued to introduce such a bill in each subsequent session of Congress until H.R. 3706 was signed into law by President Reagan on November 2, 1983 (P.L. 98-144). Beginning in 1986, the third Monday of January will be celebrated as a Federal holiday in honor of Dr. King.

No American more fully deserves such commemoration than Dr. King. No person ever dedicated his life so fully and tirelessly to the pursuit of equal rights for all Amerians. Dr. King gave his life for this struggle, and it remains for us to complete his work.

By celebrating Dr. King's birthday, we do more than pay tribute to a man—we honor the spirit of love and hope which guided his life and which should inspire our efforts on behalf of those who still do not enjoy full civil rights.

This holiday will enable us to preserve Dr. King's vision so that it may continue to serve as a guide for us today and as a measure of just how far we still have to go.

SOUTH AFRICA AND THE LEGACY OF DR. KING

During the last years of his life, Dr. King's dream had evolved into a vision of empowering all the powerless peoples of the world.

Martin Luther King spoke out against apartheid during his December 1965 speech on International Human Rights Day. On that occasion, he called for an international boycott against South Africa stating that:

To list the extensive economic relations of the great powers with South Africa is to suggest a potent nonviolent path. The international potential of nonviolence has never been employed * * *. The time has come to utilize nonviolence fully through a massive international boycott * * *. The time has come for an international alliance of peoples of all nations against racism.

Dr. King opened this speech with the following powerful statement:

Africa has been depicted for more than a century as the home of black cannibals and ignorant primitives. Despite volumes of facts contraverting this picture, the stereotype persists in books, motion pictures, and other media of communication.

Africa does have spectacular savages and brutes today, but they are not black. They are the sophisticated white rulers of South Africa who profess to be cultured, religious, and civilized, but whose conduct and philosophy stamp them unmistakably as modern-day barbarians.

In a December 1967 lecture for the Canadian Broadcasting Corp., he stated that the plight of the dispossessed in the United States was "inseparable from an international emergency which involves the poor, the dispossessed, and the exploited of the whole world."

In 1967, Dr. King spoke out against the American war in Vietnam. In his view, the war was draining the country of the resources that could have been used to eliminate some of the misery of poverty at home. His move to unite the antiwar and civil rights causes gained him harsh criticism, but Dr. King continued to speak out against the violence abroad as an ineffective way to solve human problems.

Now, almost 20 years later, the Free South Africa Movement, a broad-based coalition of conscience, was formed to protest the perpetration of violence by the apartheid regime in South Africa. The goal is to end the oppression of that country's black majority, which has been aided and abetted by the Reagan administration's policy of "constructive engagement."

The people of our country are marching in solidarity with our brothers and sisters in South Africa who live in constant fear and under daily violations of their human rights. Each day, more and more Americans are finding it difficult to reconcile these conditions with their own sense of morality.

The right to liberty, equality, and a representative government is as inalienable for the black majority population of South Africa as it is for black Americans here at home.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to close by sincerely thanking all of my colleagues in the House whose efforts, whose thoughtfulness, whose cosponsorship, whose contributions in ways that of course will never all be recorded, fed into what I think is a very important moment in American history. This may just have been that turning point that we were looking for. This may just be that little light through which many people can begin to re-review their perception of what our country and our people are all about. The potentials are thrilling; hopes ring and reverberate with the very being and memory of the man we honor. In his holiday now reposes the opportunity to teach, to show, to demonstrate to our people and to each other and to our Government itself what it can and ought to be.

So I thank all my colleagues who, from the day, April 8, 1968, forward, had a hand in this final, marvelous culmination. Some of the Members are not here any longer; some have fallen by the wayside; others have gone to other vocations and professions. But the story of the bill that we here all know better than anybody else is a wonderful, personal remembrance for me that I shall treasure throughout my entire career in this great body.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The 21st day of January being the day prescribed by Senate Joint Resolution 255 for the meeting of the 2d session of the 99th Congress, the Senate assembled in its Chamber at the Capitol, at 12 noon.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate will come to order. The Chaplain will now deliver the opening prayer.

PRAYER

The Chaplain, the Reverend Richard C. Halverson, D.D., offered the following prayer:

Let us pray.

Trust in the Lord with all thine heart; and lean not unto thine own understanding. In all thy ways acknowledge Him, and He shall direct thy paths.—Proverbs 3:5-6.

Gracious God, our Father, thank You for the safe return of the Senators and their families, for the rest, relaxation and family togetherness, for the work accomplished and the opportunity to be refreshed for the months ahead.

And we thank You for the recovery of Senator CHILES and his renewal of strength. You know, Lord, that Congress confronts a monumental task these next 8 months which will test the wisest and best of human capacity. Infuse Your servants, the Senators, with the will to meet the challenge head-on, to give leadership which they alone can give, the wisdom to process complicated and conflicting data and the courage to do whatever must be done at whatever cost to themselves. Enable the Senators to make these next 8 months a period of unprecedented and significant legislation which will prove false the prognostication of the cynics and the pessimism of self-appointed detractors. In the name of the Lord for Whom nothing is impossible. Amen.

CALL OF THE ROLL

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GORTON). The clerk will call the roll.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. A quorum is present.

The majority leader is recognized.

NOTIFICATION TO THE PRESIDENT

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I send a resolution to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be stated by title.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A resolution (S. Res. 295) informing the President of the United States that a quorum of each House is assembled.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There being no objection, the resolution (S. Res. 295) was considered and agreed to, as follows:

S. RES. 295

Resolved, That a committee consisting of two Senators be appointed to join such committee as may be appointed by the House of Representatives to wait upon the President of the United States and inform him that a quorum of each House is assembled and that the Congress is ready to receive any communication he may be pleased to make.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Pursuant to the resolution, the majority leader and the minority leader are appointed as members of the committee.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted.

Mr. BYRD. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

NOTIFICATION TO THE HOUSE

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I send a resolution to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be stated by title.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A resolution (S. Res. 296) informing the House of Representatives that a quorum of the Senate is assembled.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There being no objection, the resolution (S. Res. 296) was considered and agreed to, as follows:

S. RES. 296

Resolved, That the Secretary inform the House of Representatives that a quorum of the Senate is assembled and that the Senate is ready to proceed to business.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to.

Mr. BYRD. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

SCHEDULE

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I know there are a number of Senators who wish to make statements. Our side is having a policy luncheon. I have suggested to the distinguished minority leader that perhaps we might stand in recess until 2 p.m.

At that time, the two leaders will have 10 minutes each. Then there will be a special order, and there may be other statements. I know that the distinguished Senator from New York [Mr. MOYNIHAN] wants to make a brief statement.

Then we will attempt to proceed to the consideration of Conrail this afternoon. Failing that, we will file a cloture motion on the motion to proceed, with the vote to occur on Thursday.

RECESS UNTIL 2 P.M.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I move that the Senate stand in recess until 2 p.m.

The motion was agreed to, and at 12:55 p.m. The Senate recessed until 2 p.m.; whereupon, the Senate reassembled when called to order by the Presiding Officer [Mr. NICKLES].

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

Mr. PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ORDER OF PROCEDURE

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, let me indicate to my colleagues that the distinguished minority leader and I shall call the President and advise the President that we have a quorum present and we are prepared to do business. That call will not take over 5 or 10 minutes, then I hope that we might obtain unanimous consent to go to Conrail. There is no reason we should not get such consent. If there is objection, we shall try some other way.

FRESH START—OLD DREAMS

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I welcome my colleagues back to the Senate. I remind them that just about a month ago, we completed our work in the first session. We did not accomplish everything we sought, but there were a number of major achievements. I guess you could start from near the end of the session and go backward or forward. Passage of the 1985 farm bill, which not only makes major reforms in Federal farm policy, but gives farmers across the Nation a sense of certainty and continuity essential to their lives and livelihoods, is chief among them. Once again, the Senate passed landmark immigration legislation overhauling our antiquated and inadequate laws governing immigration policy. The Senate grappled with other large issues of the day—the nuclear arms race through the MX and SALT debate, aid to the Nicaraguan rebels, Mideast policy in the Jordanian arms sale, and apartheid in the South Africa economic sanctions bill. The Senate passed gun control legislation and important environmental measures—clean water, Superfund. And I hope that with the help of the House we can complete work on these bills this year.

At the end of the session we adopted the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings balanced budget amendment—a mechanism to force what we were seemingly unwilling to do of our own volition; reduce the Federal deficit. Whether Gramm-Rudman-Hollings was a brilliant stroke, or something else is a question still unanswered.

There are a lot of premature obituaries about this legislation. I suggest that we let it take its course and find out if it has the desired effect on the Congress. It may change the voting habits and patterns of many of us.

NO. 1 PRIORITY STILL DEFICIT REDUCTION

Even with the passage of Gramm-Rudman-Hollings, we left the basic issue—the No. 1 domestic issue—our Nation's fiscal policy—largely unresolved. So, once again, the Federal deficit will top our list of priorities. I may sound like a broken record—certainly my list of top 10 hits has not changed much. But no concern—whether foreign or domestic—is left untouched by what fiscal policy course this Government—this administration in concert with Congress—sets for the country.

Whether it is building or paring our nuclear arsenal, granting aid to our allies—in the Middle East, in Africa, in Central America—whether it is providing adequate health care to the elderly and the needy, economic support to the farmers who feed millions at home and abroad, what we do this year to dam the flow of Federal spending will shape our todays and echo through ours and our children's tomorrows.

Gramm-Rudman-Hollings is there to put our feet to the fire. But I for one do not see it as a substitute for the backbone and determination that will be necessary when the time comes to face up to the cold hard numbers of this year's budget and next year's.

Last spring 50 Members of the Senate—all but 1 of them Republican—stood up and were counted on the vote for the budget resolution. They showed that were willing to make decisions most politicians are reluctant, at best to make. This year, we'd like a little company, from every direction—across the aisle, up Pennsylvania Avenue. We want it to assure the continued peace and prosperity of this Nation.

I think it is fair to say we cannot have it both ways. We cannot decry Federal spending and talk about balancing the budget and all the other things that go with many great speeches made on the floor without making many difficult choices. It was not even too difficult to vote for Gramm-Rudman. The difficult part may come when those who voted for it and, hopefully, some who voted against it, will have to face up to specific alternative suggestions or whatever may come in the next few months.

Mr. President, the bottom line is, we have a lot of unfinished economic business on our platter for 1986. We must complete budget reconciliation for fiscal 1986, we must decide whether Congress will offer an alternative to the first round of Gramm-Rudman-Hollings cuts—and we must adopt a fiscal 1987 budget plan. Two related budget issues—the constitutional amendment to balance the budget and the line item veto, are also ripe for action.

I hope the constitutional amendment to balance the budget will be a bipartisan priority. I believe it is. I think there are Members on both sides who support that. To me that would correct a major flaw in Gramm-Rudman-Hollings. It cannot be changed by the will of Congress. A constitutional amendment is one thing, a statute.

I hope we would give the line item veto another shot this year. We had 58 votes for that bill last year. Hopefully, with the pressure on the fiscal side, some of our colleagues who voted no will changes their votes.

OTHER DOMESTIC ISSUES

Before adjourning last year the House passed a massive tax reform measure—now it is up to the Senate to work its will on tax reform. And I hope that we will be able to do that quickly, completing Senate action early this summer.

Tax reform is obviously a matter of the utmost importance to many of us and the President. The President indicated this morning it is still his No. 1 domestic priority. I think we have to and will address that very quickly starting this weekend. The distinguished chairman of the Finance Committee [Mr. PACKWOOD] and other Members will go off and think about the tax bill and see if they can reach some consensus.

The trade deficit, in my view, is one that needs attention. Hopefully again this will be bipartisan. There are a number of Senators on each side who cosponsored trade legislation. I expect before the year is out there will be at least one major trade bill on the floor, maybe more.

The U.S. trade deficit continues to widen. And so, we must decide this year what, if any legislative remedies should be prescribed for trade. As we start this session the Senate has two trade measures already on the calendar—one, S. 1404, is the Japanese unfair trade practices bill; the other, S. 942, the telecommunications bill. Both could be debated soon. And we need to move ahead on S. 1860, the bipartisan trade initiative that was introduced on November 20, 1985. This measure addresses a broad range of trade issues and attempts to strengthen our ability to eliminate barriers to U.S. exports by enhancing retaliatory authority and setting time limits for action on the part of the U.S. Government.

The first issue before the Senate this year will be the sale of Conrail. We also must decide whether or not to televise Senate floor actions. Hopefully, we can work out some agreement where we do not spend an inordinate amount of time debating whether we should have TV in the Senate. We have nominations, of course, a number of Federal judgeships and other nominees that we now believe we can move along on a regularly scheduled basis.

FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC AFFAIRS

Mr. President, as always, maintaining and strengthening our national security will be at the top of our agenda. There are some critical issues which we will be addressing within the first weeks of this new session.

At the end of the last session, I wrote to the chairmen of the Rules and Administration, Governmental Affairs and Intelligence Committees, asking that they take the lead in a comprehensive review of security procedures in the Senate.

I am reminded of the 20/20 show last week which demonstrated how easy it was to gain access to not only the Capitol but the Hart Building, for example. I missed that program. But apparently it would not be any great feat to get by the guards who are supposed to be protecting Members of the Senate. So I have asked the Sergeant at Arms to be a little more diligent in that area and he has given me a report on the steps that have been taken. We will also have other reports from the committee chairmen to ensure that we not have a repetition of the serious compromises of national security information which have occurred in the executive branch and in the House. The distinguished chairmen of those committees will be meeting this week to lay out their plans for the review. They will be coordinating their activities with the other interested committees and offices of the Senate, some of which are already working on this matter—especially the Foreign Relations and Armed Services Committees and the Offices of the Secretary of the Senate and the Sergeant at Arms. A report of the review, with recommendations, will be forthcoming within 60 days.

We also have some immediate challenges on the legislative calendar. Carrying over from the last session, we have an important package of counterterrorism aid to several Central American countries on which we must act soon. The authority for assistance to the democratic resistance forces in Nicaragua, the so-called Contras, expires at the end of March.

I believe there is more than enough sentiment to renew that authority in some form, perhaps some different form. The administration will probably have a proposal as indicated this morning by Secretary of State Shultz. My own resolution on Angola which I had hoped we could pass last session is also still pending. I may choose to revise and extend its provisions in light of developments in Angola during the recess.

I also hoped we would have voted on the Genocide Treaty last year. I raised that this morning in the presence of the President. The President, of course, wants action on the Genocide Convention. It is my hope that in the very near future we can bring that matter before the Senate.

The administration must decide on whether to go ahead, at this time, on its arms sale package for Jordan. Candidly, there is still great sentiment in this body to delay that sale, until such time as it can be shown clearly that it would encourage the Middle East peace process. The administration reportedly is also contemplating an arms sale to Saudi Arabia, although the scope and contents of the proposed sale are still unclear. Again, any such sale will be critically examined, to insure that it serves to enhance, not undermine, the prospects for peace in the Middle East.

The arms control talks in Geneva have resumed, with some new hope that, after last year's summit, the Soviets may be willing to put aside the propagandizing and rhetoric and engage in serious talks aimed at a balanced, verifiable arms control agreement. The arms control observer group will again be monitoring the Geneva talks for the Senate and will report to us periodically on developments.

Again, as I overheard the distinguished minority leader, we do have a bipartisan observers group initially suggested by the distinguished minority leader, and I too hope to have an opportunity to visit and participate in one of the observation sessions in Geneva sometime this year.

There is also a critical election in the Philippines scheduled for February 7, which will have an enormous impact on the future of that key ally. The Foreign Relations Committee, which will hold a hearing on the Philippines this week, will be recommending to us shortly whether it is in our interest to send Senate observers to that election.

On defense issues, our major challenge will be reconciling budgetary concerns with the needs of our national security. The distinguished chairman of the Armed Services Committee has set an ambitious schedule for developing an authorization bill by the early spring. Many of us will be involved in the difficult issues which will emerge: SDI, Asat, chemical weapons and readiness issues.

The question is how the budget process will affect defense spending. It is my view, if you look at the rather substantial cuts made in defense spending, that we are getting fairly close to a danger area if we continue to single out defense for 50 percent of any reductions that we may have. I guess what I am suggesting is that the budget process will work and hopefully even beyond that there may be a renewal of the bipartisan group working with the administration to see if we can resolve some of the budget conflicts long before the second round of automatic Gramm-Rudman reductions would trigger.

Simultaneously, the Armed Services Committee will also be working on a priority basis on a supplemental authorization bill to cover money appropriated in the continuing appropriations resolution, but not authorized; the matter of Defense Department reorganization; and the military retirement system. It is also, of course, impossible to ignore that this is 1986. It is an even-numbered year. In even-numbered years we have elections and there will be elections this year and the stakes are high, including who will control the Senate in the 100th Congress. But we are all adults, we understand the need at vote time for reelection and controlling the Senate, but it is my view that we can do our work and still do our best on this side—and they will do their best on that side—to retain and strengthen our control in the Senate. I assume Democrats will do the opposite. We understand that. But I would hope, notwithstanding the fact that 1986 is an election year, we can come to grips with a number of issues that were pending when we left, are pending on our return and hopefully will be concluded when we adjourn this October.

Mr. President, I will now accompany the minority leader to telephone—I will see if he has a dime—the President and tell him we have a quorum and are prepared to do business. In the meantime I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

THE UPCOMING SESSION

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, the Senate of course, begins the 2d session of the 99th Congress today. As it does so, a formidable number of complex issues confront our Nation. I hope Congress and the White House will be better able this year, than last year, to propose appropriate and creative solutions to the many problems that face the Nation, certainly the major ones.

Senate Democrats will continue to propose responsible, compassionate solutions to our national economic problems, to our budget crisis, and to our national security requirements.

I believe that there is no more pressing issue for the Congress and the President this year than finding a way to achieve a balanced budget in a way that protects the future of this country, protects the national security, provides for a strong defense, and requires every person who can possibly do so to shoulder his or her share of the burden. Many of the supporters of Gramm-Rudman are only now beginning to realize the consequences of the process they set in motion last year.

Our military capabilities, for instance, are to receive a cut of $13.1 billion in budget authority in this fiscal year because of the automatic sequestration process initiated by the Gramm-Rudman amendment predictably, the majority of those cuts are concentrated in the budget accounts most important to the daily combat readiness of our Armed Forces.

What is more, if Congress and the President cannot agree on an acceptable budget for the coming year, then we also face the prospect of even further reductions in defense before the year is out, perhaps as much as $50 to $70 billion in budget authority. A staggering reduction of that magnitude would force a fundamental reevaluation of our national security and our strategic position in the world. We simply will not have the money to fulfill our commitments in regard to treaties, commitments to our allies while maintaining our current level of preparedness.

Whatever the faults with that process—and I believe they are many—they do not relieve us of the obligation to continue to work toward a budget that represents our best judgment of the priorities this great country should have—not just the lowest common political denominator.

Last year, Democrats were in the forefront of offering responsible budget proposals that not only would achieve significant deficit reduction—more in fact than the proposals advanced by the administration and others—but which also would have encouraged investment in our future, promoted economic growth and competitiveness, kept our defenses second to none, and asked those corporations that pay no Federal income taxes to join the crusade to balance the budget and pay their fair share.

This year, with the sword of Gramm-Rudman hanging perilously over our heads, Democrats will continue to advance budget proposals that adhere to those basic principles. The working group that I have appointed under the leadership of Senators CHILES and HART is already hard at work.

They are preparing for the fundamental debate we will soon have on the fiscal priorities of this Government. I expect their proposals to embody the Democratic vision of the future, not only reducing budget deficits, but also creating the kind of nation that will be stronger tomorrow than it is today and one we will be proud to pass on to our children.

Perhaps the single most important component of the reordering of the Government's fiscal priorities must be reform of the Tax Code. In recent years, that Tax Code has treated the wealthy and major corporations far more generously than middle and lower income Americans. A proliferation of "tax preferences"—or loopholes—has provided favorable tax advantages to powerful individuals and some business interests.

And what of the average American? Well, he or she is left believing the system is unfair and unjust.

Democrats have always been in the forefront of tax reform. That leading position is typified by the work of Senator BRADLEY who, in addition to being one of the original proponents of tax reform, is also chairman of the working group that I have established on tax reform.

It is my hope that tax reform can be considered early in this session. The American people have labored for too long under a tax system that places a heavy burden on the middle-income family while allowing wealthy individuals and some profitable corporations to escape from paying their fair share.

We Democrats want to see a tax bill that will ease the burden on middle-income Americans, that will restore the competitiveness of the American economy, and will ensure that all Americans pay their fair share. And we will work for such a tax reform measure.

Mr. President, the Senate's agenda is not confined to the affairs within the 50 States. Relations with the Soviet Union again will be at the top of the Nation's international agenda. No one can reasonably doubt that the Soviets will remain anything other than our principal adversary. Nevertheless, we should make every effort to develop and deepen that relationship on more constructive tracks—particularly in the field of arms control in critical regions of the Third World.

Democrats in the Senate will do their part to further the cause of peace, international stability, education, and basic living conditions for all peoples, for these are goals and issues that go beyond party politics. In this vein, we fully support the President's efforts to establish a sound arms control agreement with the Soviets.

Senator DOLE and I have encouraged the arms control observer group to continue its work and to prepare for a visit to the negotiations early in the fourth round of the talks. I personally plan to accompany the group to one of the negotiating rounds later this year.

The recent Soviet offer of another comprehensive proposal at the outset of this current round is an encouraging sign, as is the welcome it received from the President. It will take serious and continued discussions on the whole complex of issues on the table at Geneva if the negotiators are to achieve a mutually acceptable treaty capable of Senate support ratification.

In addition, Mr. President, the second Reagan-Gorbachev summit meeting will take place in the United States sometime this year. I hope this will represent another opportunity to bring the American view of our relations with the Soviet Union directly to the Soviet people. The mutual exchange of views, by both President Reagan and General Secretary Gorbachev, beamed directly to both populations on New Year's Day this year, was a welcome event, unprecedented in our relationship.

I understand President Reagan's brief address was broadcast in its entirety to a vast segment of the Soviet population. President Reagan has great strengths as a public communicator and is highly effective in expressing his views on television. As well, we certainly welcome Mr. Gorbachev's interest in expressing his views to the American people. Additional initiatives of this type to keep this dialog going will certainly be in order over the course of this year.

The defense budget crunch will also affect other international relationships at it highlights the need of our allies, both in Europe and Japan, to shoulder a greater burden of our mutual defense requirements. The great reluctance of our allies to do so over the last few years portends difficult decisions for the Senate on this regard.

At the close of the first session, the majority leader indicated that we would deal with several important pieces of trade legislation in the second session. I am pleased that Senate Republicans are willing to join with Democrats in a call for action on trade. This administration presided over yet another record increase in our trade deficit in 1985, possibly reaching $140 to $150 billion.

In the face of this alarming trend, the administration continues to do nothing to define a realistic trade policy. The only action to date—an inconclusive effort to talk down the over valued dollar—came in response to Democratic initiatives.

But the administration offers no comprehensive plan of the kind Senate Democrats have demanded in the preliminary report of the trade policy working group chaired by Senator BENTSEN. We know what the administration is against. The President has denied the International Trade Commission's recommendations for import relief for the footwear and steel industries, and he has vetoed trade legislation relating to textiles—the legislation that has been so skillfully enacted on the part of the Senate by Senators HOLLINGS and THURMOND—that had broad bipartisan support. That is what the administration is against, but we still do not know what it is for when it comes to trade policy.

Senate Democrats are prepared to work hard to continue to urge the administration towards a comprehensive, realistic approach to trade policy. The Trade Policy Act (S. 1837), offered by Senator BENTSEN on behalf of all Senate Democrats, is but one example. There are others, and there will be others.

The time for waiting and hoping for administration leadership on the trade front is long past. We are prepared to move forward, and we are pleased to know we will have the opportunity to do so.

Important as the work on the budget and tax reform will be, it must not divert the Senate from its legislative responsibilities in other areas. For instance, much of the attention to the Medicare Program in recent years has been dictated by the need to control spending. However, we have reached the point where further cuts must be examined closely. In the haste to control spending, we must not jeopardize the health care of our elderly citizens.

Attaining the deficit goals established by the Gramm-Rudman legislation also must not force us into making penny-wise but pound-foolish savings. When it comes to investments in the Nation's future, especially education, as well as health care and infrastructure development, we must not be shortsighted. As in the past, Democrats this session will continue to stand behind proposals that advance the notion that even amidst the budget crisis, we must build for the future. Otherwise, our children and their children, will inherit a standard of living below that which we enjoy today. That is not a legacy that I, nor any Democrat, want to leave to future generations.

Other serious issues in foreign policy will confront us during this second session. The administration's instinctive reaction to most foreign policy situations has been caution, indecisiveness, rhetoric without credible action, or ill-considered militarism. This has been true particularly in the Middle East.

We will be faced with a series of decisions in the Third World and on choices for the best policy for the United States in situations on every continent, such as Angola, Nicaragua, Afghanistan, Cambodia, and the Philippines. We will be faced with military, economic, humanitarian, and other aid questions. We have some hard work and difficult debates ahead of us if we are to make wise judgments.

We must address the overall question of terrorism. I have been disappointed in the lack of support that our allies in Europe have given us in the policy of sanctions with regard to terrorism. Bullies only understand resolute action. We should give thorough examination to the so-called Holloway report to be released next month. Strenuous efforts to bring our allies along with us will be needed, and the Senate should be playing a role in this.

I also will be encouraging the majority leader to get the genocide Convention before the Senate early in the session. That matter is overdue and I think it clearly commands enough support for Senate approval for ratification. The Soviets are, by some standards, committing genocide in Afghanistan. In ratifying that treaty, we can more forcefully bring the case against Soviet behavior in Afghanistan before the bar of world opinion.

This session will deal with some of the most important public policy issues this Nation has ever confronted. It will not be an easy session, for the issues are not easy ones to resolve. It is my hope, however, that during this session, we could begin a test period of televising certain Senate proceedings. It is important for the American people to see how the Senate debates and resolves the issues which the country faces.

Last session, I introduced Senate Resolution 28 providing for televising Senate proceedings. That resolution was reported from the Rules Committee on November 19. It is my sincere desire that the majority leader will schedule that resolution within the next week or two so that the Senate can decide the issue and that the necessary technical preparations can be made.

In summary, Democrats remain committed to advancing proposals that will build a bright future for this Nation. Action on reducing budget deficits, achieving a good tax reform bill, and enhancing our international competitiveness rank high on our list of items that must be accomplished. In addition, efforts to establish greater stability in the world—through arms control, improvements in United States-Soviet relations, and control of terrorism—will be important Democratic priorities for Democrats, as well as for the American people. I hope the Senate can work together to achieve each of these goals for the benefit of the entire Nation and the world.

REDUCTION IN DEFENSE SPENDING

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, over the past several days there has been a measure of press comment about an exchange between me and my friend, the junior Senator from Texas [Mr. GRAMM], on the television program "Meet the Press," which appeared Sunday as it has for many years. My appearance represented, in fact, the New York Times noted, a certain coming of age. This was the 21st year on which I appeared on "Meet the Press" in various capacities.

There were three persons who appeared this Sunday past: myself; my distinguished colleague, the junior Senator from Texas; and the Honorable James C. Miller III, who is the Director of the Office of Management and Budget. We were interviewed by Marvin Kalb, the now moderator in a distinguished succession of moderators; Mr. Albert Hunt of the Wall Street Journal; and Miss Elizabeth Drew of the New Yorker; all three New York institutions, I can observe.

At one point, I was discussing a matter of concern to me, which I had also expressed on this floor during the rather unstructured debate on the legislation known as Gramm-Rudman-Hollings. I discussed my concerns about the effects of the legislation when we first learned there was to be such a bill, we had no bill before us. We had no printed bill, and we could not be very clear what we were discussing. I came to the floor again on the one day in which we had a printed bill, as it returned from the conference committee. On both occasions—once in October and once in November—if you recall, there were 24 votes in opposition to the legislation, and on both occasions I was one of those who voted in opposition, which accounted, I think, for my being on this program.

A concern I have had, do have, have expressed, and will continue to express, has been the effect of the prospect of a sharp reduction in defense spending on our arms control negotiations with the Soviet Union in Geneva, and my fear that there will be such reductions in the absence of any increase in revenue. On Sunday I noted that, the day after Gramm-Rudman was adopted, my distinguished friend from New Jersey, Senator BRADLEY—and I joined him—offered an 18-cent-a-gallon gasoline tax and we got nine votes, which suggested to me we are going to have to go through the process of automatic spending cuts that is anticipated in the absence of revenue increases.

It has always seemed to me that the basic judgment the Soviets will make about Geneva is that they will determine whether or not to enter an arms control agreement with us in accordance with a judgment of what we will do in the absence of an arms control agreement. That is a reasonable thing. And I think we see their patterns of negotiation well enough over the last 30 years to follow this.

And I have thought, although this is not the administration's position at the moment, but it seems to me there was a chance of a very large and extraordinary understanding, if not actual agreement, coming between our two countries. The Soviets are clearly anxious, and more—they are alarmed about the prospect that the United States might produce a successful nuclear shield as envisioned by the strategic defense initiative.

And it is clear from some of their offers about reduction in warheads by 50 percent, and such, that one can see the prospect of an agreement. In the debate I mentioned this, and said, this is not the administration position. I am well aware of that. But still, if we were agreeing not to build a strategic defense initiative, the Soviets would take down their heavy missiles—in particular, their 300 SS-18's with their 10-warhead MIRV'ed capacity, which is the great first strike capacity in the world today—that they would move to mobile, one-warhead or lightly MIRV'ed missiles as indeed they are doing in their SS-23 and SS-24, and we would move to the Midgetman that was proposed by the Scowcroft Commission, a one-warhead mobile missile. By the end of the century we might see our nuclear arsenals both reduced and deployed in a deterrent mode so that moment of launch on warning with 10-minute decisions in times of panic, and perhaps vastly consequently misunderstanding, would recede; and, we would enter the next century with a much greater expectation than perhaps we would have otherwise deserved.

Yet, I said in this Chamber during that debate, if the Soviets find we passed a law that prevents the trillion dollar outlay on the strategic defense initiative, they will give up attempting to reach an agreement, and that I feared that is what this law would be. And I quoted an official in the State Department, Mr. Sims, I believe, who said this vote would give comfort to the Soviets. I said Sunday, day before yesterday, on "Meet the Press," that the President—this President—had wanted an arms control agreement with the Soviet Union as no other thing. He wanted to see the number of nuclear warheads go down.

Now the Soviets are willing to make an agreement if we will take out that star wars. They now see that we have passed a law that makes star wars illegal.

Let me grant a certain hyperbole. But this is television. On the front page of Al Hunt's Wall Street Journal on Friday, a Soviet analyst—I have here in the text, as "They said"—said just what we said in the debate. A Soviet analyst said, "We are watching Gramm-Rudman very closely." That was the front page of the Wall Street Journal last Friday quoting the Soviet analyst—I gather the one here in Washington. I said, "Listen, Amtrak is one thing, and the Agricultural Extension Program is one thing. But nuclear agreement to bring down those heavy missiles on both sides, that is everything and we are going to lose it."

Mr. President, those are arguable propositions. I have made them before. They have never been answered. I can see someone arguing and saying that is not so. I can see an argument in refutation. That is what "Meet the Press" has been since Larry Spivak began it many decades past. But this was the response from my learned friend. He said, "To show you what miracles there are in Gramm-Rudman, we have on one side"—here gesturing to himself—"one of the strongest supporters of national defense in the country, and"—looking at me—"one of the weakest."

Mr. President, that, I believe, is called an argument ad hominem. My Latin is not much more extensive than that. But an argument ad hominem speaks to the character in person rather than the quality of the argument made.

So I replied, "Wait my friend. Name a bill." It seems to me perfectly legitimate to say, "Name a bill." I repeated it. "Name a bill." My friend said, "Yet, now suddenly, we are having all of the Democrats who have not supported the President on defense who are saying, my God, Gramm-Rudman is going to decimate defense. Well, it's not going to decimate defense. We are not going to have the across-the-board cuts. We are going to make hard choices because we are not going to have any alternative."

Mr. Kalb asked about the 3-percent real increase in defense spending reported to be in the President's budget. I said, "Marvin, I am not going to allow my voting record to be misrepresented. You're 1 year in the Senate, fella"—and I apologize for that term "fella," but it was a difficult moment. I should have said "Senator." I would like to extend, and amend the RECORD to say "You're 1 year in the Senate, Senator. You do not do that to another Senator. I have voted, with one exception, for every defense appropriation bill since I have come to the Senate, and this year with Gramm-Rudman, for the first time in 15 years, the dollar amount for defense spending is going down—the first time in 15 years—under your bill. I would not misrepresent you. Don't you misrepresent me."

Later, my friend said—referring not to me any longer, but to the National Democratic Party—"Let me state it that way since I think that is the clear point as not traditionally supporting the President on defense."

First of all, Mr. President, my voting record is nothing notable, but it should be recorded. I have voted on nine defense appropriation bills since coming to the Senate. I have voted aye on seven in a recorded vote. In a voice vote, I have voted aye on an eighth. I have one time voted nay. That was on November 8, 1983, for fiscal year 1984, and I appended a short statement, saying that I was doing this because of my opposition to the administration proposal to procure and deploy MX missiles in Minuteman silos.

That was a view I had expressed on the floor with some conviction, and yet it could be wrong. But I think, in the main, it was the judgment of this body that this was not a good idea. It is not like the deployment President Carter proposed of 200 in a mobile manner, or this President of 100 in a fixed manner.

May I say, Mr. President, I have served in the Cabinet of the two preceding Republican Presidents. I recall the days when Melvin Laird, a distinguished, honorable, patriotic man, and Secretary of Defense began coming in, reporting to the Cabinet that the Soviets were producing MIRV'ed, long-ranged ICBM's that could reach our Minuteman silos, they could no longer be considered part of a deterrent triad, and we had to get out of those silos. It was so long ago that we ended up after 15 years wandering in the desert going right back into the places we had to get out. But we will not get into that argument.

I once voted nay on that one subject—eight votes aye, one nay. That is my record.

GRAMM-RUDMAN-HOLLINGS

Mr. President, on another subject which is not necessarily relevant, but those of us who have had the experience would know it and recognize it as such. I came of age during the Second World War by which I mean I reached age 17 which was the age of enlistment in the armed services.

As I recall, it was 2 days after I turned 17 that I applied for the Navy for enlistment in a program that they had. And I was sworn in. I enlisted on May 2, 1944. That comes to about 5 weeks after I turned 17. I reported for active duty on the first of July, served in active duty for 3 years, and went into the Active Reserve. I stayed in the Active Reserve for 20 years. I was not especially active after a point, I grant, but I have been in the Mediterranean, I have been in the North Sea, I have been in the Atlantic on cruises, and I was aware that I was told to go when I was told to.

I was honorably—somewhat unceremoniously—released from active duty by a form letter I received dated April 1, 1966—23-plus years in the Naval Reserve. I care about the Navy.

I care about our defenses.

I do not care to be called one of the weakest supporters of national defense. I served for 8 years with Chairman Scoop Jackson, and I was chosen to give the defense speech in the 1968 Democratic Convention. I pointed to an item in the Republican platform that was struck after all, though defense had increased in every year of President Carter's administration. In my campaign of 1976, I said whoever is next President will have to increase defense. He has to.

The Republican platform characterized our platform as the equivalent of unilateral disarmament. I said, admittedly not to a wholly attentive audience in Madison Square Garden, something I would like to repeat. I said, "Can people this careless with words be trusted with power?

I wondered.

I must say, Mr. President, that it has been a source of great gratification that at least a half dozen Members from the opposite side of the aisle have expressed to me their personal regret today that the exchange took place as it did on Sunday. That is characteristic of the quality of so many of our friends on that side.

I take the opportunity to draw this to the attention of the Senate because it was brought to my attention. At least 15 Senators spoke to me about it this morning. As I said, from that side of the aisle, I heard expressions of regret which were genuine and receptive and which certainly were a source of gratification to me.

I hope this is not the way we are going to commence this last session of the 99th Congress. We are going to have bitterly painful decisions to make. We have set them in motion. They are already in motion. The Comptroller General issued his sequestering provisions this morning. They will take $3 billion out of operation and maintenance in the armed services, exactly what Senator HART and I said would happen when you are cutting defense. The first thing that goes is readiness and back you move toward that situation of ever-greater reliance on strategic weapons because strategic weapons are not very expensive. You do not feed missiles, you do not give them furloughs, and you do not retire them. They do not have retirement.

I asked my friend Mr. Miller—I cannot call him a good friend, but I am sure he will become one—later, how did we get a program in the Navy for prescribing the number of showers? He said, "Well, I do not know either." All the poor man could say was that it came out of the computer and there will be fewer of them.

Let us not take this most difficult and trying and testing of sessions and turn it into name-calling, accusation, and innuendo. We lived through that in the period of Joe McCarthy. We have had enough of it around here already.

In the course of this last debate on Gramm-Rudman-Hollings, I saw other Members on the floor and I said, I did not want to keep other Members from speaking. From the other side of the aisle, they said, "Good." I said, "If it is good, perhaps I should continue speaking a bit. Maybe I am impressing someone."

"No," they said. "It is good that you finally said something good about the Pentagon."

I said, "We have had just about enough of that."

I repeated a statement that Senator GARY HART made in the convention in San Francisco who said, "The American flag does not belong to the Republican Party. We are Americans on both sides of the aisle. We will not have our patriotism impugned, and we will not have our records misrepresented," because of what in my view has been a huge mistake made at the behest of the majority. Half of my party voted for it, too, and I might have been wrong. There are ways of saying one is wrong. There are ways of being in opposition. I do not think we saw them in their most attractive form this week on "Meet the Press." I hope we will not see them repeated in this coming session for all the trials and difficulties it will bring about. If it is, we will do our best to maintain our standards even though others lose theirs. This body is more important to me as a Member.

I will close simply by expressing once again my appreciation to those Members on the other side of the aisle for their graciousness in expressing to me their distress at what occurred on Sunday which, so far as I am concerned, is over now, but which I very much hope is not repeated. But should it be, remember there are arguments that can be offered, in fact can be submitted, and that I hope will have some persuasive effect on this body.

● Mr. GRAMM. Mr. President, my distinguished colleague, the senior Senator from New York, has risen to speak today on the issue of our comparative records in support of defense. This past weekend, we appeared as guests on a television news show, "Meet the Press." During that broadcast, the Senator from New York criticized the Gramm-Rudman legislation as being destructive in defense. I responded by noting the paradox of being lectured on defense by one who had not supported defense as I had.

More specifically, I continued the discussion by commenting that it is a strange thing when members of the National Democratic Party—which has not traditionally supported the President on defense—cry alligator tears about what Gramm-Rudman will do to defense.

Mr. President, my intent was clear, correct and appropriate.

Yet to my surprise, I find that our exchange of remarks on a weekend television news show has been raised today as an issue before the U.S. Senate.

I would respond only briefly by noting that according to the American Security Council, the most respected pronational defense organization in our Nation, my comparison of records is supported by the facts.

The American Security Council rates my lifetime record of defense support at 100 percent. It rates the record of the senior Senator from New York at 28 percent. Our records speak for themselves.

Perhaps the Senator from New York was right and I was wrong, but that is not the issue. The issue is accurate representation of our records on the subject.

If Senator GOLDWATER wants to lecture me about defense, I will be eager to listen. If liberal Democrats have a lecture to deliver on defense, I have other things to do. If I lectured my liberal colleagues on my concerns about social welfare spending, I would expect them to raise my voting record. That would not impugn my character, only my standing as a lecturer on that subject. ●

SEVERAL SENATORS addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, the distinguished Senator from New York does not yield to any Member of this body when it comes to his patriotism and his support for national defense, his service to his country, his votes on appropriations or other matters here that affect the national defense of the country.

I did not witness the television program to which he alluded. I wish I had seen it. I have read certain transcripts of it. I regret that the situation there at that time, the words that were used and so on, were such as to cause the distinguished Senator from New York, rightly so, I think, to speak in the terms he has today and that he did on that occasion, as I understand it.

Mr. MOYNIHAN has, time after time, supported defense funding in the Senate. He has also done so in the Democratic conferences that have been held in the months and years during his membership in this body.

I do not like to see the Senator impugned as to his patriotism and his support for appropriations for the national defense. I do not want to see any Senator in this body on either side of the aisle have his or her patriotism questioned or support for the national defense questioned.

As I recall it, 20 Senators on this side of the aisle, to be exact, voted against the amendment which is commonly referred to as the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings amendment. I was one of those who voted against that amendment.

I said then, and I say now, that it was the wrong approach, that it was a mistake and, like Banquo's ghost, it would come back to haunt many of its supporters. I never thought for a moment, however, that a vote for or against that amendment depended upon one's patriotism or one's support for national security. I do not know of anyone on either side of the aisle whose patriotism is greater than that of the distinguished Senator from New York.

With respect to our national defense, I have been a supporter of this President and all other Presidents before him since I first began service in the House of Representatives under President Truman. Incidentally, one of the things I have always been very proud of is that I served for 17 days under President Truman. But I still voted against the Gramm-Rudman amendment.

I can remember when Mr. Reagan's predecessor, Mr. Carter, went to Europe and exhorted our allies there to bear the burden of defense and to come forward with a higher percentage of their share. I think the understanding was that nations would contribute to an increase in defense spending in real terms of 3 percent annually.

The debate on the issue of Gramm-Rudman should not get into matters affecting personal feelings, the personal values, the rollcalls in support of national defense. We ought to try to avoid casting aspersions or saying things that can be inferred as questioning the patriotism of any Member in this body.

I am concerned about this session if it is going to be one in which Senators cast aspersions upon each other. It could become very personal about such matters, and it should not. I do not question the patriotism of Democrats or Republicans who voted for Gramm-Rudman or against Gramm-Rudman or for appropriations bills, this one or that one or some other one. I think that is the wrong thing to do. If there is anything we want to avoid doing in this body, it is just that. This is a body which depends greatly and has, over the decades, on the camaraderie—perhaps not that so much as on patience, courtesy, and comity toward one another.

That is the only way this body can operate. If it becomes a body in which personalities are attacked and things are said that impugn another Senator's good faith or patriotism—Mr. President, this Senate is going to continue going downhill if that is what is going to happen here. The record will speak for itself as to how each Senator votes, and I would not want to distort that record.

One of the reasons for the rule that a Senator must address another Senator through the Chair and not in the first person is to avoid casting aspersions, and causing acridness in debate and hurt feelings. The Senate is not going to progress in its work if that is the way it is going to operate. This is why the Senate has that rule. We do not have to get into a discussion of the rules at this time, but that is the purpose behind the rule requiring us to speak in the third person at all times.

I can only say that, as far as I am concerned, I have been around here a long time and I am the only Senator in this body who has served both as majority leader and minority leader. I know we all, in certain moments, let our tempers, perhaps, flare in debate, and regret, after having said something in debate, that it was said. We usually go to the other Senator and tell him that we regret it. But to be on national television, it is quite something else there to impugn the patriotism of another Senator. I am in no position to say whether it was intentional in this particular instance, but it was unfortunate.

Mr. President, I applaud the distinguished Senator from New York and say the same thing on behalf of the Democratic Party. I understand there was some allusion to Democrats being weak on defense and that the Senators who are opposed to Gramm-Rudman are weak on defense. Mr. President, there is not much substance for that kind of statement.

I am not weak on defense; I am strong on defense. I certainly do not want anyone impugning my motives or implying that because I was against the Gramm-Rudman amendment I am weak on defense. I am sure there are those on both sides of the aisle who feel as I do. That should not be the standard.

Mr. President, there are a good many people at the other end of the avenue as well as at this end of the avenue who wish that Gramm-Rudman would somehow go away, and they are going to move heaven and earth to find some way to avoid such draconian cuts as will be required not only in domestic spending but also in defense spending.

Perhaps they have at last come around to the view that the Senator from New York and this Senator and others expressed in this body at the time we voted against the amendment.

But as to whether or not one is patriotic, whether or not he loves his country, whether or not he is strong on defense or weak on defense, let us not go that far.

If a Senator thinks differently today from what he thought yesterday, he is only a wise man; he is willing to say he was wrong. So some who supported Gramm-Rudman not many weeks ago may have now changed their minds about it. But it is not to be said that they are now less patriotic than they were then.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, I thank my beloved minority leader for his characteristically generous and personal remarks and his abiding concern for the matters and procedures of this body. I thank him.

Mr. BYRD. I thank the Senator.

Mr. EXON addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, if the distinguished Senator will allow me, will he just yield for a moment?

Mr. EXON. I am glad to yield, Mr. President.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, what is the situation? Are we talking on a point of personal privilege or are we in morning business or are we using the leaders' time?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The regular order is the recognition of the Senator from Wisconsin for a 15-minute order.

Mr. BYRD. Has the time of the two leaders expired?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It has not been used as yet.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, if the distinguished Senator from Wisconsin will allow me, I yield to the distinguished Senator from Nebraska 5 minutes of my time, and I yield the other 5 minutes to the able Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. EXON. Mr. President, I thank the minority leader and I thank my friend from Wisconsin. I know he has been waiting. I wish to make a few remarks about the matter that my colleague from New York has been addressing.

I have the privilege of serving with the Senator from New York on the Budget Committee, and I serve on the Armed Services Committee. While I did not see the television program that was referred to, I did read about it in the newspaper, I listened to the remarks by my friend from New York and I am very pleased to hear his statement. I am also very pleased by the remarks that have been made by the minority leader.

As a junior colleague, I am very much interested in defense, where I spend more than half my time in the U.S. Senate. I know of no greater patriot than the Senator from New York.

I remember well a few years ago before I came to this body when my good friend and colleague, and certainly one of the great defense leaders of our Nation, the late Senator Scoop Jackson was running for President of the United States, the only colleague that I knew at that time who stood right at his side through the early days of that successful campaign for the Presidency was my now friend and colleague from New York. Certainly this is another Senator who thinks not only is he a great American and a great patriot but a tremendously influential and important Member of this body of which I am glad to be a part. So I certainly say that I, for one, speaking for I think most of the Members of this body, never questioned one iota the drive, the intent or the intellect of the Senator from New York, but above all his patriotism has never been questioned and never shall in my opinion.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, I could not ask for finer words from a finer colleague.

Mr. EXON. Mr. President, I hope that we have laid aside the matter at hand where we are accusing one of being more patriotic than another. I was one of those who opposed Gramm-Rudman from the very beginning for a whole series of reasons that I cited on the floor of this body, not the least of which I am very fearful—and it is already coming to pass—that basic readiness is what will be sacrificed. That is a major factor with which we are going to be wrestling.

As far as saying who is the greatest flagbearer in the United States today, I do not think it is either Democrats or Republicans. I have equal respect for my friends on the other side of the aisle, many of whom have been very firm leaders, and will continue to be, for defense. I do hope, though, as we try to untangle the jungle of Gramm-Rudman, we will not be lost in the swamp. However, I urge some caution and concern before we put the matter that happened Sunday behind us.

On the way downtown this morning, listening to the radio, I was informed—in fact, a leading member of the Republican leadership was on the radio indicating that a meeting was held this morning at the White House with the Republican leadership and the President scolded them, or words to that effect, that if they did not follow the President's mark on defense they would not be good Americans. They went on to explain that the President said he did not think that Gramm-Rudman should have any effect on the defense buildup, which is totally different than what we have heard for a long, long time.

They went on to say—this came out of the White House. I do not know whether it was the President. The President did meet, as I understand it, with the Republican leadership this morning—that the President warned them, in the words of the Press Secretary of the White House, the Russians would be watching the votes—those were the words—the Russians would be watching the votes of the U.S. Senate with regard to the defense budget and if—I believe these were the President's words and I will stand corrected if they are not, but that was the way it was reported on the radio—and if any Member of the U.S. Senate voted for a mark less than what the President said was necessary for defense, then he was not faithfully attuned to the needs of our defense structure.

I am very fearful, Mr. President, that we are going to have, as the minority leader has indicated, a tremendously stressful session. I, for one, do not believe that the 72 to 75 Members of this body who supported Gramm-Rudman are any more or any less concerned about defense than is this Senator. I think that our approach to it may be considerably different, but I simply say you cannot have your wants of cutting expenditures and have your wants of significantly increasing defense expenditures further without tax increases. And, of course, I have just said the forever no, no, we must not talk about, for shame that we would think about it. Raising taxes if necessary to support national defense is something that should not be spoken, I guess, on the floor of the U.S. Senate—hear no evil, see no evil, speak no evil.

I am very pleased that we are having this little discussion today. It might ferret out some better understanding of both sides. There are going to be some sharp differences of opinion. My colleague from New York and I will be in the early part of that because I suspect that the cuts will come before the Budget Committee where we will be at swords' point on several issues. I hope that we can keep this in the proper vein, the proper spirit, recognizing that we are all very much concerned about not only the budget deficit but the trade deficit as well, and that as we work our way through the morass that I think Gramm-Rudman-Hollings has caused, we approach it as people of mutual understanding, as patriots all, and that none of us will be held up as for or against national defense if we do not agree with everything that the President of the United States wants. Let us remember that we did not elect a king; we elected a President of the United States, and there will be sharp differences.

I think that Ronald Reagan is no more nor no less a patriot than the junior Senator from Nebraska. We are going to have our differences, but I suggest and hope that we can put it at the best possible level, that whatever decision is finally made will be in the best interests of the United States.

In any event I want to salute a great patriot, my friend and colleague from New York.

Mr. President, I yield the floor to the Chair and hope that my friend from Wisconsin will be recognized.

RECOGNITION OF SENATOR PROXMIRE

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wisconsin is recognized.

VOTING FOR OR AGAINST DEFENSE APPROPRIATIONS

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, I was going to speak on another subject. I am going to speak very briefly on this because I want to express my admiration and regard for my good friend from New York and my pride in the fine job he did on television and the excellent statement he has made today.

But I do want to say I disagree with the Senator from New York on defense policy. I did vote against defense approriation bill after defense appropriation bill. I am going to continue to do it because they are wasteful. They are wasteful. There is no question about it. How in the world can anybody vote for the defense bill if he takes the view I do that the B-1 bomber is a mistake, the MX missile is a mistake, that star wars is an extraordinary folly, and aircraft carriers of course are another example in recent year of enormous misallocation of our very limited resources. So I voted against the defense bill in the past.

I believe in a strong military force. That is why I voted against it, because the defense appropriation bill was wrong. It did not strengthen our military force; it weakened it. It put the emphasis in the wrong place. I intend to continue to vote against the defense appropriation bills when they are wrong.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PROXMIRE. I yield.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. With respect to the voting record of the senior Senator from Wisconsin, it is exactly what it is. He would not in the least mind my disagreeing with his view, but he would expect me to express his view accurately, would he not?

Mr. PROXMIRE. Absolutely.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Just as he impeccably describes my views.

Mr. PROXMIRE. I also voted against State justice, the Agriculture appropriation bill, and many other measures, and I intend to continue to do so. I think they are wrong and wasteful, and I am not going to be intimidated by somebody saying, "He is weak on defense."

All Americans want a strong defense. We do not live in a Sunday-school world. The Soviet Union is not run by Mother Teresa or by Mahatma Gandhi. They are tough and mean and they believe in aggression, and we have to answer them with strength; but if the strength is in the wrong area, I will vote "No."

Mr. MOYNIHAN. And in this body, we answer argument with argument.

Mr. PROXMIRE. Exactly.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. I thank the Senator for his very kind remarks.

DO WE HAVE THE COURAGE TO LIVE WITH NUCLEAR WEAPONS?

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, the two most powerful people on Earth agree that the superpowers that now possess more than 90 percent of all nuclear weapons should lead the world in the total destruction of nuclear weapons. President Reagan has, for some time, called for ending nuclear weapons for alltime, everywhere. He has expressed this as a goal, a dream. He has justified his advocacy of a missile defense program, or star wars as a critical step toward the abolition of all nuclear weapons on earth some day. Many, including this Senator, viewed the President's proposal as pie-in-the-sky rhetoric—an impossible dream to justify the trillion dollar star wars extravaganza.

Now Secretary Grobachev comes back with a proposal so farout that it makes President Reagan's flight of fancy seem like ho-hum, pedestrian realism. Consider what Gorbachev packed into a single proposal: First, Gorbachev would agree to a mutual reduction of nuclear weapons by stages with the United States and other nuclear powers over the next 15 years. By the end of 1999, there would be no nuclear weapons left anywhere on Earth. But even that was just a starter. Gorbachev went further.

Second, the Nations of the world would destroy all non-nuclear weapons "whose destructive capacity is close to that of nuclear arms or other weapons of mass destruction." That would end the block-buster bombs or huge fire bombs of World War II. It gets even better.

Third, Mr. Gorbachev proposed the dismantling or destruction of delivery vehicles for those weapons. There go the submarines, the bombers, the aircraft carriers as well as the missile launchers.

Is that it? No, indeed.

Fourth, the Soviet Secretary calls for the complete elimination of all chemical weapons.

Fifth, Gorbachev asks that all the heavily armed nations of the world agree to a reduction of conventional weapons—fighter planes, tanks, artillery, et cetera.

Sixth, the top Communist asks for a reduction in the armed forces, the personnel—the soldiers, sailors, airmen, marines in all nations.

Secretary Gorbachev bases this beautiful dream of peace on earth on two specific immediate U.S concessions. No. 1, and first, he wants both sides to negotiate a total comprehensive ban by the two superpowers on nuclear weapons testing. The United States and the Soviet Union have promised such negotiations in treaties agreed to by both sides. The Reagan administration has opposed such negotiations. Second, Gorbachev calls for an end to the United States development of the Strategic Defense Initiative or Star Wars Program. President Reagan has welcomed the general tone of the Gorbachev proposal, although he obviously opposes the immediate specifics on shutting down weapons testing and star wars.

What real prospect is there that this sudden proposal to end the arms race on every front, everywhere, destroy nuclear and major conventional weapons and reduce armed forces, can succeed in the next 15 years? Mr. President, I am sure that almost everyone, everywhere on Earth would enthusiastically, joyfully welcome such a marvelous development. If there were any possible way we could make this happy mission become reality, we would be all for it. If we can push it along even a little, just get it started in the next 15 years, we should be all means to do it. But we should not let our fervent hopes and prayers for peace and for an end to the terrifying, haunting nightmare of nuclear war blind us to the long, hard uphill fight, we will have to make to achieve even a little progress toward that goal so many have dreamed of and striven for throughout long centuries.

We are not going to destroy all nuclear weapons on Earth. We are not going to end the threat of nuclear weapons, not by the year 2000, not ever. They are here. We have to learn to live with them for years and centuries to come. What, then, can we do about the terrible dangers they pose? We can begin to make slow, painful progress.

Indeed, we have started to do that. The limited test ban treaty, the strategic arms limitation treaties—I and II—the antiballistic missile treaty, the recent negotiations to limit the size of the Armed Forces in Europe by NATO and Warsaw Pact, the steady progress in the technology of verifying compliance with weapons limitation agreements, have all gradually, slowly but surely, pushed the nuclear powers along the road toward a more peaceful world. The fact that there has been no armed conflict between the superpowers in the 40 years of the nuclear age should give us confidence that we are moving in the direction of peace.

We should continue by agreeing to an end to nuclear testing and a gradual reduction of superpower nuclear arsenals. That would be a superb achievement. But let us not be diverted from this slow, steady progress. We should recognize what we cannot do. Even an agreement by the two most powerful persons on Earth, Gorbachev and Reagan, cannot and will not destroy nuclear weapons. Mankind has discovered this awful military power of nuclear explosions. It is, unfortunately, like all the significant developments of mankind, good and bad, a part of our legacy as human beings. It is a principle of life expressed in those undying words:

The Moving Finger writes; and, having writ,
Moves on; nor all your Piety nor Wit
Shall lure it back to cancel half a Line
Nor all your Tears wash out a Word of it.

That is the way it is with nuclear weapons. We have to find the courage and the wisdom to find a way to live with them in peace.

ADMINISTRATION ECONOMIC POLICIES—FORMULA FOR DISASTER

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, President Reagan's January 11, 1986, radio broadcast clearly stated the economic issue of the 1986 congressional election from a Republican viewpoint. The President laid down a challenge to the Democratic Party. He said, in effect, that after 5 years of a Republican administration and a Republican Senate, the country is in great economic shape. Unemployment dropped in December 1985 to less than 7 percent lower than it had been for 5 years. That is less than the level of unemployment when President Reagan took office. True, it is only a tiny one-tenth of 1 percent less, but it is less.

Unemployment would be far lower if there had not been an extraordinary increase in the work force since 1980. The President rightly pointed out that there has been a veritable explosion of jobs. The number of people employed in this country has expanded by a massive 9 million in 5 years. That is certainly one of the most rapid expansions in jobs in the Nation's history. In December 1985 there were a higher proportion of America's population employed than ever before in the history of our country. So can there be any dispute that the past 5 years have brought a huge increase in the number of Americans who have been able to find jobs? No, indeed.

But that is not all. Over the years, when the economy has expanded swiftly and provided a big increase in jobs, prices have started to rise more rapidly. Interest rates have climbed. But not this time. Inflation has moderated spectacularly, falling from 12 percent to less than 4 percent. Interest rates have fallen far below their level of 5 years ago, although still high by historic and world standards. True, the farm economy is in very serious trouble. Export industries are suffering. Producers of autos, textiles, shoes, steel and many other products suffer so seriously from a flood of cheap imports that they have lost much of their American market. But, by and large, profits are up. The stock market is booming as it has not boomed since the days of the great bull market of 1929.

So, doesn't the President truly have something to brag about? The answer, Mr. President, is no, emphatically no. If ever there were a time when statistics—economic statistics, that is—could be used to paint a false picture, it is now. Yes, indeed, the President's statistics are right. Then, what is wrong? What is wrong is that the President in his radio broadcast said absolutely nothing about the reason for these rosey economic figures. When we consider why the economy has expanded as it has and what the terrible long-term consequences of the causes of the expansion will be, we will see quite a different picture.

Why have we had this record explosion of employment in this country? Answer: We have been going through the biggest series of Federal deficits this country or any country has ever seen, by far. Economic knowledge is exceedingly limited. Economic forecasts are notoriously fallible. But on one point almost every economist agrees. If a nation like the United States increases spending and slashes taxes so that it runs big deficits, the effect will be to stimulate economic activity. And the bigger the deficits, the more stimulative the economic activity.

So should anyone wonder how it is that after successive, back-to-back deficits of $109 billion, $195 billion, $175 billion, and $202 billion, and after the first quarter of fiscal 1986 when the deficit was boiling along at a record $220 billion, the economy is surging, employment is up and jobs are increasing? Of course they are. And why has the economy expanded? Because it has been driven by enormous deficits that, by the end of this year, will aggregate more than a trillion dollars, a doubling of the national debt in 5 short years. But how do we explain the moderation of inflation?

Answer: First, unemployment is still high by all historical standards, so there is little or no pressure on prices; second, energy resources are in abundant supply because of the collapse of the OPEC oil cartel and the development of oil resources throughout the world in response to the big run-up of oil prices in the seventies; third, an American and world surplus of food has kept food prices down; and fourth, the deficit has sparked an initial flight of foreign capital out of foreign currencies and into dollars to take advantage of relatively higher interest rates and greater security offered by American securities. So, yes, indeed interest and inflation rates have both fallen sharply. And how sweet all this is. But that is for now. Can it last? No, sir. No way. In the short run, Reaganomics with its high deficit centerpiece is nirvana—economic heaven on Earth. In the long run, it is a reckless and dangerous policy.

Consider our economic status at the moment. We have far and away the most extravagant and irresponsible peacetime fiscal policy this country has ever endured, and we have it continuing right through a 4-year recovery. How grossly irresponsible can you get? At the same time, the Federal Reserve Board for many months now has pursued a highly expansive monetary policy. Yes, indeed, that policy helps keep interest rates down. It also encourages borrowing not only by the Federal Government but also by America's corporations which have broken all records in their debt run-up in the past couple of years. American individuals have also pushed themselves further into debt than ever, while savings have hit new lows. At the same time, the abundance of Federal Reserve created credit has helped hold interest rates down, reducing the prime incentive for saving—high interest rates. This is a great policy for today. It may last several months, possibly through this year or even next year. But it is a foolish, reckless, totally irresponsible policy in the long run. We are saddling future generations with an immense burden of debt. In fact, the most rapidly rising cost of Government is interest on the national debt. An increasing amount of that debt is owed to foreigners.

No one has repealed the business cycle. No one has even theorized that we have seen the last recession. So what happens to the deficit come the next recession? Will it go to $400 billion a year, or $500 billion? And how do we work our way out of that fiscal pit without slipping back to worse recessions? Mr. President, our economic policy today is an absolute, unmitigated catastrophe. Most informed Americans must know this. Almost no one wants to admit it. Well we had better admit and take those very painful steps to bring it under control, and now.

THE MYTH OF THE DAY: THE POOR ARE ELIGIBLE FOR MEDICAID

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, the myth of the day is that if you are poor, you are eligible for Medicaid health care coverage.

The sad reality is that it just isn't so. While most of those who qualify for Medicaid coverage have incomes below the Federal poverty level, a large number of the poor are simply ineligible for Medicaid. And it is not unusual at all, for those who qualify, to have higher incomes than those who do not—a perverse result of the way we have structured eligibility for Medicaid.

As the Center for Social Policy noted in a recent report on Medicaid:

> In 1982, in any given month, 49.3 percent of those with incomes below the Federal poverty standard had no public or private insurance, 37.5 percent were covered by Medicaid and 13.2 percent by employer-provided health insurance.

Think about that. In any given month only four out of every 10 Americans who are poor qualify for Medicaid coverage. Over the course of a year, the number is closer to 5 out of 10 because the 13.2 percent of the poor receiving employer-provided insurance are often not employed for a full 12 months. But that still leaves half of the poor with absolutely no health care coverage.

While a number of States have broadened Medicaid coverage since these numbers were compiled, particularly for pregnant women and newborns, the percentage of the poor for whom Medicaid coverage is unavailable has not changed very much.

How can that be? After all, wasn't Medicaid designed to meet the needs of the poorest of our citizens?

Actually, Medicaid was never targeted to the poorest of our citizens. When Medicaid was first created, eligibility was tied to eligibility for the major welfare program, aid to families with dependent children [AFDC]. But as the name implies eligibility was closed to families or individuals without a dependent child present. In the early seventies, the poor aged, the blind and the disabled were given automatic Medicaid coverage in most, but not all, States when the supplemental security income [SSI] program was created.

The original hope of the drafters of the Medicaid statute was that the States would begin with AFDC-eligible Americans in poverty and gradually expand coverage until all of the poor were covered. In fact, they even set a date for full coverge of the poor—1975. But the long delay in States bringing the medicaid program on line, and rapidly rising health care costs, soon led to a 2-year delay of the goal being adopted in 1969. And, by the time the Congress adopted the 1972 Social Security Act amendments, the goal of full coverage of the poor was officially abandoned.

While Medicaid coverage of the poor has undergone periods of contraction and expansion, the inadequate targeting of Medicaid's limited resources has never received the attention it deserves. This is actually not too surprising. First, under cost-based reimbursement, hospitals found it easier to cross subsidize the care they provided to those without insurance by creative accounting and increasing charges to those insurers who paid full charges. Second, the community and migrant health center network provided a backstop for those who fell through the Medicaid safety net for nonhospital care. And, third, with health care costs skyrocketing throughout the seventies, there was little opportunity for States or the Federal Government to reassess the program while everyone was running fast simply to meet the bill for the program.

But now the limitations of Medicaid need to be reviewed. Price competition among hospitals, and fixed Prospective DRG payment by Medicare, has made cross-subsidization nearly impossible. And those hospitals in economically depressed areas, and in particular, the Nation's public hospitals which bear a disproportionate share of the uncompensated care burden, are facing a precarious financial future. And many have started to restrict their prior open-door policy for nonemergency admissions. The ability of the community health centers to meet the nonhospital needs of the uninsured poor will similarly be constrained as we struggle to reduce the deficit under Gramm-Rudman.

While uncompensated care legislation tops the agenda in nearly every State across the Nation, there has been too much attention to band-aid measures built around the crazy-quilt pattern of Medicaid coverage and, too little attention given to rationalizing Medicaid coverage. And better targeting of Medicaid's resources for acute care will not be easy. While Medicaid is exempt from any sequester order under the provisions of Gramm-Rudman, as well it should be, there is absolutely no possibility of a major infusion of Federal funding to fill in the gaps for the poorest of the poor who are not now covered but deserve our help. Restructuring Medicaid will simply be a zero-sum game. And it will be painful.

In addition to better targeting, we need to recycle the savings that can be obtained from increased use of capitation through health maintenance organizations [HMO's] and contracting with hospitals, which are being pursued successfully in many States.

But as long as the myth that Medicaid meets the needs of the poor persists, the mindless budget-cutters of the Reagan administration will only succeed in making a necessary but inadequate part of the Nation's social safety net even more inadequate.

INTERNATIONAL HUMAN RIGHTS: THE NEED FOR THE GENOCIDE CONVENTION

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, last October when General Secretary Gorbachev was questioned by a French reporter about human rights abuses against Soviet Jews, he replied, "Let us run things in the Soviet Union and you run things in France." Soon thereafter, the Senate made it clear to President Reagan that we do not consider human rights abuses to be merely a local concern.

We sent a strong, unanimous message urging the President to make human rights—and the rights of Soviet Jews in particular—"an important focus of the summit," and we warned that "concerns about Soviet human rights abuses will be a factor in Senate consideration of future agreements affecting relations with the Soviet Union." As the leading free nation we felt it our proper and necessary duty to firmly support the rights of Soviet Jews.

However, we sent the President to Geneva with one hand tied behind his back. We voiced unanimous concern about human rights abuses, but we had not yet officially condemned genocide—that most heinous abuse. This is clearly inconsistent and noticeably undermined our pleas on behalf of human rights. By failing to ratify the Genocide Convention, we left our Nation open to the charge of moral hypocrisy.

When, after World War II, the full extent of the atrocities perpetrated against Jews became known, the cry "Never again!" rose up around the world. The Genocide Convention was drafted to insure that such a tragedy never occurs again, and we cannot claim the moral high ground until we have ratified it. We must denounce firmly and loudly any actions designed to deny the rights of a particular national, ethnical, racial, or religious group. That is what the Genocide Convention does. Therefore, in preparation for the second summit meeting, let us strengthen our case for human rights by ratifying the Genocide Convention.

Mr. DANFORTH. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

CONRAIL SALE AMENDMENTS ACT OF 1985

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 215, S. 638, the Conrail legislation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER [Mr. ARMSTRONG]. Is there objection?

Mr. HEINZ. Mr. President, reserving the right to object.

Mr. METZENBAUM. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of S. 638, the Conrail bill.

Mr. METZENBAUM and Mr. DOLE addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The majority leader.

CLOTURE MOTION

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I send a cloture motion to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The cloture motion will be stated.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

CLOTURE MOTION

We, the undersigned Senators, in accordance with the provisions of rule XXII of the Standing Rules of the Senate, hereby move to bring to a close debate on the Dole motion to proceed to the consideration of S. 638.

Bob Dole, Jack Danforth, Mack Mattingly, John H. Chafee, Ted Stevens, Don Nickles, Strom Thurmond, Al Simpson, Jake Garn, Bob Packwood, Phil Gramm, Warren B. Rudman, Malcolm Wallop, Pete V. Domenici, Pete Wilson, Dan Quayle, and Dave Durenburger.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I withdraw the motion to proceed to Conrail.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ANDREWS). The motion is withdrawn.

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, I, along with a number of my colleagues, have voiced an objection for unanimous-consent to proceed with the proposal sale of Conrail to Norfolk Southern.

Mr. BYRD. Will the distinguished Senator yield?

Mr. SPECTER. I yield for a question, without losing my right to the floor.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, there is nothing before the Senate at this time. There has to be something before the Senate or else Senators cannot debate. I hope the distinguished majority leader would allow Senators to speak on Conrail.

Mr. DOLE. As in morning business, until about 5:30?

Mr. BYRD. Without a limitation on time?

DOLE. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Senate is in morning business. The Senator from Pennsylvania is recognized.

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, as I started to say, the effort to move to the proposed sale of Conrail to Norfolk Southern is premature at this time. There are very material, unresolved antitrust issues, there are very substantial unanswered tax considerations, and there are unfinished hearings before the Senate Judiciary Committee.

There is a body of evidence which is very powerful in support of the proposition that the proposed sale of Conrail to Norfolk Southern would be violative of the antitrust laws. It is my purpose this afternoon to outline briefly the issues which have been raised and to put into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD the summaries showing the antitrust violations. Our colleagues should have the benefit of these documents in consideration of this matter, in the course of the next several days while deciding whether to vote cloture on a motion to proceed, or whether it might be in the best interests of the Senate, the best interests of the Congress, and the best interests of the country to consider at length whether it is now timely to proceed on this subject.

The parameters of the antitrust issue were set forth, Mr. President, in a letter dated January 29, 1985, from the then Assistant Attorney General in charge of the Antitrust Division, Mr. J. Paul McGrath, to Secretary of Transportation Elizabeth Dole. The critical part is set forth on page 1 to this effect:

> The merger would have a significant adverse effect on competition for the transport of commodities to and from a number of locations in several states, with the greatest adverse effect occurring at locations along an east-west rail corridor running between Buffalo and Pittsburgh in the east and St. Louis and Chicago in the west. The merger would likely enable the merged entity to achieve certain efficiencies. These efficiencies do not appear, however, to be sufficiently great to offset all of the competitive effects in all of the affected markets.
> The Department of Justice therefore would oppose the proposed merger unless its competitive problems are remedied through a prior or concurrent divestiture of assets that is approved by the Attorney General. Appropriate divestiture must include divestiture of Conrail and/or Norfolk Southern rail assets along the designated corridor to one or more independent acquirers, other than CSX or any entity owned or controlled by CSX, that would provide long-term, viable, and competitive rail service to locations along the corridor.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the full text of the letter be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

U.S. DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
ANTITRUST DIVISION
Washington, DC, January 29, 1985.

Hon. ELIZABETH H. DOLE,
Secretary, Department of Transportation, Washington, DC.

DEAR SECRETARY DOLE: This letter sets forth the Department of Justice's analysis of the competitive implications of a proposed sale of Consolidated Rail Corporation ("Conrail") to Norfolk Southern Corporation ("Norfolk Southern"), as you requested on September 11, 1984. As explained below, on the basis of our independent investigation, we have concluded that, without appropriate divestitures, the proposed merger would violate both Clayton Act and Interstate Commerce Act merger review standards. The merger would have a significant adverse effect on competition for the transport of commodities to and from a number of locations in several states, with the greatest adverse effect occurring at locations along an east-west rail corridor running between Buffalo and Pittsburgh in the east and St. Louis and Chicago in the West. The merger would likely enable the merged entity to achieve certain efficiencies. These efficiencies do not appear, however, to be sufficiently great to offset all of the competitive effects in all of the affected markets.

The Department of Justice therefore would oppose the proposed merger unless its competitive problems are remedied through a prior or concurrent divestiture of assets[1] that is approved by the Attorney General. Appropriate divestiture must include divestiture of Conrail and/or Norfolk Southern rail assets along the designated corridor to one or more independent acquirers, other than CSX or any entity owned or controlled by CSX, that would provide long-term, viable, and competitive rail service to locations along the corridor. Such divestiture would preserve the vast bulk of the competition that would have been eliminated by the merger. While there may be some possible anticompetitive consequences remaining in some isolated markets after the divestiture, these anticompetitive consequences are likely to be insignificant relative to the merger's expected efficiencies. This precondition to approval of the merger has been set forth in language agreed to by the Departments of Justice and Transportation (attached to this letter as Appendix A) which is to be included in the Agreement of Sale between Norfolk Southern and the Department of Transportation.

Our analysis is explained in detail below.

I. COMPETITIVE ANALYSIS

A. Analytical approach

Although mergers play a beneficial role in our economy, they sometimes may harm competition by creating, enhancing, or facilitating the exercise of "market power." "Market power" is the power of a firm or firms to raise the price of a product or service in a specific market above a competitive level for a significant period of time without fear that existing competitors or new entrants will make such a price increase unprofitable by expanding their output or charging a lower price. When only a few firms in a market into which entry is difficult account for most of the sales of a product, they may either explicitly or implicitly coordinate their actions to eliminate rivalry on price and non-price variables. When firms exercise market power in this way, the result is a transfer of wealth from buyers to sellers and a misallocation of resources that harms the economy. Therefore, a merger that would eliminate a significant competitor in an already highly concentrated market into which entry is difficult may enhance the ability of the remaining firms to exercise market power. Such a merger normally would be challenged by the Department under Section 7 of the Clayton Act unless other economic factors or some appropriate divestiture indicate that the merger should be permitted.[2]

We analyzed this proposed merger according to the same standards and principles that we apply to mergers generally. As with any merger, our first step was to identify economically relevent markets—product-location combinations which could be subject to the exercise of market power—in which both Conrail and Norfolk Southern operate. Our next step was to identify "problem" markets (i.e., product-location combinations) with respect to which the merger would result in significantly high post-merger concentration and where entry by new firms (for example, trucking companies) would be difficult or unlikely in response to the exercise of market power following the merger. Once we identified the markets in which the merger would likely have a significant anticompetitive effect, we then considered whether these anticompetitive effects might be offset by efficiencies resulting from the merger. Finally, we considered what would be required to resolve any competitive problems that might be raised by the merger—that is, to prevent a reduction in the number of competing rail alternatives in highly concentrated markets where considerable revenues are involved and where the merger would otherwise be likely significantly to diminish competition.

B. Methodology

We defined two types of economically relevant markets for the purpose of analyzing this proposed merger—(1) transportation of a commodity to a location ("destination markets") and (2) transportation of a commodity from a location ("origin markets").[3] In addition to railroads, non-rail transportation modes, such as truck and barge, were

[1] "Divestiture" means the conveyance or other transfer by sale, lease, or otherwise of rail tracks and facilities or the right to use rail tracks and facilities.

[2] See, U.S. Department of Justice, "Merger Guidelines," June 14, 1984. The standards used by the Department to analyze mergers under the Clayton Act are substantially the same as those used by the Interstate Commerce Commission, which is directed by statute to approve only transactions that are "consistent with the public interest." 49 U.S.C. § 11344. In applying this standard, the Commission disapproves transactions that would "substantially reduce the transport alternatives available to shippers unless there are substantial and demonstrable benefits to the transaction that cannot be achieved in a less anticompetitive fashion." General Policy Statement for Merger on Control of at Least Two Class I Railroads, 49 C.F.R. § 11801(a).

[3] We identified commodity and location combinations using the five-digit Standard Transportation Commodity Codes ("STCCs") and four-digit Standard Point Location Codes ("SPLCs"), respectively, designated in the 1983 ICC 1% Waybill Sample. Five-digit STCCs were used because, for the most part, the products in a single five-digit group are close substitutes for one another and have similar transportation characteristics. A four-digit SPLC is in most cases a county, although, in a significant number of cases, a single county may contain two or more four-digit SPLCs.

considered to be in the market to the extent they appeared to be close substitutes for rail transportation.

To identify those markets in which the merger might have a significant adverse effect (i.e., would result in high post-merger concentration and would significantly increase pre-merger concentration), we first identified markets (product-location combinations) where in 1983 Conrail and Norfolk Southern each participated (independently of one another) in at least 10 percent of the rail movements and where together the two railroads accounted for at least 50 percent of all rail movements in the market.[4] Using 1977 Census of Transportation data, supplemented by surveys and interviews with over 200 shippers concerning approximately 700 facilities, we then eliminated those markets where non-rail competition appeared to be significant. Finally, we employed a number of other screens designed to eliminate from further consideration those markets in which over a significant portion of the route into the destination or out of the origin market in question, a single carrier other than Conrail or Norfolk Southern provides rail service, in which the total revenues affected were small, or in which the major shipper in the market supported the merger.

Usually, the relevant geographic market will be as small as a county. However, even if in some cases the market may be broader, the competitive analysis would be the same because in markets located along the east-west corridor toward which our proposed remedy is directed, there are at most four competing railroads before the merger. In addition, where we knew with some certainty that the market was broader than a county, we incorporated this into our analysis. For example, we analyzed separately outbound shipments of corn, wheat, and soybeans, as well as the movement by rail of coal to utility plants. Producers of these commodities tend to be able to select among transportation alternatives that extend beyond county lines through the use of a combination of rail and nonrail movements.

Using this screening procedure, we identified more than one hundred markets located in 39 counties in 21 states in which it appeared that a merger between Conrail and Norfolk Southern could have a significant anticompetitive effect. With respect to these markets, Conrail and Norfolk Southern participated in movements involving $516.1 million in rail revenues in 1983. Of the 39 counties, 15 held "problem" markets in which Conrail or Norfolk Southern participated in movements involving less than $5 million of revenues. If these 15 counties had been the only locations potentially affected by the merger, we would not oppose the merger, given the likely efficiencies that would result from the merger and given the fact that the commerce affected as to these 15 counties is so small compared to the actual overall volume of commerce involved in the merger. Even after eliminating these counties, however, a number of others remain and the potentially affected revenues in these counties are substantial enough to be of significant concern. The remaining counties include, among others, Wayne and Washtenaw counties in Michigan; Allen and Marion counties in Indiana; Erie county in New York; and Cuyahoga, Jefferson, Lucas, Stark, and Lorain counties in Ohio, as well as several counties in the southern United States that originate shipments of pulp, paper, and fiberboard products destined for locations served by Norfolk Southern and/or Conrail in the Midwest and Northeast.[5] In two of these counties, Jefferson county in Ohio and Allen county in Indiana, our concern is particularly acute because the number of competing railroads would be reduced from two to one. In the other counties, the competitive situation would not be much better, because the number of rail alternatives would be reduced either from three to two or from four to three. We have determined that, although they are used by shippers to some limited extent, non-rail transport alternatives are inadequate substitutes for rail transport in these markets.

We also considered the argument that following the merger, the combined entity would divert so much interchange traffic from regional railroads in the northeast and midwest that some of these railroads would be unable to compete effectively in the markets they currently serve and that the resulting loss of competition would reduce consumer welfare. We find, however, that, as a general matter, it is extremely difficult to estimate the size of future diversions.[6] It may be even more difficult to determine whether such diversions would be so substantial as to render otherwise viable regional railroads incapable of providing competition in markets where they currently operate and where their exit would reduce competition significantly. Because diversions often result from lower costs to railroads of providing single-line, rather than interline, service and because single-line service is often attractive to shippers, any potential harm in markets currently served by regional carriers must be weighed against possibly substantial benefits. Hence, even if we knew with certainty that such diversions would significantly impair the operations, or even the viability, of regional railroads, this would not demonstrate that the diversions are, on balance, harmful to the economy. To the extent that they may be harmful, however, the divestiture that we have proposed in Section II of this letter would address that problem by ensuring that there will be an opportunity for regional carriers to continue receiving interline traffic from independent carriers other than Norfolk Southern or Conrail.

C. Efficiencies

The primary benefit of mergers to the economy is their efficiency-enhancing potential, e.g., their ability to lower overall production costs to the benefit of society. Some mergers that would significantly increase concentration in a market nevertheless result in significant real efficiencies. Therefore, if the parties to a merger establish by clear and convincing evidence that a merger will achieve such efficiencies, the Department considers those efficiencies in evaluating the merger.

As stated in the Department's Merger Guidelines,[7] cognizable efficiencies include, but are not limited to, economies of scale, better integration of operating facilities, and similar efficiencies relating to specific operations of the merging firms. The Department also considers claimed efficiencies resulting from reductions in general administrative and overhead expenses, and other efficiencies that otherwise do not relate to specific operations of the merging firms, although, as a practical matter, those types of efficiencies are more difficult to demonstrate and to quantify. The Department does not give weight to claimed efficiencies if comparable savings reasonably could be achieved by the parties through means short of a merger likely to reduce competition.

We have reviewed efficiency claims made by Norfolk Southern. We believe that some of these claims are overstated,[8] while others, such as abandonment of unprofitable track, would probably occur even in the absence of a merger. Nevertheless, we believe, based in part on interviews with affected shippers, that substantial benefits are likely to result from increased single-line service, an option that is in many cases both less costly to railroads and more desirable to shippers.

On balance, we have concluded that the possible benefits of the proposed merger are not sufficiently great to outweigh the very serious anticompetitive effect the merger would have, particularly in the designated east-west corridor. The potential efficiency gains—particularly relating to the offering of single-line service—are, however, likely to be sufficiently great to offset the less significant adverse competitive effects that would remain after the divestiture outlined in Section II of this letter is effected.

II. PROPOSED REMEDY

As discussed above, although the proposed merger would have an anticompetitive effect in a number of markets, the markets of primary concern are located along a rail corridor bounded on the east by Buffalo and Pittsburgh and on the west by Chicago and St. Louis. Accordingly, we believe that a sale of Conrail to Norfolk Southern must be expressly conditioned on the prior or concurrent divestiture[9] of rail assets to an independent entity or entities capable of providing long-term, viable, and competitive rail service along this corridor. For these purposes, "divestiture" means the conveyance or other transfer by sale, lease, or otherwise, of rail tracks and facilities or the right to use rail tracks and facilities.

[4] Although in some of the markets shippers can now be served only via the tracks of either Conrail or Norfolk Southern, but not both, many of these shippers nevertheless consider other carriers identified on the Waybill to be competitive alternatives because of "reasonable" reciprocal switching arrangements currently in place. One factor that probably keeps the switching rates of Norfolk Southern and Conrail low enough to allow competition in these markets is the fact that the two carriers rely on each other for switches into different markets and each might feel constrained from unilaterally exercising its full market power (by raising the switching rates at locations it alone controls) for fear that the other railroad would retaliate in other locations. Thus, even where shippers can be reached only by the tracks of Conrail or Norfolk Southern, the merger may eliminate competition that resulted from reciprocal switching.

[5] A complete listing of the product-location combinations identified through our screening methodology is attached to this letter as Appendix B. This listing is limited to counties in which in 1983 the potential problems identified involved Norfolk Southern's and Conrail's participation in rail revenues exceeding $2 million.

[6] While we have received diversion estimates from a number of sources, including the Department of Transportation, Norfolk Southern, Conrail, and some regional carriers, these estimates vary considerably and it is very difficult to draw firm conclusions from them.

[8] For example, Norfolk Southern's estimated annual savings of $139 million due to the elimination of redundant personnel and facilities is highly speculative given the unpredictable results of union labor negotiations.

[9] Concurrent divestiture may involve a transaction such as a contract between Norfolk Southern and a purchaser to transfer assets acquired from Conrail. Such a contract could become effective as at the closing of the sale of Conrail to Norfolk Southern.

To ensure competitive service, the divestiture must satisfy three conditions. First, the acquirer or acquirers (hereinafter "acquirer") must demonstrate to the satisfaction of the Attorney General that it possesses the managerial, operational, and financial capability necessary to compete effectively, and to remain a viable entity providing long-term rail service along the designated corridor.

Second, the divestiture should provide the acquirer direct connections in Buffalo, Chicago, Toledo, and East St. Louis to one or more railroads other than the merged carrier or CSX Corporation or any railroad controlled by either of them. This condition is essential to the competitive viability of an alternative rail line because traffic to and from the affected markets moves not only on Conrail and Norfolk Southern lines, but also, to a significant extent, off those lines to or from connections with other railroads in Buffalo, Chicago, Toledo, and East St. Louis. Therefore, an independent connection to other railroads at each of these gateways would have to be available so as to remove the acquirer's need to rely upon the merged carrier or CSX to make these connections.[10]

Third, following the divestiture, in each of the designated counties in the east-west corridor, the merged Norfolk Southern/Conrail entity must switch cars between its tracks and facilities and the tracks and facilities of any shipper served by Norfolk Southern, Conrail, or Norfolk Southern/Conrail on customary terms and conditions whenever switching is practicable and necessary in order to provide a shipper with effective competitive access to the track and facilities of the acquirer.

The specific rail tracks and facilities to be divested and the consideration to be paid should be determined by agreement between the parties to the divestiture so that the market, rather than the Department of Justice, can determine the most suitable divestiture alternative. Because the divestiture would be subject to the Attorney General's approval, however, to assist him in evaluating the divestiture the Department of Justice should be supplied with complete information concerning all offers and inquiries received in connection with the divestiture, including those that are rejected by either the Department of Transportation or Norfolk Southern.[11]

This proposed divestiture addresses the vast majority of the larger "problem" markets we identified. While several markets are not affected by the proposal, these markets are either located in areas where a divestiture would be impractical or are locations where the amount of commerce shared by Conrail and Norfolk Southern was less than $5 million. When an independent rail alternative able to maintain competition within the designated corridor is found, such divestiture would resolve at least $371.4 million of potential problems out of a total of $516.1 million in the markets we have identified. In addition, this remedy would benefit some shippers, such as pulp, paper, and fiberboard producers' located in 11 "problem" counties in the South, whose goods pass through or terminate in this corridor. Finally, as discussed above, we have determined that the efficiencies that are likely to result from the proposed merger would be substantial enough to offset the potential anticompetitive effect in markets that are not directly addressed by the proposed divestiture.

[10] The Toledo gateway would give shippers in Wayne and Washtenaw counties in Michigan access to a railroad other than Norfolk Southern/Conrail and CSX that provides a direct link to eastern and western destinations via Buffalo, Chicago, and East St. Louis.

[11] These terms and conditions are set forth in Appendix A and, we understand, will be included in the Agreement of Sale between the Department of Transportation and Norfolk Southern.

III. CONCLUSION

I trust that this letter is responsive to your request for the Department's advice concerning the competitive impact of a sale of Conrail to Norfolk Southern. I would like to thank you and your staff for the competent and willing assistance that has been provided to us throughout our review process.

Sincerely,

J. PAUL MCGRATH,
Assistant Attorney General,
Antitrust Division.

ATTACHMENT A

"Divestiture" means the conveyance or other transfer by sale, lease, or otherwise of rail tracks and facilities owned or operated by CR or NS or the right to use such rail tracks and facilities.

"NS" means Norfolk Southern Corporation, its subsidiaries, affiliates, successors and assigns.

"CR" means Consolidated Rail Corporation, its subsidiaries, and affiliates.

"CSX" means CSX Corporation, its subsidiaries, affiliates, successors and assigns.

1. This Agreement of Sale is contingent upon prior or concurrent Divestiture sufficient to enable an acquirer or acquirers ("acquirer(s)"), not controlled as control is defined in 49 U.S.C. § 10102 by NS/CR or CSX, to provide rail service along a rail corridor bounded on the West by Chicago and E. St. Louis and on the East by Buffalo and Pittsburgh, with service to, from, and between the following counties in that rail corridor: Erie, New York; Cuyahoga, Lorain, Jefferson, Lucas, and Stark, Ohio; and Allen and Marion, Indiana. Subject to the requirements of paragraph (5) with respect to Marion County, Indiana, such rail service may be limited to service along those sold or leased rail lines where prior divestiture shippers had service by both NS and CR. Such rail service shall include direct connections in Buffalo, E. St. Louis, Toledo and Chicago to a railroad or railroads not controlled by NS/CR or CSX as control is defined in 49 U.S.C. § 10102.

2. The rail tracks, rights and facilities divested pursuant to paragraph (1) and the consideration paid therefor shall be determined by agreement between NS and the acquirer(s).

3. The Divestiture required by paragraph (1) shall be made to acquirer(s) who shall have demonstrated to the Department of Justice that they will be able to provide long-term, viable, competitive rail service along the rail corridor(s) and to, from and between the counties enumerated in paragraph (1), as indicated by their having managerial, operational, and financial capability necessary to compete effectively in the provision of such rail service. The Divestiture required by paragraph (1) may not be accomplished without the prior approval by the Attorney General of its terms and conditions and of the acquirer(s).

4. Following the execution of this Agreement of Sale, NS shall promptly solicit offers to purchase, lease, or operate upon property to be divested in accordance with paragraph (1). NS shall keep records of its efforts to accomplish the Divestiture required by paragraph (1), including the identification of any person or persons expressing an interest to any officer or official of NS, and the terms and conditions of each offer, and shall allow the Department of Justice access to such records. NS shall immediately notify the Department of Justice of the details of any offer related to the Divestiture required by paragraph (1). If NS rejects any such offer, it shall promptly notify the Department of Justice and fully describe the reasons for such rejection.

5. It is further agreed that following divestiture NS, CR, or NS/CR shall switch cars, on terms and conditions customary at other locations within the region of the Divestiture, between the tracks and facilities of the acquirer(s) and the tracks and facilities of any shipper physically served by NS, CR, or NS/CR and open to service by both as of the date hereof, at each of the counties specified in paragraph (1) whenever such switching is practicable and necessary in order to provide a shipper with effective competitive access to the tracks and facilities of the acquirer(s). Following Divestiture, in Marion County, Indiana, NS, CR, or NS/CR shall establish switching charges at levels no higher than those customarily charged at other locations within the region of the Divestiture for switching cars between the tracks and facilities of the acquirer(s) and the tracks and facilities of any shipper served by NS, CR, or NS/CR as of the date hereof. If there is a dispute as to whether such switching is practicable and necessary, or as to such customary conditions and compensation for such switching, such dispute shall be resolved within six months by an arbitration procedure governed by the rules of the American Arbitration Association. In respect of such requirements for practicable and necessary switching of cars, the acquirer(s) and the directly affected shipper(s) shall be entitled to enforce this paragraph, in each such instance, for their sole benefit.

Mr. HEINZ. Will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator yield the floor?

Mr. SPECTER. No, I do not yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania for a question?

Mr. SPECTER. I do yield to my distinguished colleague for a question.

Mr. HEINZ. Mr. President, I just want to commend my colleague, the distinguished Senator from Pennsylvania, for what he said. Likewise, I join him in opposing the motion to proceed.

First among the reasons for opposing the motion to proceed is the fact that there are three Federal bodies charged with the oversight and regulatory responsibilities over railroad mergers—the Justice Department, the Interstate Commerce Commission, and the U.S. Railway Association. None of these has delivered a final word on S. 638.

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, I thank my distinguished colleague, Senator HEINZ, for those comments. I concur with what he has said.

The fact is that, to the extent that other agencies have considered this issue, they have found that there would be a likely antitrust violation.

Mr. President, at this time, I wish to turn to a study prepared by the staff of the Interstate Commerce Commission entitled "Study of the Viability of Guilford Transportation Industries, Inc., and Pittsburgh and Lake Erie Railroad Co. Before and After the Line Divestitures Suggested by the Department of Justice as a Condition to the Acquisition of the Consolidated Rail Corporation by Norfolk Southern Corp."

This was prepared by the staff of the Interstate Commerce Commission that was detailed to the House Subcommittee on Commerce, Transportation, and Tourism.

Mr. President, without taking the time now to put into the RECORD this very extensive finding, I will quote from it very briefly. First, from page 7, referring to the Guilford proposal:

Because these assumptions generally are without merit, Guilford's proposal will not result in a viable post-divestiture operation.

Guilford has underestimated its rehabilitation by only about 10 percent; however, even with the necessary rehabilitation, the carrier's operating facilities will be inferior to its chief competitor, NS-Conrail, in terms of both structure and circuity. Its operating plan does not take into account numerous operating difficulties, such as the lack of double-track line, poorly spaced sidings, and inefficient connections. Guilford also fails to consider how the movement of its trains to and from NS-Conrail lines will be affected by the large volume of NS-Conrail traffic on those lines.

Further, continuing on page 8:

Without the full amount of revenue it projects, Guilford will be perilously close to being unable to meet all of its annual fixed charges.

Then, Mr. President, proceeding to page 9, the ICC staff report goes on with respect to Guilford, stating:

In fact, after a very marginal first year, Guilford will be unable to service its debt, and this deficiency will grow in each of the succeeding years.

In the long run it does not appear that Guilford will be a financially viable carrier.

The ICC staff report then proceeds to the Pittsburgh & Lake Erie proposal. In the summary set forth at page 9, there is this comment:

However, PLE's financial forecasts are far more open to question. It must be noted that, even if all of PLE's projections are accepted, PLE admits that it cannot service all of its substantial debt using revenues from rail operations. Substantial income from the sale of, and use of, nonrail assets is needed to cover debt payments.

Even this finding is based on accepting two highly questionable PLE assumptions. First, PLE provides for no economic downturn in the regional economy over the next five years. Lower cash flows arising from any economic downturn could further impair PLE's solvency. Second, and of more importance, PLE's proposed operating ratios are highly optimistic. It is reasonable to assume that PLE will become more efficient with time and the integration of the new lines. However, it is not reasonable to assume, as did PLE, that it will change from a very inefficient carrier to one of the most efficient carriers in the Eastern District over the next five years.

Accordingly, an alternative analysis was performed assuming more realistic, yet still favorable, operating ratios for PLE. The result was that PLE would be marginally profitable on an operating basis but that it would not be able to meet its substantial obligations under its debt restructuring agreement.

In conclusion, PLE is not now a financially viable carrier and its acquisition of the new lines will not enable it to reverse its already precarious financial position.

Mr. President, at the outset I said I would not go extensively into this ICC staff report, but I do believe that the materials contained herein require very extensive consideration, and analysis by this Senate. I do not believe that this kind of analysis can be obtained in a hurried context, nor in the context of cloture being ordered.

In order that these materials will be available in full to our colleagues, I ask unanimous consent—and I do this realizing the burdens it places on the printing of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, but these matters are of great importance—that this ICC staff report be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD as if read in full.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STUDY OF THE VIABILITY OF GUILFORD TRANSPORTATION INDUSTRIES, INC. AND PITTSBURGH AND LAKE ERIE RAILROAD COMPANY BEFORE AND AFTER THE LINE DIVESTITURES SUGGESTED BY THE DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE AS A CONDITION TO THE ACQUISITION OF THE CONSOLIDATED RAIL CORPORATION BY NORFOLK SOUTHERN CORPORATION

(Prepared by Staff of the Interstate Commerce Commission That Was Detailed to the Subcommittee on Commerce, Transportation and Tourism, August 30, 1985)

I. INTRODUCTION

A. Background

On March 27, 1985, the Honorable James J. Florio, Chairman of the Subcommittee on Commerce, Transportation, and Tourism of the Committee on Energy and Commerce of the United States House of Representatives (Subcommittee), requested that the Interstate Commerce Commission (Commission) assist the Subcommittee in analyzing certain aspects of the recommendation by the United States Department of Transportation (DOT) that Consolidated Rail Corporation (Conrail) be sold to Norfolk Southern Corporation (NS).[1] Specifically, the Commission was asked to analyze: (1) the impact consolidation would have on other carriers in terms of traffic diversion; and (2) the viability of two eastern carriers, Guilford Transportation Industries, Inc., Rail Division (Guilford) and the Pittsburgh and Lake Erie Railroad Company (PLE), which had entered into divestiture agreements with NS as a result of certain competitive concerns raised by the United States Department of Justice (DOJ) to the NS-Conrail consolidation.

Based on Chairman Florio's request, a notice was published in the FEDERAL REGISTER on May 10, 1985, indicating that the Commission would prepare an analysis of the issues raised and setting a procedural schedule for receipt of evidence.[2] On May 29, 1985, Chairman Florio requested a modification in the manner in which the study was to be conducted.[3] Under Chairman Florio's modified request, the Commission's role in the study was to be terminated once the information gathering process was completed. At that time, appropriate Commission staff were to be detailed to the Subcommittee to assist in analyzing the evidence presented. A notice was published in the FEDERAL REGISTER on June 18, 1985, indicating the modification of the study procedures.[4]

Opening statements, replies, and final arguments were submitted by a number of States, railroads, and other interested parties.[5] The official filing period closed on June 19, 1985, and the Commission's participation in the study was terminated at that time. The staff completed and submitted to the Subcommittee that portion of the study concerning traffic diversion on August 2, 1985.[6]

However, by letter dated July 26, 1985, the staff had informed Chairman Florio that, because of delays in receiving certain information, the viability portion of the study would not be completed by August 2nd.[7] That analysis, which was to be completed on or before August 30, 1985, is the subject of this report.

In preparing this report the staff found it necessary to request additional data from many of the parties. This information was not served on the other parties and was made available solely to the Commission staff detailed to the Subcommittee.

Empirical data such as track charts, traffic density charts, and time tables were submitted by NS and Conrail. Two other carrier participants, CSX Corporation (CSX) and Grand Truck Western Railroad Company (GTW), also submitted traffic density charts.

More significantly, Guilford and PLE were asked to submit substantial data supporting their earlier statements. In the case of Guilford, the staff requested specific underlying data supporting the generalized statements in its unverified submission dated June 30, 1985, and filed July 10, 1985. The data dealt with Guilford's traffic analysis, rehabilitation plan, cost and revenue projections, and overall financial assumptions. The underlying data generally reflected the statements in the record. No party has an opportunity to review or respond to this data.

Although PLE had submitted more detailed information than Guilford before the June 19th deadline, much of the additional data PLE submitted showed revised projections. PLE submitted numerous revisions of its financial statements and also revised its traffic analysis to financial statements and also revised its traffic analysis to reflect additional revenues. PLE also supplied data supporting its rehabilitation analysis. No party had an opportunity to review or respond to this data.

In analyzing the viability of Guilford and PLE, the staff relied heavily on this new data, since the staff's role was that of an expert consultant, not a decision-maker in an adversary proceeding. The staff expertise, gained from years of analyzing various railroad consolidation proposals, enabled it to consider this data without the benefit of rebuttal from other interested parties.

Accordingly, the discussion that follows is based primarily on staff analysis of the supplemental supporting data. Thus, many of the points raised by carriers objecting to the proposal are no longer relevant and they are not discussed.

B. Purpose of the study

Chairman Florio requested an analysis of two specific aspects of the proposed sale of Conrail to NS. The first purpose, addressed in the study completed August 2nd, was to estimate the likely traffic diversion from other rail carriers as a result of the proposed combination. That study analyzed diversion to the new NS-Conrail system and to Guilford and PLE and a result of their acquisition of certain Conrail and NS lines. To the extent possible, the diversion estimates were analyzed by carrier, origin-destination corridor, commodity, and pre-diversion and post-diversion routing.[8]

The second purpose of the study, addressed in this report, was to analyze the viability of Guilford and PLE today and after they acquired certain lines that DOJ found must be divested by Conrail and NS in order to avoid certain anticompetitive ramifications of the sale. In this report, the staff analyzes the current financial viability of Guilford and PLE, their ability to finance the proposed acquisitions, and their projected viability under the divestiture proposal.

The question of whether Guilford and PLE will be able to provide shippers with a long-term, viable, competitive alternative to NS-Conrail that will act as a restraint on any possible abuse of market power by NS-Conrail, is beyond the scope of this report and will not be addressed. The issue of competition is only relevant to the discussion of whether Guilford and/or PLE can compete with NS-Conrail for traffic moving between areas served by both Guilford and NS-Conrail and PLE and NS-Conrail. In conclusion, this report analyzes the ability of Guilford and PLE to acquire the lines, undertake any necessary rehabilitation or construction, physically operate trains over the divested lines, offer sufficiently competitive service to attract some level of traffic to the newly acquired lines, and remain financially viable while operating their newly expanded systems.

In keeping with this narrow focus, general allegations about the ultimate advisability of the sale of Conrail to NS were not considered. In addition, alternative plans, i.e. those raised by parties that called for divestiture of additional lines, granting of further trackage rights, additional conditions on the sale, etc., were not considered.

C. Identity of participants

A number of comments were received both supporting and opposing the proposed divestiture plan. Statements and data in support of divestiture were filed by NS, Guilford, and PLE, all parties to the involved transactions.

Conrail, which NS seeks to purchase, opposes the divestiture plan. Two other eastern rail carriers, GTW and CSX, filed verified statements in opposition. In addition, comments expressing concern about the proposal were submitted by Consolidated Coal Company, Eastern Coal Transportation Conference, The Richmond, Fredericksburg and Potomac Railroad Company, the New York State Electric & Gas Corporation, The Attorney Generals of Ohio and Pennsylvania, and the Departments of Transportation of Iowa, Minnesota, New York, and Ohio.

II. SUMMARY OF CONCLUSIONS

A. The Guilford proposal

The Guilford post-divestiture proposal assumes that it will become a key competitor for traffic in the northeast and midwest. (Maps of the current and enlarged Guilford systems are attached as Appendixes R and S, respectively.) Guilford alleges that most of the acquired lines (the Western Extension) are in adequate condition for its proposed operations but that $63 million in rehabiltation is needed. Further, it contends that its operating plan will permit it to provide time-competitive service on trailer-on-flat-car (TOFC) traffic between Chicago, on the one hand, and the New York area and New England, on the other.

Guilford estimates that it will receive additional gross revenue of $161.3 million, less $11.7 million in revenue lost to the NS-Conrail operation. Guilford anticipates that TOFC traffic will account for $61.4 million. In addition to the increased revenue, Guilford foresees continually improving operating efficiencies, resulting in rapidly decreasing operating ratios.

Because these assumptions generally are without merit, Guilford's proposal will not result in a viable post-divestiture operation.

Guilford has underestimated its rehabilitation by only about 10 percent; however, even with the necessary rehabilitation, the carrier's operating facilities will be inferior to its chief competitor, NS-Conrail, in terms of both structure and circuity. Its operating plan does not take into account numerous operating difficulties, such as the lack of double-track line, poorly spaced sidings, and inefficient connections. Guilford also fails to consider how the movement of its trains to and from NS-Conrail lines will be affected by the large volume of NS-Conrail traffic on those lines.

Because of the lack of comparable facilities, Guilford will not be able to maintain competitive schedules on the TOFC traffic at Chicago and, thus will find it difficult to attract such traffic. Guilford also has failed to consider that, although it might benefit initially from some diversion of TOFC traffic, it will not be able to retain all of this traffic against the retaliatory efforts of its competitors. Thus, Guilford will not achieve the large traffic gain it projects, and its revenue gain is overstated by approximately $25 million.

Although the more realistic revenue gain will not prevent Guilford from operating at a profit, the defect in Guilford's proposal goes beyond revenue and expense. Guilford is a highly leveraged company and must generate sufficient cash flow to service its debt. Currently, Guilford is marginally viable, in that it is able to pay its annual fixed charges and, thus, service its debt. Guilford, however, will finance a portion of the acquisition, which will increase the debt to be serviced. Without the full amount of revenue it projects, Guilford will be perilously close to being unable to meet all of its annual fixed charges.

Further, Guilford has overestimated the operating efficiencies it will achieve, in view of the prior history of its component carriers and the nature of the operating efficiencies of other Eastern carriers. Consequently, its net revenue from operations will be substantially less than it projects, and the cash it has available to meet its debt servicing requirements will decrease. In fact, after a very marginal first year, Guilford will be unable to service its debt, and this deficiency will grow in each of the succeeding years.

In the long run it does not appear that Guilford will be a financially viable carrier.

B. The PLE proposal

PLE has submitted a reasonable plan for incorporating the lines to be acquired into its existing system. (Maps of the current and expanded PLE systems are attached as Appendixes T and U, respectively.) It appears likely that PLE can meet its proposed operating plan without spending substantially more than it estimated to upgrade the system. Similarly, it appears likely that PLE will be able to attract the local and regional traffic that it has projected.

However, PLE's financial forecasts are far more open to question. It must be noted that, even if all of PLE's projections are accepted, PLE admits that it cannot service all of its substantial debt using revenues from rail operations. Substantial income from the sale of, and use of, non-rail assets is needed to cover debt payments.

Even this finding is based on accepting two highly questionable PLE assumptions. First, PLE provides for no economic downturn in the regional economy over the next five years. Lower cash flows arising from any economic downturn could further impair PLE's solvency. Second, and of more importance, PLE's proposed operating ratios are highly optimistic. It is reasonable to assume that PLE will become more efficient with time and the integration of the new lines. However, it is not reasonable to assume, as did PLE, that it will change from a very inefficient carrier to one of the most efficient carriers in the Eastern District over the next five years.

Accordingly, an alternate analysis was performed assuming more realistic, yet still favorable, operating ratios for PLE. The result was that PLE would be marginally profitable on an operating basis but that it would not be able to meet its substantial obligations under its debt restructuring agreement.

In conclusion, PLE is not now a financially viable carrier and its acquisition of the new lines will not enable it to reverse its already precarious financial position.

III. GUILFORD ANALYSIS

A. Overview of Guilford Plan.

1. The Current System

Guilford is a non-carrier holding company that was created in 1981. In June 1981, it acquired the stock of Maine Central Railroad Company (MEC) for $18.5 million; in June 1983, it acquired the stock of Boston and Maine Corporation (B&M) for $24.25 million; and in January 1984, it acquired the stock of Delaware and Hudson Railway Company (D&H) for $500,000 in cash and the repayment of a $7.0 million note. Although the three carriers are separate entities, Guilford has integrated their operations into a 4,000 mile rail system with 4,000 employees. It extends in an east-west direction from the Northeast corner of Maine to Buffalo, NY and serves all of New England, except Rhode Island. North to south, the system extends from Montreal, Canada to New York, Pennsylvania, and Washington, D.C.

More specifically, its MEC routes extend from Vanceboro and Woodland, ME to Bangor, ME and from there to Portland, ME. From Portland, a line extends west to St. Johnsbury, VT. Additional lines permit service to several southern Maine points such as Augusta and Rockland.

Service over the B&M lines extends from Portland to Boston, MA and from Concord, NH to Boston. A line runs from Boston west to Mechanicville and Rotterdam Jct., NY. There is also north-south service from Berlin, NH through Wells River, VT, Springfield, MA, and Hartford, CT, to New Haven, CT, with a branch running to Waterbury, CT.

Service over the D&H lines runs from Montreal, through Mechanicville to Binghamton, NY. From Binghamton, westbound service extends to Buffalo, and southbound service extends through Wilkes-Barre, PA, to the Newark/New York City area, Philadelphia, and Washington, D.C.

In 1984, the operations of Guilford's existing lines (Rail Division) realized revenues of $307.0 million and net income of $5.2 million, notwithstanding a net loss by D&H of almost $7.0 million. Through the first six months of 1985, Guilford's net income from the rail operations was approximately $3.0 million.

2. The Divestiture Proposals

Guilford will purchase or assume leases on 955.5 miles of line, and it will be granted trackage rights over 399 miles of line.[9] The purchase price for these lines is $50 million.

The principal lines to be acquired by Guilford are those extending between Buffalo, on the east, and Chicago and E. St. Louis, IL on the west. Acquisition of the line between Buffalo and Chicago will involve the purchase of NS's line from Buffalo to Cleveland, OH; receipt of trackage rights over Conrail's line from Cleveland to Crestline, OH; purchase of Conrail's line from Crestline to Gary, IN, via Ft. Wayne, IN; and receipt of trackage rights over Conrail's line from Gary into Chicago. Guilford also will purchase NS's 55th Street Yard in Cleveland and Conrail's Bison Yard in Buffalo, its Colehour Yard in Chicago, and its yard in Ft. Wayne. Guilford will also obtain the use of a portion of Conrail's Croxton Yard in Jersey City, NJ, which is near New York City.

Guilford's Buffalo to E. St. Louis route will involve the above-described route up to the point of Delphos, OH. Guilford will purchase NS's route from Delphos to E. St. Louis, including NS's Madison Yard at E. St. Louis. In addition, NS has offered Guilford trackage rights as an alternate route to bypass the low-speed Delphos-Frankfort, IN line while Guilford rehabilitates that line.

Guilford also will purchase NS's 56-mile line in Indiana between Indianapolis and Kokomo, a point on the Delphos-E. St. Louis line. Further, at Bucyrus, OH, a point on Conrail's Crestline-Chicago line, Guilford will receive trackage rights over NS to Carrothers, OH and will purchase the Conrail line from Carrothers to Toledo.

Further, Guilford will be granted trackage rights over 182.2 miles of Conrail lines between Binghamton and Suffern, NY (Southern Tier). Guilford then will seek trackage rights over 30.0 miles of New Jersey Transit lines between Suffern and Jersey City, via Ridgewood Junction, NJ. Finally, Guilford will receive trackage rights over 47.9 miles of Conrail line between Lurgan and Rockville, PA.

In addition, the agreement provides for reciprocal switching arrangements between Guilford and NS-Conrail at industries, stations, or within switching districts where NS and Conrail currently have such arrangements or jointly serve the industry, station, or switching district. At certain of these points NS-Conrail traffic will be handled by Guilford under a car haulage agreement. Further, NS-Conrail will be granted trackage rights over certain Guildford lines.

The agreement also provides that Guilford will purchase certain listed rail cars for $3.0 million, and will have the option to purchase up to 45 GP9 locomotives from NS at a price of $50,000 each and up to 25 SD35 locomotives from NS at a price of $90,000 each. Also Guilford has the option to purchase up to 45 GP38, GP39, or GP40 locomotives from Conrail, to the extent that they become surplus. The price will be equal to the locomotive's fair market value, but will not exceed $120,000 each.

Finally, under the terms of the NS-Guilford agreement, Guilford will acquire certain lines described in the NS-PLE agreement, if PLE elects not to do so.

3. The Post-Divestiture Guilford System

Acquisition of the divested lines will increase the Guilford system to over 5,300 miles and its employment to approximately 5,000, making it the ninth largest carrier in the country. Its service area will be extended westward from Buffalo to the important midwestern gateways of Chicago and St. Louis. Guilford anticipates that it will be able to compete for the Chicago and St. Louis intermodal traffic moving to and from Boston and the New York area. In addition, it expects to provide a competitive service at new markets such as Toledo, Cleveland, Indianapolis, and Ft. Wayne, where it will have access to shippers through reciprocal switching or other terminal arrangements. Finally, Guilford will receive new revenue from the extended haul on traffic it presently transports but must interchange at its western terminus.

Accordingly, it projects ever increasing revenues and profits throughout the first years after acquisition. This assertion is based on a number of assumptions dealing with the physical condition of the lines to be acquired, the operating plan over these lines, the ability to market the new services, and the revenues that will result from the new services.

According to Guilford, the lines being acquired through purchase or trackage rights are generally in good physical condition. It allocates a total of $63 million for capital expenditures on the new lines over five years. The bulk of the money, approximately $39 million, is set aside to upgrade the Delphos to St. Louis line. Other major expenditures are for two lines that are already among the best on the system; $6.38 million for the Buffalo to Cleveland segment, and $7.18 million for the Crestline to Chicago line. An additional $5 million is set aside for new connections, certain yard work, and start-up costs for other capital projects. Guilford is keeping $4.8 million in reserve to be used as needed on the system. Finally, it claims no need to improve, at its expense, the very important TOFC yards at Croxton or Colehour. According to Guilford, these facilities will be operated by contract yard operators who will be responsible for supplying the lifts and other equipment necessary for a successful operation. The operators will be paid through a lift service charge applied to each car. Guilford notes that its Boston facility is currently operated in a similar fashion.

With its new facilities Guilford states that it will be able to offer service competitive with existing service in the region. Its operating plan calls for the following: daily Croxton-Chicago and Boston-Chicago piggyback trains in each direction; daily Portland-St. Louis and E. Deerfield/Mechanicville-Chicago manifest trains in each direction; six days per week service between Toledo-Crestline and Indianapolis-Kokomo with connections east and west; and local service on all lines.

Guilford claims that its manifest train service times to and from the midwest will generally be comparable with Conrail. It claims that it will be service competitive with Conrail for TOFC traffic between New York and Chicago, and that it will operate at only a slight time disadvantage compared to Contrail in the Boston-Chicago market. It does acknowledge that its intermodal service to and from St. Louis will be one day slower.

Based on its operating plan, and its ability to price competitively with Conrail, Guilford claims that it will be able to attract substantial new business, especially intermodal business that it claims Conrail has had to itself for the last few years. Guilford also believes that it will pick up additional general freight business new to both its system and the lines being acquired. In addition, Guilford states that it will get additional traffic and revenues by virtue of: (1) an extended haul on much of its existing traffic; (2) the startup of a friendly connection with the enlarged PLE; (3) the ability to keep much of the traffic on the lines it is acquiring despite the retention by NS-Contrail of reciprocal switching rights at many key points; and (4) car haulage payments when it moves traffic on behalf of NS-Conrail at these reciprocal switching points.

As a result, Guilford claims that it will have additional gross revenue of $161.3 million because of these new lines. That revenue figure is broken down as follows:

	Million
New TOFC traffic	$61.4
New general freight traffic	18.1
Extended hauls	40.7
Traffic on divested lines	34.2
Car haulage revenues	3.9
PLE interchange traffic	3.0

However, Guilford also claims that it will lose $11.7 million in diversions as a result of the NS-Conrail consolidation. The result is that the western extension will provide Guilford with a total of $149.6 million in additional gross revenue.

With this additional gross revenue, Guilford projects that it will be a viable railroad. It projects its net income will rise from an actual 1984 figure of $5.157 milllion to in excess of $19 million by the second year after acquisition and in excess of $36 million by the end of the fourth year after acquisition. At the same time Guilford projects, that it will become more efficient as it integrates the new lines with its existing system, and that it will have an operating ratio of 90.13 percent by the end of the fourth year after acquisition, compared to its 1984 operating ratio of 98.58 percent. According to Guilford, its integration of the new lines with its existing system will enable it to be an efficient, competitive force in the region, and a viable railroad.

B. Criticisms of Guilford proposal

Conrail, GTW, and CSX have raised a number of objections to Guilford's proposal. These objections fall generally into five categories. They relate to Guilford's: (1) statements on current and future financial viability; (2) estimate of the current condition of the lines to be acquired and need for rehabilitation; (3) proposed operating plan; (4) proposed marketing plan; and (5) estimate of traffic diversion. The major criticisms raised in each category are outlined below.

The opponents of the plan contend that Guilford's financial condition is very weak now and cannot support any further financial obligations such as those required by the purchase of the Western Extension. They note that, of the three railroads in the Guilford system, only MEC has shown a profit consistently and that Guilford lost $29.8 million between 1982-1984. They question whether a railroad that is deeply in debt, consistently late in paying its bills, and has operating ratios considerably higher than other Eastern District railroads, can successfully operate a costly expanded system. The opponents further contend that most of the improvement shown in Guilford's financial condition over the past year has been due to changes in accounting methods and not to any actual improvement in its financial condition. Finally, they argue that, even accepting Guilford's statement of its current financial status, its condition is so precarious that any miscalculation as to the amount of new revenues it will attain will place Guilford in a losing, rather than profitable, position.

The opponents assert that the lines to be acquired are in poor physical condition, particularly if compared to the competing NS-Conrail lines. They estimate that necessary rehabilitation of these lines will cost between $137.3 and $184.7 million plus an additional $5-$5.6 million for rehabilitation of rail yards and construction of new connections. They also argue that annual maintenance will cost $10.1-$19.0 million. The opponents doubt Guilford's ability to obtain the necessary funds to accomplish this level of rehabilitation.

According to the opponents, Guilford's operating plan is totally unrealistic. They argue that Guilford will suffer a severe time disadvantage compared to NS-Conrail, with trains often two days slower than on the comparable NS-Conrail lines. They contend that Guilford's train schedules do not: (1) take into account speed restrictions on much of the track to be acquired; (2) acknowledge the existence of single-track areas with few passing-sidings which result in delays; and (3) consider Guilford's limited switching access at Chicago, St. Louis, and Toledo. The opponents assert that, when all of these problems are correctly figured into train schedules, Guilford will not be able to meet its operating plan and, thus, will not be able to compete with NS-Conrail.

The opponents assert that Guilford's one-to-two day late, one-train per day, circuitous service will not attract significant amounts of traffic to Guilford. Thus, they contend its marketing plan is unlikely to succeed. They note that most intermodal traffic is time-sensitive and, therefore, Guilford's slow service will not be able to compete with NS-Conrail, CSX, or GTW. They argue that shippers currently using NS or Conrail will have no incentive to use Guilford, particularly since NS-Conrail will have superior tracks paralleling those to be acquired by Guilford and overlaying most of Guilford's territory. The opponents contend that western carriers will not be "neutral" in their connections with Guilford since they will not want to alienate the more powerful eastern carriers such as NS-Conrail or CSX. They note that these large eastern carriers could route more traffic away from western carriers that favor Guilford, than Guilford can route to them. They question Guilford's assumption that there is a large volume of traffic on the lines to be acquired that is currently being ignored by Conrail and thus is available as "new" traffic for Guilford.

Finally, the opponents contend that Guilford's traffic diversion figures are too high. As discussed above, they doubt that Guilford can attract a significant amount of traffic due to its circuitous routes, slow times, and poor switching arrangement. They contend that it is more likely that the powerful NS-Conrail system will be able to divert, or hold on to, traffic from Guilford, than Guilford will divert traffic from NS-Conrail. Essentially, they argue that Guilford cannot expect to gain the additional $161.3 million in revenues it projects. Therefore, returning to their arguments on financial viability, they argue that, without the huge influx of new revenues assumed by Guilford, Guilford cannot be a financially viable carrier.

C. Discussion of Guilford proposal

1. Description and condition of lines

Guilford is gaining access to about 1,354 route-miles of line from both Conrail and NS. It intends to purchase 955.5 route-miles and obtain trackage rights over 399.0 route-miles. A description of each line, including its current condition as determined by track charts and timetables, is set forth below.

a. Ft. Wayne Line.—This line is owned by Conrail and runs from Crestline, OH (MP 188.17) to Chicago (MP 446.7), containing 258.0 route-miles and 299.0 track-miles. Included as part of this line are Colehour Yard, located just southeast of Chicago, and connections at Crestline and Delphos. According to track charts, the rail is mostly 131 to 140-lb. and the speed limits are 70/70 or 60/50 except through towns and yards.[10] The line is listed as Class 4, which indicates that the ties and track alignment are also good.

Colehour Yard, located on the south side of Chicago, contains 32.7 miles of track distributed over 43 separate tracks. Conrail presently has six tracks in local service. These are in fair condition. Two tracks are leased for storage. One track is used for maintenance of way and camp car storage. Two tracks are used for engine and care storage. The remainder of the yard is in poor condition.[11]

b. The Carrothers Branch.—This line is owned by Conrail and runs from Carrothers, OH (MP 27.1) to Toledo (MP 82.7), containing 55.6 route-miles and 87.3 track-miles. Also included is Yard "E" in the Toledo area, and a connection at Oakdale. The line is generally at FRA Class 3, with a 30 m.p.h. speed limit for 31 miles and a 40 m.p.h. speed limit for approximately 10 miles. However, the track charts and timetables for this line indicate that the speed limit is generally 25 m.p.h. even though there is a substantial amount of double track and the rail is mostly 131-lb. and 132-lb. Since FRA Class 3 track generally has a maximum speed of 40 m.p.h. for freight service, it is unclear why this line has operated at a 25 m.p.h. speed limit. To resolve this apparent discrepancy, the past and present traffic over the line was investigated.

Historically, this line carried a large amount of limestone to steel mills located at opposite ends of the line from quarries located on-line. The existing traffic is primarily limestone trains and this may account for the line being listed as FRA Class 3, but the timetable and track charts listing a lower-than-expected speed of 25 m.p.h. for virtually the entire line. Limestone traffic frequently falls in the category of heavy wheel loading and slower speeds are not unusual. In addition, a history of heavy traffic may have caused considerable rail wear which would not necessarily be reflected in the FRA classification but would affect the speed limit.

There is no specific information regarding the present condition of Yard "E".

c. The Ft. Wayne Secondary.—This line is owned by Conrail and runs from Adams, IN (MP 86.8) to Decatur, IN (MP 70.4), containing 16.2 route-miles. The line is single track and is presently FRA Class 1. According to the track charts, the speed limit is 10 m.p.h. and the 100-lb. rail installed on the line is 1914 to 1929 vintage.

d. Clark Branch.—Guilford is seeking trackage rights over Conrail's Clark Branch from Clark, near Cleveland (MP 12.9) to Berea, OH (MP 21.9). The line contains 9.0 route-miles and 18.0 track-miles. There is also a connection near Cleveland north of Cloggville Yard. According to track charts the line is double track, has a speed limit of 30 m.p.h., and consists largely of 127-lb. rail, vintage 1929 and 1956.

e. Cleveland-Indianapolis Main.—Guilford is seeking trackage rights over Conrail's Cleveland-Indianapolis Main line from Berea (MP 12.5) to Crestline (MP 74.7). The line contains 62.2 route-miles and 81.3 track-miles. MP 12.5 at Berea is the same as MP 21.9 on the Clark Branch. According to track charts the main track is mostly 140-lb. rail, the passing tracks are mostly 127-lb. rail, and the speed limits are 70 m.p.h. for passenger and 50 m.p.h. for freight.

f. Buffalo-Chicago Main.—Guilford is seeking trackage rights over Conrail's Buffalo-Chicago Main Line from Berea (MP 193.9) to Elyria Yard (MP 204.6). The line contains 10.7 route-miles and 21.4 track-miles. According to track charts, the main tracks are 140-lb. rail and passing tracks are 127-lb. rail. The speed limits are 79/70/50 or 70/70/50 [12].

g. South Lorain Branch.—Guilford is seeking trackage rights over Conrail's South Lorain Branch from Elyria Yard (MP 0.0) to South Lorain (MP 6.8). The line contains 6.8 route-miles and is single track. There was a problem with the mileposts. The track charts submitted only showed the line from MP 0.0 to MP 3.1. The Guilford agreement listed mileposts 0.0 to 6.8. Since the discrepancy was not otherwise resolved, it is assumed that the line continues on to MP 6.8 at South Lorain. The line is FRA Class 1 and carries heavy traffic to and from steel mills in the area. According to track charts, the line consists mostly of 110-lb. and 130-lb. rail, and the speed limit is 10 m.p.h. This information was only available from MP 0.0 to MP 3.1; it is assumed that the remainder of the line is similar.

h. Buffalo-Chicago Main.—Guilford is seeking trackage rights over Conrail's Buffalo-Chicago main line from CP 446 to CP 455 in the southeast Chicago area near Colehour Yard. The line contains approximately 9 route-miles and 23.8 track-miles. The agreement with Guilford lists the mileposts at 501.0 to 509.5. There is some problem with the end point definition near MP 509.5. Therefore, the control points will be accepted as limiting designations only. The line is presently at FRA Class 4. No track charts were furnished for this line, but since it is a portion of Conrail's New York to Chicago main line, it is reasonable to conclude that it is in good condition.

i. Buffalo and Cleveland Districts.—These districts encompass NS's main line from Buffalo (MP 1.5) to Cleveland (MP 189.2), and contain 187.7 route-miles and 264.7 track-miles. The line is mostly FRA Class 4 with some sections at FRA Class 3. The line contains mostly 131-lb. and 132-lb. rail installed in 1978-1981. The speed limit is 60 m.p.h. with CTC and ABS signals.[13] The only deviations are restrictions for turnouts, junctions or interlockings, yards, curves, and towns. Restrictions in areas such as these are normally based on operational considerations and are not usually reflective of track conditions. Some of these areas have been slow ordered to 20 m.p.h.

j. Cloggville Yard.—This yard is owned by Conrail and is located at the east end of the Clark Branch in the Cleveland area. The track involved here runs from MP 11.8 to MP 14.0, containing 2.2 route-miles. According to track charts, the speed limit is 10 m.p.h. and the track is adjacent to a yard. Lower speed limits are expected in congested areas such as this and are not necessarily indicative of poor track.

k. The Marion District.—This line is owned by NS and runs from Douglas, OH (MP 65.5) and Frankfort, IN (MP 206.5), containing 141.0 route-miles. The line is single track with passing sidings. The section of the line from Delphos to Marion is in poor condition at FRA Class 1. The speed limit for the line is 25 m.p.h., but 28 miles has been slow-ordered to 10 m.p.h. The rail is 90-lb. to 100-lb. relay, jointed and non-control cooled. The section of the line from Marion to Frankfort is in slightly better condition at FRA Class 2. There are two large bridges that prohibit the operation of 6-axle diesels. The timetable speed is 25 m.p.h. except for yards and some curves. The rail was installed from 1926 to 1952, and there are large amounts of 1928 vintage 90-lb. and 1937 vintage 100-lb. The weight range of the rail for this line is 90-lb. to 112-lb. Recent photos of the section of the line near Marion confirm that the line is in fair to good condition for a branch, but unsuitable in its present state for main line service.

l. The Charleston District.—This line is owned by NS and runs from Frankfort (MP 208.0) to Charleston, IL (MP 318.2), containing 110.2 route-miles. The line is single track with some passing sidings. The line is mostly FRA Class 3, with a speed limit of 35 m.p.h. The rail is 112-lb. to 115-lb. with some 110-lb. and 132-lb. rail. The 112-lb. rail is 1941 to 1949 vintage. The 115-lb. rail is 1953 to 1956 vintage. There are no signals on the line.

m. The Madison District.—This line is owned by NS and runs from Charleston (MP 318.2) to East St. Louis (MP 447.0), containing 128.8 route-miles. The line is single track with passing sidings. There is also a yard at Madison. The line is FRA Class 3 with speed limits ranging from 30 m.p.h. to 40 m.p.h. The rail is mostly 112-lb. to 115-lb., mixed 1940's vintage. There is some 110-lb. rail, 1932 vintage, from MP 414 to MP 422. The are no signals on the line.

n. The Indianapolis District.—This line is owned by NS and runs from Indianapolis (MP 2.1) to Kokomo (MP 58.0). The line contains 55.9 route-miles and is single track. The line is generally FRA Class 2, with a speed limit of 15 m.p.h. for seven miles, and 25 m.p.h. for 49 miles. There are additional 15 m.p.h. speed restrictions due to city ordinances. The first seven miles of 15 m.p.h. is largely within yard limits at Indianapolis. The rail is mostly 90-lb., 1929 to 1945 vintage, with some 100-lb. to 110-lb. rail.

o. Kokomo Secondary.—Guilford is seeking trackage rights over NS's Kokomo Secondary from MP 159.1 to MP 159.4 in the Kokomo area. No information was presented concerning this line. It is assumed that its present condition is adequate.

p. Sandusky District.—Guilford is seeking trackage rights over NS's Sandusky District from Bucyrus, OH (MP 62.9) to Carrothers (MP 76.6). The line contains 13.7 route-miles and 17.2 track-miles. The line is presently FRA Class 4. According to track charts, the speed limit on the line is 50 m.p.h. from MP 62.9 to MP 73.8 and 60 m.p.h. on the westbound main and 50 m.p.h. on the eastbound main from MP 73.8 to MP 76.6. The rail is 132-lb. CWR[14] with 130-lb. on sidings.

q. Frankfort District.—Guilford is seeking trackage rights over NS' Frankfort District from MP 206.5 to MP 208.0 in the Frankfort, IN area. This line connects the Charleston and Madison Districts mentioned earlier. According to track charts, the speed limit for this line is 20 m.p.h. and it is all located in or near a yard. The low speed limit is not reflective of track condition but has probably been set based on operating parameters.

r. New Jersey Transit.—Guilford is seeking trackage rights over New Jersey Transit from Croxton Yard (approximately MP 1.0) to Suffern, NY (MP 31.0). No information was presented for this line but it appears that the speed limits on this section are in the 40 to 50 m.p.h. range, indicating that the line is in very good condition.

s. Southern Tier.—The Southern Tier is a term used to describe lines of the former Erie Railroad, now owned by Conrail, running across the extreme southern part of New York. The part of this line under consideration is the section running from Suffern (MP 31.0) to Binghamton (MP 213.2). According to timetables, the speed limit is between 35 m.p.h. and 40 m.p.h. except for 1.1 miles of 30 m.p.h. at CP Sparrow, and 13.8 miles of 25 m.p.h. to 30 m.p.h. from CP Deposit over Gulf Summit to Lanesboro, and 2.0 miles of 30 m.p.h. at Binghamton yards. The line is FRA Class 3, with the possible exception of the second track from Gulf Summit to Lanesboro.

t. Rockville-Harrisburg.—Guilford is seeking trackage rights over Conrail from Rockville, PA (MP 109.9) to Harrisburg (MP 105.2). Since this is Conrail's main line through Pennsylvania, and also handles Amtrak trains, it is concluded that this line is in good condition.

u. Harrisburg.—Guilford is seeking trackage rights over Amtrak through the Harrisburg Station (MP 105.2 to MP 104.8). Since this line is contiguous with the Rockville to Harrisburg line, it is again concluded that the line is in good condition.

v. Harris-Capital.—Guilford is seeking trackage rights over Conrail's wye south of the Harrisburg station between Harris (MP 112.2) and Capital (MP 112.6). This is the connector from Amtrak's Philadelphia line and Conrail's Lurgan Branch. The condition of the wye is adequate.

w. Lurgan Branch.—Guilford is seeking trackage rights over Conrail's Lurgan Branch from Harrisburg (MP 0.0) to Lurgan, PA (MP 42.4). The line contains 42.4 route-miles and 53.4 track-miles. According to timetables, the speed limit for the line is 40 m.p.h. The line is FRA Class 3.

x. Huntington-New Castle.—Guilford is seeking trackage rights over NS's Huntington-New Castle line from Ft. Wayne (MP 146.0) through Hugo (MP 149.2-MP 184.1) to Bluffton (MP 162.6). The line contains 24.7 route-miles and is single track. The line is in adequate condition.

2. Operating Plan

a. Introduction.—In the following pages, Guilford's proposed train operations and the schedules for those trains are set forth. The service and schedule will be analyzed by examining the service and schedule with which these trains must compete and certain operational factors which affect Guilford's ability to meet its schedules. As is true with any operating plan, Guilford depends on assumptions made about the condition of the line. Where relevant, the line condition and Guilford's plans for rehabiliating the line to meet its operating plan timetable will be examined. Guilford's plans to acquire additional equipment in order to fully use its new routes will also briefly be discussed.

b. The Train Operations.—Guilford proposes to operate the following trains over the acquired lines and trackage rights:

A daily Croxton (New York area)-Chicago piggyback train in each direction;

A daily Boston-Chicago piggyback train in each direction, with connections to/from Maine;

A daily Portland-St. Louis manifest train, in each direction, also carrying connecting piggyback traffic to/from New York and Boston;

A daily E. Deerfield/Mechanicville-Chicago manifest train in each direction;

Six days per week service between Toledo and Crestline with connections east and west;

Six days per week service between Indianapolis and Kokomo connections east and west; and Local service on all lines of the Western Extension designed to meet the needs of shippers at the various stations and, in general, at the same or higher levels of service that is now provided.

c. The Train Schedules.—In discussing the various schedules, Guilford's plans have been broken down into two categories: piggyback traffic and manifest traffic. This is necessary since much of Guilford's financial assumptions rest on its belief that it will provide competitive TOFC service on Conrail's and, thus, attract substantial revenues. For this reason, Conrail's existing schedules for much of this TOFC traffic will also be set forth. The discussion will also analyze the distinct traffic flows separately since Guilford's marketing and traffic assumptions also focus on market pairs. Finally, in many instances Conrail's arguments will be relied on, since its witness submitted especially detailed data concerning the operating plan.

There are two exhibits to assist in the understanding of this section. Table 1 sets forth Guilford's proposed schedules for TOFC traffic. Table 2 sets forth the Guilford and Conrail transit times between specific markets for TOFC traffic.

d. TOFC Traffic:

i. NY-Chicago.—According to Guilford, its TOFC service between New York and Chicago (both directions) is time competitive with Conrail's. However, Conrail claims that Guilford has substantially underestimated the operating difficulties it will encounter in trying to provide this service. It contends that the proposed Guilford schedules are false or misleading. In calculating the best possible schedule for Guilford, Conrail considered train density and the number of segments of single track line with few passing-sidings. It developed a transit time of 33 hours and 15 minutes for Guilford's Croxton-Chicago TOFC train and 35 hours and 30 minutes for the eastbound train, based on a maximum speed of 60 m.p.h. Conrail, in computing the best possible transit times on an authorized speed of 40 m.p.h., developed transit times of 38 hours from Croxton to Chicago and 39 hours and 15 minutes Chicago to Croxton.

Further, Conrail contends that dock-to-dock time (the time necessary for yard terminal work and for delivering or drayage to or from industries at either end of the trip, in addition to the rail transit time) of its intermodal service would be significantly faster than Guilford's. It suggests that Guilford's dock-to-dock service in either direction (at 40 m.p.h.) would be approximately 44-45 hours as compared to Conrail's dock-to-dock time of 35-36 hours. Conrail states that these times would allow Guilford, at best, to provide third morning service on this very competitive traffic.

The lines over which Guilford will operate have been analyzed, and it is found that there will be numerous points of congestion. Certain points have heavy traffic densities with long segments of single track and limited passing-sidings.

Of specific concern is the movement of Guilford's trains to and from the NS-Conrail Cleveland-Indianapolis line at Crestline. The connection proposed by Guilford at this location will be constructed under a highway bridge and would go between bridge piers. Guilford has indicated that the connection will contain a sharp curve. Operations over this curve will be at slow speeds. The reduced speed of Guilford's trains during movement to and from the NS-Conrail line will be taken into consideration as to when a Guilford train will be accepted for movement. The density of Conrail's traffic through Crestline indicates that NS-Conrail traffic will constantly be in conflict with any Guilford movement at this location.

Also of concern is the movement of Guilford's trains to and from NS-Conrail lines at Cloggville in the Cleveland terminal area. The related movement of trains between Cloggville and Berea for the account of Guilford is within an area of heavy terminal traffic and two important yards for this provision of service to and from industry. The potential of delay to Guilford's trains in this area is significant.

Under the circumstances, it is unlikely that Guilford could on a regular basis make its suggested transit time. In fact, Guilford's transit times will be in the range of the Conrail estimate, approximately four hours slower than Guilford estimated.

ii. Boston-Chicago.—Conrail estimates a Guilford transit time (at 40 m.p.h.) of 47 hours, for this traffic compared to 33 hours and 30 minutes transit time of Conrail's latest published schedule. Dock-to-dock service will require 47 hours and 45 minutes at 50 m.p.h. and 53 hours at 40 m.p.h. compared to dock-to-dock service Conrail offers in 39½ hours.[15]

For the reasons given for the New York-Chicago service, this service, which is provided over the same tracks as the New York-Chicago service, will be substantially slower than estimated by Guilford. Conrail's estimate is accepted.

iii. Boston-St. Louis and New York-St. Louis.—An examination of Table 2 makes it clear that Guilford is not even suggesting that it will be able to compete with Conrail vis-a-vis transit times in this market. This, in large part, is due to Guilford's acknowledgment of the relatively poor condition of the Delphos to St. Louis line. Nevertheless, as will be discussed in more detail in the section on traffic diversion, Guilford claims that it will be able to attract less time sensitive traffic to this line because of its ability to price this service competitively.

iv. Other.—In addition, Guilford is proposing through TOFC service between Portland, ME and Chicago and between Portland and St. Louis. Such service is not provided by Conrail since it does not serve Portland. Guilford's service provides transit time of 47 hours and 16 minutes between Portland and Chicago and 46 hours and 6 minutes between Chicago and Portland. As a general comment concerning this service, as well as the service between Croxton-St. Louis, and Boston-St. Louis, it must be noted that Guilford's schedules each use a combination of two through trains, including manifest trains. These combinations of through trains indicate that traffic in one train will be passed to another train at some location. Guilford's operating plan does not specify which intermediate terminal would be used for this purpose.

e. Manifest Traffic.—Guilford proposes one train per day in each direction between Portland-Chicago, with connections for Boston and Albany. The western terminal for this train is on The Belt Railway Company of Chicago, providing connections to and from western carriers in Chicago.

A comparison of service between Conrail and Guilford for Portland-Chicago traffic cannot be made as Conrail does not serve Portland. However, a comparison can be made for service between Chicago and Albany and Chicago and Boston. See Table 3.

[3] Guilford's analysis of Conrail's service apparently was miscalculated in Guilford's June 30, 1985 submission.

Guilford proposes to operate only one train six days per week in each direction between Crestline and Toledo. Train TOCR, departing from Toledo at 0600 hours, is scheduled to arrive in Crestline at 1210 hours, but traffic for St. Louis would not depart in train POSL until 0823 hours the following day, or 20 hours and 13 minutes later. The overall schedule between Toledo and St. Louis and would be from 0600 hours ET on Day 1 until 0723 hours CT on Day 3 or 50 hours and 23 minutes. In the opposite direction, traffic from St. Louis to and via Toledo is scheduled to arrive in Crestline at 1830 hours in train SLPO and depart for Toledo at 1500 hours the following day in train CRTO, or 20 hours and 30 minutes later. The overall schedule between St. Louis and Toledo would be from 1700 hours CT on Day 1 until 2055 hours ET on Day 3, or 50 hours and 55 minutes. Some traffic, to, from, and via Toledo, would be delayed an additional 24 hours one day per week.

Conrail's service from St. Louis to Toledo includes train BNTO six days per week having a schedule of 19 hours. Additional service is provided by daily trains ASIN and TRIN from St. Louis which connect with train INTO daily at Indianapolis and the overall schedules from St. Louis to Toledo are 27 hours and 30 minutes and 37 hours and 30 minutes, respectively. Train MPIN received from the Missouri Pacific Railroad Company (MoPac) at St. Elmo, IL also connects with train INTO and the schedule from St. Elmo to Toledo is 26 hours and 30 minutes.

In the opposite direction, Conrail train STBN operates five days per week on a schedule of 16 hours and 30 minutes from Toledo to St. Louis.[16] Daily service is provided by train ELCO from Toledo and its St. Louis traffic is handled from Indianapolis in trains INAS, INCB and INTR. Overall schedules from Toledo to E. St. Louis range from 37 hours and 30 minutes to 39 hours and 15 minutes. ELCO traffic is also moved from Indianapolis to the MoPac at St. Elmo in daily trains INMP-A and INMP-B. The overall schedules from Toledo to St. Elmo are 30 hours and 30 minutes and 35 hours and 59 minutes, respectively. Conrail train DNIN operates daily from Detroit to Indianapolis and connects with all five trains previously mentioned. This train does not pick up at Toledo, and the longest schedule time from Detroit to E. St. Louis is 36 hours and 15 minutes.

NS through freight service between Decatur and St. Louis is provided by three trains southbound and two trains northbound. However, unlike Conrail, NS has through freight service between Detroit and St. Louis which operates via Montpelier, Ft. Wayne, and Decatur, and not via Toledo. Train DS-11 operates from Detroit (Oakwood Yard) to St. Louis (Luther Yard) and its schedule is 18 hours and 30 minutes. Certain St. Louis traffic from train DS-11 is handled from Decatur to E. St. Louis in train MP-77 and the overall schedule from Detroit is 33 hours. Traffic from St. Louis to Detroit moves in trains SC-18 and SD-78 to Decatur and then in train KD-12 to Detroit. Overall schedules are 29 hours and 30 minutes from St. Louis and E. St. Louis (Alton & Southern Railway Company's Davis Yard), respectively.

Trains SC-18 and SD-78 also connect at Decatur with train TC-4 to Bellevue and then train WJ-1 to Toledo. Overall schedules from St. Louis and E. St. Louis to Toledo are 38 hours and 30 minutes and 39 hours.

Under the NS proposed service, all Detroit-St. Louis corridor traffic would move via Toledo and that location would have better service than either NS or Conrail has at present.

The NS-Conrail combination route from Toledo to E. St. Louis via Butler, Ft. Wayne and Indianapolis would be 459 miles and would have authorized maximum speeds of 50 and 60 m.p.h. By contrast, Guilford's route, after an expenditure of more than $39 million for upgrading plus an undisclosed amount for a new connection at Delphos, would be 533 miles including a backhaul of at least 9 miles in each direction between Bucyrus and the yard at Crestline. Prior to completion of the upgrading, which could take as long as five years, the temporary detour route between Delphos and Bluffton via Ft. Wayne would add 20 miles.

Guilford's circuity of 74 miles, coupled with longer transit times between Toledo and E. St. Louis, would result in higher unit transportation and maintenance of equipment costs.

In summary, on St. Louis corridor traffic to, from, and via Toldeo, including a large segment of shipments to and from Michigan, Guilford could not offer effective competition to NS-Conrail on the basis of frequency of service or transit time. Consequently, other carriers could not rely on Guilford to provide effective interline competition in the St. Louis corridor via the Toledo gateway. Interchange delays at Toledo would further restrict effective regional carrier interline competition to NS-Conrail.

f. Line Condition. In analyzing an operating plan, attention must be paid to the condition of the line, the configuration of connections, and the adequacy of the communications system. Although Guilford's rehabilitation proposal is discussed in detail below, it is necessary to focus on certain aspects of the line's condition in this discussion. Specifically, there is concern about the ability of Guilford to operate over the Delphos-St. Louis line, its plans for a connection at Crestline, its use of Yard E in Toledo, and the lack of a communications system on segments of the line.

Guilford proposes to operate, in each direction, one through train per day over the Delphos-St. Louis segment. By Guilford's admission, this line is in poor condition. Guilford anticipates spending in excess of $39 million over five years to upgrade this line. During the first three years of the project, Guilford has made arrangements with NS for a trackage rights detour from Ft. Wayne to Bluffton so that it will have immediate access to St. Louis at track speeds and densities conforming to the operating plan.

However, in addition to the track structure deficiencies, which Guilford intends to remedy, the signal and communications system on this line is not sufficient to provide an adequate measure of safety at the level of through train and local service that Guilford proposes. The entire line is manual block territory and is operated pursuant to manual block system rules. Current NS operations over this line are controlled by timetable authority, train order, or bulletin. Train order stations are located at Bluffton, Frankfort Yard. Frankfort, and at Charleston Yard, Charleston. Bulletin books and train register books are located at Bluffton, Kokomo, and Frankfort, and at Charleston.

At points (sidings), intermediate to the train order stations, where one train would be able to clear the main track so that another train could move through that specific block (track segment), currently there are inadequate communication facilities. (Between Delphos and Frankfort, there are no telephones at the points where trains could clear the main track). This matter is of extreme importance since NS has been granted trackage rights over Guilford's tracks to serve industries between Marion and Van Buren, IN. The lack of an effective method for the control of train movements with minimum delays to both through and local service trains reduces the efficiency of Guilford proposed operations and increases unit costs.

In addition, there are four unattended interlockings between Frankfort and Madison. Timetable rule 155 applies to the operations over railroad crossings at these locations:

"155. Derails are in service on main track on each side of railroad crossings at Oakland, Neago, Mode, and Cowden. Interlocking signals at these locations will display Stop only. All movements will stop and comply with posted instructions."

This rule indicates that, when a train approaches each of these locations, it must stop, the crew then gets authority to move across the foreign rail line, and, after closing the derails, will move the train over the crossing. After the train clears the crossing, the train must stop and the crew restore the derails to an open position. While the time involved for such stops is reflected in Guilford's proposed schedules, such operations and delays will reduce Guilford's ability to attract additional traffic from other modes and carriers.

In addition to upgrading the Delphos-St. Louis line, it will be necessary to construct connections between lines being acquired at Delphos and Crestline. The Crestline connection is of most importance to efficient train operations. The least expensive and most efficient place to build such a connection is the northwest quadrant of the intersection; however, a highway bridge has been constructed in that location. Guilford proposes a connection that goes between the piers of this bridge. Such a connection would have a severe curve to traverse the area under the bridge. An alternative is to construct a balloon track, a wide circular structure, which will permit trains to go through a circle similar to one quarter of a highway clover leaf to move from one track to the other. Such a balloon track can be located in the southwest quadrant of the intersection which could be angled gradually to allow for the movement of trains from one line to the other. The balloon track would necessarily be longer than a connection in the northwest quadrant to compensate for the loop movement a train must make in moving over it. This in turn entails a higher cost of construction and maintenance because more track materials are involved. Furthermore, a balloon connection requires slower movement by the train.

The existing connection at Delphos between Conrail and NS lines is not the position for the efficient movement of trains between St. Louis and Cleveland. Without the construction of a new connection at this location, Guilford would have to back its trains through the present connection over numerous city street crossings and around a very sharp curve.

In addition, Guilford proposes the use of Yard E in Toledo. This yard is not adjacent to the Carrothers Branch of Conrail that is to be acquired by Guilford. Conrail states that Guilford will have to back its trains into and out of Yard E to complete its road trip, creating a slower, dangerous and inefficient operation. Conrail further states that Yard E abuts an interlocking (a complex network of signals at a rail crossing) on either end. An interlocking is like a street intersection with traffic going in several directions and some trains have to stop and wait while others move through the interlocking. This means that the switching leads are very short. The length of a train being put together, or blocked, by a train performing switching maneuvers will either have to be inefficiently short or trains of normal length will have to extend beyond the yard into one or both interlockings while being blocked, because the yard tracks are not long enough to accommodate a normal length train in this maneuver. Both interlockings are very busy facilities and waiting for other trains to go through before blocking trains will reduce the time available to switch cars. The interlocking cannot be blocked when other trains need to move through the crossing. This, too, results in delays and increased costs.

g. Equipment.—Guilford has estimated that it will need 1,400 freight cars to augment its present fleet of approximately 10,000 cars. Guilford will acquire the cars, consisting of covered hoppers, gondolas, and open-top hoppers, from NS. The cost for the equipment in "as is" condition is $3,000,000. In addition, Guilford has the right to acquire up to 70 locomotives from NS. The acquisition agreement provides for 45 GP-9 (this series was last manufactured in United States in 1959) locomotives and 25 SD-35 locomotives, at costs of $50,000 and $90,000 each, respectively.

The additional equipment is essential for meeting the needs of Guilford's proposed extended operations.

h. Conclusions.—Guilford's operating plan appears designed to compete with existing rail carriers in various markets. However, Guilford's properties are not in as good a condition as those of its competitors. Not only does Guilford have serious problems with its Delphos-St. Louis line, problems which will remain even after its proposed rehabilitation, it is also plagued with poor connections and presently inadequate yard facilities. While these problems can be alleviated in large part by the expenditure of funds, Guilford's more fundamental problems cannot be so corrected. Guilford has made it clear that the crux of this transaction is its ability to compete for TOFC traffic. Although its schedule indicates it would be competitive for movements to and from Chicago, the analysis of the line conditions and traffic densities is convincing that Guilford cannot meet its schedules.

The fact is that NS-Conrail has, and after divesture will retain, better maintained, higher-speed, and less circuitous lines. Because of these lines and more efficiency, NS-Conrail can consolidate large volumes of traffic in pre-blocked, run-through trains, for delivery direct to western carriers. Accordingly, in every market in which the carriers compete directly, NS-Conrail can and will offer a superior transportation service.

3. Rehabilitation Cost

In analyzing the rehabilitation costs, the evidence submitted by Guilford and Conrail was closely examined, as well as empirical data such as track charts and time tables. This data allowed an analysis of the parties' estimates, and where necessary, restatement of costs. It became necessary to restate the costs often since the parties' estimates were so divergent.

By letter dated August 21, 1985, Guilford submitted a final estimate for all capital projects of approximately $63 million. Conrail, the principal party that submitted detailed opposition evidence on rehabilitation matters, estimated total costs of almost $210 million. It is concluded that the total costs will be approximately $69.2 million.

Guilford basically allocated $39.1 million for its Delphos-St. Louis line, $7.2 million for the Ft. Wayne main line, $6.4 million for the Buffalo-Cleveland District, $5 million for yards and connections, and $4.8 million for other projects on an as-needed basis.

Guilford specifically allocated no funds for lines over which it will acquire trackage rights and TOFC facilities in New York

(Croxton Yard), and Chicago, (Colehour Yard). It notes that the Divestiture Agreement only requires it to upgrade trackage rights lines to the point needed to meet its service needs. It claims that all these lines are in adequate condition presently. As to the TOFC Yards, Guilford explains that any capital improvements will be at the expense of contract operators who will be reimbursed through payment of lift charges. Conrail assigned substantial funds to rehabilitate these two TOFC yards (approximately $19 million, $17.1 million for Croxton alone), and to upgrade numerous trackage rights segments (approximately $17.3 million). Guilford's explanations for not including these items are reasonable. Thus, Conrail's position that $36 million must be spent on these facilities will not be further considered.

This deletion allows an easier comparison of the position of the parties. First, the remaining difference as to yards and connections is not very large. It is concluded that total yard and connection costs would be $5,502,130. With the amount of variability inherent in all such estimates at this point, Guilford's $5,000,000 is sufficiently accurate to accept as reasonable.

It is apparent that there are six segments still disputed. Each of these segments is discussed below.

a. Delphos-St. Louis.—This line is where most of Guilford's rehabilitation funds will be needed. As described previously, about 80 miles of this line are now FRA Class 1 and, in the opinion of all parties, unsuitable for mainline service. The next 52 miles of the line are FRA Class 2. The next 110 miles of the line are marginal FRA Class 3. The remainder of the line is FRA Class 3.

Conrail recommended that the entire line from Delphos to East St. Louis be upgraded to FRA Class 4. It stated that all rail should be replaced along with most ties. Its estimate for this work was $109,724,790 using new rail, and $78,241,930 using fit rail, with the caveat that finding this quantity of 112-lb. to 115-lb. used rail would be difficult.

Guilford's original estimate for the line was $35,000,000 to raise it to FRA Class 3 and an additional $20,000,000 to raise the line to FRA Class 4 standards at a later date if traffic volume warranted.[17] Conrail stated that this plan made no sense and that the duplication of work be very inefficient. Both Conrail and Guilford proposed similar quantities for ties, between 331,500 and 336,950. However, Conrail replaced all rail and Guilford is replacing only 120 miles of the 366 total miles. Conrail recommended two surfacing passes over the entire line, whereas Guilford used two passes only between Delphos and Frankfort.

A key difference between the parties appears to be Conrail's estimate of installation and surfacing costs which seem to be considerably higher than Guilford's $6,000 and $7,000 per pass-mile. Because there is no detailed information to determine Conrail's actual surfacing unit cost, an attempt to isolate it was made by removing known material quantities, such as rail, ties, turnouts, etc., and assigning estimated unit costs. The intent was to back out more readily estimated costs leaving some residual amount. This residual amount was a block of labor and material that would contain installation costs such as surfacing material and labor. While this is admittedly an imprecise exercise, it is an improvement over a line total amount which is all there was to start with.

Prior to receiving information on the quantities that Guilford used for its most recent rehabilitation estimate, a restatement was developed. This represents the minimum amount of work that must be done on the line to meet Guilford's operating plan. Most of the rail from Delphos to Marion was replaced. From Marion to Frankfort half of the existing 90-lb. rail would be replaced. From Frankfort to East St. Louis it is estimated that about 10 percent of the rail should be replaced to get rid of the oldest vintages of 110-lb. rail. The tie quantity estimates were the same for FRA Class 2 and 3. The differences between these two classes are principally in the track geometry specifications. FRA Class 3 is considerably more critical in areas of cross-level, and in tolerance of rail end mismatch and end batter. This is usually reflected in increased surfacing costs between FRA Class 2 and 3. The final estimate of rehabilitating the line from its present condition to FRA Class 2 from Delphos to Marion, and to FRA Class 3 from Marion to East St. Louis was $45,826,000.

After reviewing Guilford's latest estimate of $39,131,000 submitted on August 21, 1985, it is believed that the principal difference between these costs and Guilford's is contained in the surfacing cost. This was the most difficult item to evaluate with the information furnished and equally difficult to find any independent information about. As a probable ceiling value, an independent construction cost estimating source, R. S. Means Construction Cost Data, 1984 was selected. This publication is generally accepted throughout the construction industry. The estimated cost of surfacing and realigning existing track, with additional crushed stone ballast, was $14.15 per linear foot, or $74,712 per mile. This cost was developed using a 4-man crew with foreman, a backhoe and one equipment operator. This is considered as a maximum cost, with the idea that production surfacing used by railroads over long sections of track would be much more efficient than this largely manual method and, therefore, cost considerably less, perhaps somewhere around half. However, since Guilford's estimate was only about 10 percent of this ceiling, it is clear that they did not set aside enough money for this task. Guilford's unit cost of $7,000 per mile for surfacing contains labor, ballast, other material, and equipment costs. Based on information from Guilford, ballast takes between $1,500 and $2,000 of this. The remaining amount is not adequate for labor and equipment costs plus any overhead expenses. In addition, no line item for work on the bridges that may restrict locomotive use on the Delphos to Marion section has been found. For these reasons the estimate of $45,826,000 is more indicative of the actual amount necessary to rehabilitate this line. A contingency item should also be set aside for some sort of signalling and communications system, especially if this equipment must be purchased instead of leased. However, no money is assigned for this purpose.

b. Ft. Wayne Main.—Conrail has recommended $29,015,520 to rehabilitate this line. This included replacement of 13 percent of the rail and 14 percent of the ties. Guilford has estimated the cost to be $7,180,000. The line is FRA Class 4 at present and only a small amount of rehabilitation work is necessary. Conrail's tie quantities seem sufficient to raise the line to FRA Class 5, which is believed to be excessive based on Guilford's operating requirements. There is no way of directly assessing the condition of the rail but it is doubted that the line could be operated at its present speed with 27 percent of the rail worn to the point of needing immediate replacement. However, both the present owner and prospective buyer agree that some rehabilitation is necessary. If it is considered that this will be used for raising the line from marginal FRA Class 4 to full FRA Class 4, Guilford's estimate is probably the more reasonable amount to rehabilitate some 264 miles of track.

c. Buffalo and Cleveland Districts.—Conrail has recommended $6,967,390 to rehabilitate this line. Guilford has estimated the cost to be $6,380,000. The line is FRA Class 4 at present and only a small amount of rehabilitation work is necessary. Both the present owner and prospective buyer agree that rehabilitation is necessary and the amounts are very close. If it is considered that this will be used for raising portions of the line from marginal FRA Class 4 to full FRA Class 4, Guilford's estimate is probably a reasonable amount to rehabilitate 265 miles of track.

d. Carrothers Branch.—Conrail's rehabilitation estimate for the line was $14,587,320, using new material. Using the work quantities furnished, it was found that Conrail was recommending replacement of 54 percent of the rail and was surfacing the entire line. It was also recommending rehabilitation to FRA Class 4. Guilford's operating plan did not seem to call for any more than FRA Class 3. This is the present condition of the line as far as could be determined. No reason could be found to replace the amount of rail suggested by Conrail, which would be sufficient to replace all the remaining 130-lb. and 133-lb. jointed rail on the main track plus a small amount in passing tracks. Most of the rail is 1941 to 1950 vintage and some could be worn down near condemning limits, depending on past years' traffic. From the information available, this line was a Toledo to Pittsburgh secondary main with heavy traffic related to steel mills, all of which would have probably been relatively heavy wheel loading. This could have been especially true during the period from 1941 through 1952. This line is marginal FRA Class 3 and the most rehabilitation that could be recommended is to full FRA Class 3. In that case, at a minimum, all 1931 vintage rail should be replaced. This rail is located in two stretches of 3.2 miles and 4.5 miles each. Tie and surfacing work would be limited to these segments. Any crossings and turnouts within these areas would also need rehabilitation as part of the surfacing. The estimate for this amount of rehabilitation is $1,794,000.

e. Ft. Wayne Secondary.—This line contains a large amount of the oldest rail on any of the secondary lines that Guilford is acquiring. Most of the rail is 1914 to 1929 vintage 100-lb. Conrail estimated the rehabilitation costs at $5,418,400 using new rail and $4,033,530 using fit rail. This estimate included replacing all rail and many of the ties, with two surfacing passes over the entire line. Contrail states that this would be sufficient to bring the line up to FRA Class 3 standards. It does not appear that the proposed traffic on the line warrants rehabilitation to more than FRA Class 2. It would be sufficient to replace the rail with used rail, ties sufficient to raise the line from its present FRA Class 1 condition to FRA Class 2, and one surfacing pass. Turnouts and grade crossings would also need rehabilitation work. The estimate to bring the line up to FRA Class 2 is $2,614,000.

f. Indianapolis District.—Conrail claims that $1,761,000 should be spent to upgrade this line. However, in light of the current condition of this line and the manner in which Guilford intends to operate it, there appears to be no need for rehabilitation at this time.

g. Conclusion.—It is found that Guilford must spend the following to rehabilitate the line to a condition to meet its operating plan requirement:

Delphos-St. Louis	$45,826,000
Ft. Wayne main	7,180,000
Buffalo-Cleveland district	6,380,000
Carrothers branch	1,794,000
Ft. Wayne secondary	2,614,000
Yards and connections	5,000,000
Total	68,794,000

Funds from Guilford's non-specified reserve account have been allocated to cover the costs of the Ft. Wayne Secondary and Carrothers branch. After that allocation, approximately $400,000 remain in that account, bringing Guilford's total capital expenditures to $69.2 million.

4. Traffic diversion.—a. Guilford's study.—Guilford prepared a traffic diversion study to determine the number of carloads and the gross revenue that would be gained as a result of acquiring the Western Extension lines west of Buffalo and trackage rights to Croxton Yard in New Jersey. For purposes of the study, the traffic to be handled and the markets to be served were divided into three general categories: (1) traffic originating or terminating on the acquired lines; (2) existing Guilford traffic that could be handled for an extended haul over the acquired lines; and (3) "new" traffic that presently moves over neither the existing Guilford system nor over the lines to be acquired. Potential traffic falling in the three general categories was analyzed on the basis of the more specific categories set forth below.

Diversions.—Traffic presently carried by the Guilford System that might be diverted through new western gateways on the Western Extension, resulting in a longer haul for Guilford, was analyzed. As part of this analysis, unfavorable diversions caused by the impact of the NS-Conrail affiliation were also examined. These unfavorable diversions would result in a shorter haul for Guilford or, in some cases, loss of traffic altogether.

Reroutes.—It is expected that traffic presently interchanged between D&H and NS at Potomac Yard would be rerouted to the combined NS-Conrail system at Harrisburg, PA with appropriate revenue adjustments.

Traffic on acquired lines.—Traffic originating or terminating at stations on the NS and Conrail lines to be acquired would be handled by Guilford in whole or in part, depending on whether the station would be exclusively served by Guilford or would also be served by NS-Conrail. As part of this analysis, traffic on the acquired lines at points to be served by NS-Conrail under a car-haulage agreement with Guilford was also examined.

PLE connection.—PLE will acquire certain NS lines in Pennsylvania and Ohio, and it was assumed that PLE will be a friendly connection for Guilford. It was assumed that traffic would be interchanged between PLE and Guilford at Wellington, Cleveland or Ashtabula, OH.

New intermodal business.—The new routes to Chicago and St. Louis will put Guilford in a position to compete in the intermodal markets now dominated by Conrail between Boston/New England and the New York area in the East and the Chicago and St. Louis gateways in the West.

New general freight business.—The new routes to the Chicago and St. Louis gateways will make it possible for Guilford to compete on certain traffic (grain, paper, autos and chemicals) currently moving between New England and the West or Midwest via truck or other railroads and not presently handled by Guilford.

A number of different traffic data bases were used in the traffic study and, according to Guilford, were selected based on their availability, ease of access, and suitability for the purposes required. These data bases included the following:

1. Existing Guilford traffic—full year 1983.

2. Traffic on acquired NS lines—full year 1983 (supplied by NS).

3. Traffic on acquired Conrail lines—two or three percent sample for the period from November, 1982 to October, 1983 (made available by Conrail), supplemented by full year 1980 data (adjusted) in certain areas. The reasonableness of this data was confirmed to Guilford's satisfaction by observations of shipper facilities along the lines involved.

4. New business—estimates developed by the Guilford marketing staff.

The traffic diversion study was conducted in three steps. The first step was the creation of a diversion data base produced by merging full year 1983 traffic data supplied by each of the three Guilford railroads. The data in all files were corrected to the extent possible, and all junction, station, and railroad names were standardized. The carload records in each file were then separated into three categories—traffic local to each carrier, interline traffic wholly within the Guilford system and traffic interchanged with other carriers. The records of traffic interchanged both within the Guilford system and with other carriers were then consolidated to provide a single record of each flow with duplication eliminated. The resulting records contained origin, destination, routing, commodity, tonnage, and, where available, revenue data.

A diversion file subset, viz, traffic considered potentially subject to diversion, was extracted from the merged data base and contained all traffic interchanged with connecting railroads. The diversion file was sorted and condensed into records of flows from origin railroad and State to destination carrier and State moving via a particular junction.

The second step in the study was to determine the percentage of each flow that was deemed likely to be diverted from its current routing. The percentages were determined by taking into consideration the following:

a. Available routes and circuity,

b. Number of railroads in each route,

c. Long-haul routes, and

d. "Presence" of carriers in markets.

The percentages assigned reflected the following specific assumptions:

(1) An origin carrier has more control over traffic than the destination carrier.

(2) The most direct route will usually have a lower cost and provide faster service than more circuitous routes.

(3) A single-line route generally allows a carrier to capture a larger market share than multiple carrier routes.

(4) Each carrier will strive to obtain its longest possible haul (origin carriers were assumed to be more successful than the intermediate or destination carriers).

(5) If a carrier has major facilities in a particular area of a major, high volume line, that carrier will be more secure in its market share.

(6) If connecting carriers have a motive to use one route over another, such as revenue division differences, coordinated schedules, or corporate relationships, the diversion potential will be affected.

According to Guilford, "The largest diversion potentials affect traffic now interchanged between Delaware and Hudson and NS at Potomac Yard, between D&H and CSX at Potomac Yard and Buffalo, between both NS and Conrail, on the one hand, and D&H, on the other, at Buffalo, and between Guilford and Conrail in the Albany area. Another significant potential diversion involves traffic currently moving over Canadian routes between New England and points in the U.S. Midwest. With lines to Chicago and St. Louis from New England and with access to points in between, Guilford can offer single-line service to destination or to western connections on much of this traffic."

The percentages of diversion applied by Guilford to each class of traffic are shown in Table 5 on the following page.

[1] The following abbreviations are used in the table: GTI—Guilford; CR—Conrail; PW—Providence and Worcester Railroad Co.; US—American carriers; and CN/CP—Canadian National Railways/Canadian Pacific Ld.

The third step in the study was the estimation of incremental revenue for the diverted traffic. For traffic diverted from interchanges at Buffalo, the Albany area, Potomac Yard, and similar junctions where Guilford could extend its haul over routes presently served only by NS, Conrail, or CSX, revenue was based on estimated revenue for the same or similar moves over the affected routes. For instance, traffic currently originating on B&M in New Hampshire, interchanged with NS at Buffalo, and destined for the BN in Minnesota would be rerouted Guilford-Chicago-BN. For such a diversion, it was assumed that Guilford would receive the revenue now going to NS. Lacking full NS revenue data, available data on similar moves were used to estimate the percentage of gross revenue which would accrue to Guilford on the Buffalo to Chicago portion of the move. This percentage was then applied to the gross freight revenue in the diversion data file. For traffic diverted from Canadian to Guilford routes, total eastern road divisions were estimated by the Guilford staff for representative traffic samples. These divisions were applied to gross freight revenue information in the data base, and current Guilford revenue was deducted to yield incremental revenue.

For traffic diverted from Guilford routes to NS-Conrail routes, the same method as the one described above was applied. Once the carload and revenue diversions were calculated, the results were applied to the total traffic data base.

To determine the traffic potential at stations on the Western Extension lines to be acquired by Guilford, origin/destination traffic flow records for traffic originating or terminating at NS or Conrail stations on the acquired lines were examined. As a first step, data involving non-relevant stations (stations not involved in the transaction) were excluded from the data base, and traffic flows were grouped according to whether Guilford would have the exclusive right to handle traffic at a station, would have reciprocal rights (stations to be commonly served by Guilford and NS-Conrail), or would be served by Guilford both for its own account and for the account of NS-Conrail under a car haulage agreement.

All traffic originating or terminating at exclusive stations was assumed to be handled by Guilford and was routed to destination or to connecting carriers at appropriate junctions. For traffic originating or terminating at reciprocally served stations, a geographic subsort of origin/destination flows was performed to determine those flows for which Guilford would be able to compete. It was assumed that Guilford's market penetration would be 40 percent when it could compete. At those stations where a car haulage agreement would be in effect, the NS-Conrail share of traffic (the remaining 60 percent) was added to the Guilford data base, but was routed to NS-Conrail via the nearest junction.

In addition, a "Marketing Plan" was prepared in which (1) estimates were made of traffic that might be routed via Guilford to and from stations on PLE, and (2) projections were made of new intermodal and general freight business which is expected to be handled by the expanded system. This information was added to the data base. The traffic covered in the Marketing Plan, according to Guilford, constitutes new traffic that did not previously move by rail, brought to the enlarged Guilford system by its own competitive efforts.

Guilford argues that the recent combination of its component railroads into a unified system has provided valuable experience in pooling resources, unifying operations, and developing a marketing strategy, which together attracted new traffic through service and pricing packages tailored to customer needs. Guilford states that the Marketing Plan is an outgrowth of the policies developed in integrating its existing system, and the resulting rates and services will be comparable and competitive in all respects with those of NS-Conrail.

Guilford claims that it is developing a list of all customers located on the lines of the Western Extension. Guilford believes that NS and Conrail have ignored development of business on the lines included in the Western Extension, and as a result, there may be business opportunities with customers on these lines that are not presently being tapped by NS or Conrail. Guilford expects to contact as many of these potential customers as possible in order to tailor services to their needs. The operations proposed by Guilford to attract business under the Marketing Plan are detailed elsewhere in this report.

As revealed in Table 6, nearly 90 percent of the "new business" is comprised of TOFC carloads. As a result of its traffic study, Guilford believes that the acquisition of the Western Extension will produce approximately $150 million in gross revenue after deduction of about $11 million in revenue diverted to the proposed NS-Conrail system. Of the $150 million, about $115 million is attributable to the Western Extension itself, and the balance represents incremental revenue attributable to hauls over the existing Guilford system.

Guilford, by letter dated August 8, 1985, indicated that the "Total Diversion and Reroutes" figure of 75,789 carloads shown in Table 6 includes 645 carloads totally diverted from Guilford, and 1,825 carloads of Springfield TOFC that were not rerouted to Chicago. Thus, the "Base Traffic-Post Diversion" consists of 343,889 carloads, shown in the sixth line from the bottom of the table.

Tables 7 and 8, which follow, show Guilford's traffic diversion estimates broken down by gateway, number of carloads (general freight and TOFC), and the revenue attributable to each carload figure. Table 7 shows Guilford's estimate of traffic losses to NS-Conrail, and Table 8 shows the traffic gains to Guilford as a result of the acquisition of the Western Extension. These tables and the preceding table were extracted from Guilford's submission dated June 30, 1985.

b. The Replies to Guilford's Traffic and Marketing Studies.—Replies were submitted by Conrail, CSX, and GTW. The basic criticisms of the Guilford studies advanced by these carriers are substantially similar and may be summarized as follows:

1. The traffic study was not adequately supported in terms of underlying data and explanation of the facts relied on by Guilford to determine the percentages of divertibility applied to study movements.

2. The marketing study was not supported with any facts.

3. The traffic study was based on data from three separate time periods with no explanation of how the data were supplemented or adjusted. No statistical tests were submitted showing the amount of data that could not be corrected when errors occurred, nor were sufficient data produced to show how revenue per car was estimated in instances where actual figures could not be obtained.

4. The assumptions in the Marketing Plan made by Guilford with respect to "new" TOFC traffic are totally unrealistic in view of the intense competition for this traffic, not only between railroads, but more importantly, between railroads and motor carriers. This traffic is largely time-sensitive and profit margins are slim.

5. Guilford has projected "new" business from shippers located on the Western Extension lines, but is only now beginning to compile a list of such shippers.

6. Guilford has grossly overestimated its ability to attract traffic away from NS-Conrail at locations on the Western Extension where reciprocal switching arrangements will be in place. Further, Guilford did not identify the kind of traffic originating or terminating at these locations, yet assigned a flat 40-percent divertibility (to itself) for the traffic.

7. Guilford's assumed reliance on friendly connections with western railroads at Chicago, St. Louis, and Toledo is not realistic because of physical difficulties that Guilford will have in interchanging traffic at those gateways, plus the fact that Guilford will not provide adequate service levels for time-sensitive traffic.

8. Guilford has underestimated the diversion of traffic by a combined NS-Conrail notwithstanding acquisition of the Western Extension by Guilford.

9. Guilford has overestimated its ability to compete with NS-Conrail for traffic between New England and the Mississippi River.

c. Supplementary Information from Guilford.—By letter dated August 22, 1985, Guilford supplied a more complete description of the traffic data base and methodologies used in the traffic studies. The description follows:

Extended haul and unfavorable diversions were based on a full year 1983 Guilford merged traffic data base which was prepared from separate B&M, D&H and MEC data bases. This data base was a 100 percent sample, but only flows of ten cars or more (as sorted by state and road for the diversion analysis) were considered for diversion. These flows constituted 93 percent of the total carloads, and an adjustment factor was used to inflate diversions to account for the difference between 93 percent and 100 percent of the carloads.

Estimates of traffic on NS acquired lines was based on full year 1983 Norfolk Southern traffic data, also a 100 percent sample. Only origin-destination flows of 20 cars or more were considered in the analysis. These flows represented 89 percent of the total carloads, and once again an adjustment factor was used to calibrate results to reflect 100 percent of the traffic.

Estimates of traffic on Conrail acquired lines were based on a 1980 100 percent sample (aggregated to nodes). These data were adjusted to approximate 1983 data by applying an expansion factor of 1.39 to TOFC data and a deflation factor of .76 to general freight data. These expansion and deflation factors were based on Conrail's reported overall traffic volume changes in each category 1980–1983. A supplementary data base was obtained from Norfolk Southern's consultants which was represented to be based on a 2 or 3 percent sample of November 1982–October 1983 Conrail traffic, and was used to adjust the original Conrail data at certain stations. This supplementary data base was supplied to us as a uniform 3 percent sample, and we were advised to use a 33.33 percent expansion factor to adjust it to annual volumes.

New business estimates were prepared on an annual basis, and no adjustments were necessary.

The various parts of the traffic data were simply added together to produce the simulation input traffic data base used in our analysis of the Western Extensions.

It should be noted that in order to eliminate potential doublecounting, records of traffic originating or terminating at stations on the acquired lines on one end of the move and originating or terminating on B&M, D&H or MEC on the other end of the move were not included in counts of traffic on lines to be acquired. These flows already had been considered in the diversion analysis, since they were included in the Guilford merged traffic data base, and thus it would not have been appropriate to consider them a second time.

With respect to the "new business" traffic study, Guilford developed an estimated data base also using the Conrail data base described above, plus known paper industry production data at mills in Guilford's existing service territory and motor carrier traffic levels known to Guilford's marketing personnel. Based on rate levels for rail TOFC and all-motor carrier service, Guilford believes that its proposed service will be competitive on a cost and service basis between the New York and Chicago areas. Guilford does not assert service competitiveness between the New York and St. Louis areas, but, in that market, as well as the New York-Chicago markets, Guilford believes that the mere presence of a new low-cost TOFC carrier will convince at least some shippers to route over the new system in order to establish new rate competition between railroads and between railroads and motor carriers.

New business in the form of paper products moving in boxcars and TOFC is expected by Guilford from New England and New York points to the Midwest. Guilford also anticipates a much smaller volume of eastbound miscellaneous freight will move in boxcars to points in existing Guilford territory. Specifically, Guilford estimates the following volumes of new business:

1. TOFC traffic, New England to the Midwest—18,000 carloads, $15.3 million revenue (15,000 carloads and $12.7 million from paper products traffic).

2. Other TOFC traffic:

a. Between Croxton Yard and Chicago—36,000 carloads, $27.9 million.

b. From Chicago to New England—8,970 carloads, $8.1 million.

c. Between Croxton Yard and St. Louis—2,700 carloads, $2.6 million.

d. Between New England and St. Louis—8,100 carloads, $7.6 million.

3. Carload (Paper) traffic:

a. New England—New York to Chicago—4,350 carloads, $8.7 million.

b. New England—New York to St. Louis—4,350 carloads, $8.7 million.

4. Carload (Misc.) traffic:

a. Chicago to New England—New York—350 carloads, $350,000.

b. St. Louis to New England—New York—350 carloads, $350,000.

Guilford assumed the following rates of growth of the above traffic in the first three years after acquiring the Western Extension:

[In percent]

	Year 1	Year 2	Year 3
Carload	20	30	50

d. Analysis.—The Guilford study of traffic diversions on existing traffic is basically acceptable notwithstanding the problems involved with the Conrail data base. It is clear that Guilford had great difficulty in obtaining Conrail data necessary to evaluate traffic originating or terminating on the Conrail lines to be acquired as part of the Western Extension. Under the circumstances, Guilford's treatment of available Conrail data was done as well as possible. Overall, the total data base lacked shipper and receiver identities, car ownership, and other facts pertinent to particular movements, all of which would have been useful in the evaluation of diversion potential. The diversion study results were produced mechanically based on a limited number of assumptions covering large blocks of traffic, as opposed to a detailed examination of movements to ascertain the totality of the characteristics potentially governing the routing of study movements. Therefore, the study must be regarded as one resulting in broad estimates of revenue gains.

In general, Guilford's estimates of revenue gains on extended hauls and existing traffic on the divested lines is reasonable. Criticism directed to Guilford's application of a 40 percent gain on Western Extension traffic at reciprocal points was based on Guilford's original statement, which is unclear on the matter. The 40 percent factor was actually applied to traffic for which Guilford believes it can compete, not 40 percent of all traffic at the reciprocal points. In total then, the estimated diversion of traffic at such points is less than 40 percent. Considering the fact that Guilford is the carrier physically serving these stations, it is reasonable to conclude that the estimates are realistic.

Overall, Guilford's study of diversion on existing traffic is reasonable and reflective of its proposed operations.

Guilford's "study" of "new" traffic is of more concern than the diversion study. The obvious problem is assessing what size and shape a new transportation market will take is the lack of detailed data available to the railroad doing the study. Guilford's effort here can best be termed a marketing study designed to quantify broad categories of potential traffic. Of necesssity, the experience of marketing personnel must be drawn on to arrive at estimates of motor carrier traffic that might be solicited for rail TOFC service. Further, the cost and service characteristics of Guilford's proposed operation were deciding factors in determining if, and how much, traffic moving by motor carriers and other railroads could be attracted.

Guilford correctly assumes that the mere presence of a new rail TOFC service will attract shippers eager to have a new element of rate competition. The basic question in this context, however, is how long will it take NS-Conrail, CSX, and/or motor carriers to retaliate? Given the dynamics of the intermodal business under a deregulated environment, such retaliation (lowered rates/improved service innovations) will take place as quickly as one year after commencement of Guilford's operations. Conrail, NS, and the CSX railroads have enormous resources available and in place for the intermodal business. Guilford, particularly between Chicago and the New York and Boston areas, would be in head-to-head competition with NS-Conrail, and to a lesser extent, with CSX and its motor subsidiary, CMX, between Chicago and the New Jersey-New York area.

In specific terms, Guilford's estimate of 15,000 carloads of TOFC paper products traffic ($12.7 million in revenue) being attracted away from motor carriers is reasonable. This estimate covers motor carrier traffic coming from existing sources that also ship by rail over Guilford. The balance of the TOFC "new" traffic estimate, however, represents a more nebulous estimate based on good intentions from a marketing and operating point of view.

It is clear that new TOFC traffic would be gained primarily on the basis of rate competition, since it has been concluded that Guilford's service would not be time competitive. Guilford supplied rate level comparisons on a confidential basis, and the data indicated that Guilford would be price-competitive for TOFC traffic which, in Guilford's estimation, would not be "time-sensitive."

Accepting Guilford's contention that a "new" carrier will initially attract TOFC business on the basis of rates, the question is whether such traffic will be retained over the long run. In 1984, Conrail originated over 376,000 carloads of TOFC systemwide, and The Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company (B&O) systemwide originated about 92,000 carloads. (See: Association of American Railroads' Statement CS-54A for the Year 1984). While these figures are systemwide for both Conrail and B&O, they provide some perspective for Guilford's claim that over 77,000 TOFC carloads can be obtained exclusively over its routes between Boston and New York on the one hand, and, Chicago and St. Louis on the other. It is inconceivable that an NS-Conrail and/or a CSX could not retaliate on both service and price bases against Guilford's TOFC service.

In conclusion, 69,489 carloads and $70,029,000 is revenue estimated in the diversion study covering existing traffic is accepted in total. With respect to the new traffic, Guilford's estimate of 9,400 carloads and $18.1 million for new boxcar traffic is reasonable. The 15,000 carloads of TOFC paper products traffic from New England to the Midwest, which account for another $12.7 million, is also accepted. These traffic elements total 93,889 carloads producing $100,879,000 in revenue. Because of all of the factors discussed that work against Guilford's ability to retain TOFC traffic, only about half of such traffic (other than the New England paper products traffic) can be handled by Guilford with any degree of certainty in the long run. This traffic amounts to 29,385 carloads and $24.4 million in revenue, which, added to the other accepted estimates, yields totals of approximately 123,000 carloads and $125 million in revenues.

D. Financial Viability:

1. Introduction.—This section focuses on: (1) the recent and current financial situation of Guilford and its three railroad subsidiaries; (2) the costs of the divestiture proposal as well as the method of payment; and (3) the future financial viability of the enlarged Guilford system. In examining the future viability, the Guilford proposal and an independent analysis of the key elements of that proposal will be considered. Although the comments filed in opposition to Guilford's financial presentation have been considered, they do not have to be discussed in detail. All tables are rounded. This may account for differences in addition.

2. Current Viability.—Guilford's Rail Division is comprised of MEC, which it acquired in 1981, B&M, which it acquired in 1983, and D&H, which it acquired in January 1984. In its annual report for 1984, the first year all three carriers were under Guilford's control, Guilford reported their operating results on a combined basis, eliminating all significant intercompany transactions. Table 9 contains a summary of the income statement, balance sheet, and selected ratios, which are based on the numbers as presented.

As of December 31, 1984, Guilford had cash and temporary cash investments of $6.7 million and a working capital deficit of $15.1 million. Total assets were $252.8 million and total stockholders equity was $66.6 million, not including redeemable preference shares with a stated book value of $11.6 million.

The redeemable preference shares represent an obligation to the U.S. Government totalling $30.6 million, which, when discounted to present value, are carried on the balance sheet at $11.6 million. Redemption is to begin in 1987, with dividends to accrue at about 15 percent per annum beginning the tenth year after issuance or 1991. Thus, although the redeemable preference shares do not strain Guilford in the early years, they are an ongoing obligation and should be treated as debt.

Another obligation that should be carried as a debt is $6.3 million owed to Conrail. The obligation, incurred by D&H, matures in quarterly installments of $250,000 from March 1984 through December 1985 and in slowly growing amounts thereafter. The interest rate on this obligation is 6 percent through 1987, and at prime thereafter, with a minimum of 7 percent and a maximum of 13 percent. Guilford has included this obligation in other liabilities rather than long-term debt and has discounted it at 13 percent, assuming the maximum rate for each year. This discount rate is much too high, and, thus, the resulting carrying value of $4.4 million is too low.

Guilford also has an outstanding obligation of $39 million in long-term notes owed to its principal stockbroker. Of this amount, $25 million is due in 1988, and $14 million is due in 1998. Guilford states that these notes are not a legal obligation of its railroad subsidiaries, although interest is payable annually and is funded principally by the Rail Division through payment of dividends. This $39 million will have no impact on Guilford's carriers, except through the dividend payments, and it is not treated as a long-term debt.

Table 10, shows the year-end 1984 balance sheet as adjusted to add the debt to Conrail at face value of $6.3 million ($1 million is included in current liabilities) and the redeemable preference shares as debt at their discounted value of $11.6 million.

One other item that may have no effect on this proposed transaction, but should be noted, is the issuance by D&H of Contingency Notes in the aggregate amount of $75.7 million to the United States Railway Association and the U.S. Government. These notes replace D&H indebtedness and are secured by a General Mortgage on all property. The notes become payable and accrue interest only in the event of a D&H bankruptcy or in the event of sale of substantially all of the assets. Therefore, they are not reflected in the Guilford balance sheet, since they are only a contingency obligation, which would not affect a viable rail operation.

In 1984, Guilford's financial picture suffered as a result of its acquisition of D&H, which lost money that year. The Guilford net railway operating income declined to $4.7 million from 1983 income of $8.4 million. Overall net income was down from $8.7 million in 1983 to $5.2 million in 1984. Its operating ratio rose from 93.2 percent in 1983 to 98.5 percent in 1984.

Further, Guilford's fixed charge coverage also declined. Guilford claims that the decrease was from 4.78x [18] to 2.18x; however, the decrease was greater and Guilford has overstated its fixed charge coverage for 1984. The $0.4 million interest due on the Conrail debt should be considered as a fixed charge, as should the $1.5 million due on the $39 million debt to Guilford's principal stockholder. This would increase the fixed charges to $6.3 million in 1984 and reduce the coverage to 1.5x.

For the first half of 1985, Guilford realized net operating revenue of $2.7 million and total net income of $3.0 million. These figures were the result of a good second quarter, which erased first quarter losses in both income categories. Its first half 1985 operating ratio of 98.1 percent was a slight improvement over the 1984 ratio. Again, the ratio was attributable to the second quarter ratio of 95.7 percent.

Guilford contends that its ability to operate the lines to be acquired is evident from the manner in which it has improved the operations of D&H and has merged the operations of three separate carriers into one system. This premise warrants examination of the recent financial results of the three subsidiary carriers.

As of December 31, 1984, D&H had cash and temporary cash investments of $3.2 million and a working capital deficit of $20.7 million. Total assets were $94.4 million and stockholders equity was a negative $1.8 million. This reflects a reduction in the noncurrent assets of about $26 million on acquisition of D&H by Guilford.

In 1984, D&H reported a net operating loss of $5.1 million as compared to $5.9 million in 1983. It also reported an overall loss of $6.5 million in 1984, as compared to $16.3 million in 1983. In addition, it reported an improvement in its operating ratio from 105.4 percent in 1983 to 104.1 percent in 1984. These apparent improvements resulted, in part, from an increase of $2.1 million in operating subsidies from the States of New York and Pennsylvania. Also, the carrier benefited from a $2.8 million decrease in depreciation expense, which resulted from the accounting reduction of its assets when it was acquired by Guilford. Without the increased subsidies and asset reduction, D&H's net operating loss would have been

In addition, the issuance of the Contingency Notes eliminated substantial interest charges of approximately $8.7 million. Thus, on a comparative basis, D&H's 1984 overall loss of $6.5 million should be $18.7 million.

For the first six months of 1985, D&H had a net operating loss of $2.4 million and an overall net loss of $2.6 million, compared to a net operating loss of $1.1 million and net loss of $2.1 million for the same period in 1984. The operating ratio for the first half of 1985 was 104.4 percent, while it was 101.8 percent for the first half of 1984.

Guilford claims that much of D&H's 1984 loss was due to rehabilitation on its lines, which interfered with efficient operations. There may be some merit to its contention, in view of the results for the second quarter of 1985. During that period D&H had an operating income of $0.6 million and realized a net income of almost $0.9 million, something that had not occurred for several years.

As of December 31, 1984, B&M had $8.2 million in cash and temporary cash investments compared to $12.2 million in 1983. It reported a working capital deficit of $0.3 million in 1984, compared to positive working capital of $9.8 million in 1983. Total assets were $118.4 million in 1984, and stockholders equity was $46.1 million. Because of the reorganization which left B&M without any funded debt, the ratio of debt to total capital was a very satisfactory 17 percent. This ratio reflects capital leases and equipment debt. Fixed charge coverage was excellent at 11.3x, a significant improvement over 1983.

For the year 1984, B&M reported a net operating income of $6.1 million compared to $0.2 million in the previous year. Net income was $7.9 million compared to $1.6 million in 1983. The operating ratio showed an improvement to 95.1 percent from 99.8 percent.

In the case of B&M, there do not seem to have been any government operating subsidies except from the Massachusetts Bay Transportation Authority, which was a cost-plus contract for commuter service.

There was, however, a difference in depreciation resulting from the reduced property accounts, which occurred when Guilford acquired B&M. The asset reduction decreased depreciation by $1.3 million. In 1982, the depreciation figure was $2.9 million, but the 1983 figure was $2.2 million. This was only a partial decrease in depreciation, since Guilford acquired B&M in mid-1983 and the property account reduction was effective for only one-half of that year. In 1984, the full decrease was effective, and the depreciation amount was $1.6 million. Even with this, however, it appears that B&M made good progress in railroad operations.

The results for the first six months of 1985 did not continue this trend, with operating income of $1.7 million, compared to $3.5 million for the first six months of 1984, and net income of $2.4 million, compared to $4.2 million for the same period in 1984.

Both B&M and D&H experienced declines in the first half of 1985, as compared to the first half of 1984. This was chiefly the result of the decline in revenues, particularly in the case of B&M. According to Moody's Transportation Daily News, B&M carloadings were down 5.4 percent for the first 28 weeks of 1985, while D&H was up 4.6 percent.

As of December 31, 1984, MEC had $1.9 million in cash and short term investments, down from $7 million for 1983. Part of the reason for the cash decline were advances made to D&H during 1984. MEC reported a working capital deficit of $3.3 million in 1984 compared to positive working capital of $1.5 million in 1983. Total assets were $75.1 million in 1984, and stockholders equity was $34.8 million. The ratio of debt to total capital was 23.3 percent in 1984, a slight improvement over the 25.5 percent in 1983. Fixed charge coverage was 4.2x in both 1984 and 1983.

For 1984, MEC reported a net operating income of $3.6 million, down from $5.7 million in 1983. It also had a net income of $4.0 million in 1984, down from $4.6 million. The operating ratio rose in 1984 to 94.3 percent from 90.4 percent the previous year.

For the first six months of 1985, MEC reported net operating income of $3.4 million with an operating ratio of 88.6 percent. Net income was almost $2.9 million. The year appears to show good progress over 1984, but it is noted that, between 1982 and 1984, net operating income and net income both declined from each preceding year.

d. Summary.—Although Guilford's accounting methods are not fully agreed with, there is no major disagreement with Guilford's presentation of its 1984 financial condition. While there was no remarkable improvement in the financial picture of the operations of D&H or B&M, the Guilford system was conducting a marginally profitable operation. Further, it appeared capable of meeting its fixed charges. Therefore, as of the end of 1984, the Guilford system was marginally viable.

The results of operations for the first half of 1985 showed noticeable improvement in the second quarter, chiefly on improved D&H results. It cannot be concluded, however, that one favorable quarter of operations indicates a significant trend to more than only marginal operations.

2. Cash Requirements and Proposed Financing

Guilford's immediate cash needs will include the $50.0 million purchase price for the divested lines, the $3.0 million for additional rail cars, the $5.0 million for construction of connections, $7.3 million for working capital, and $22.7 million for start-up costs, which includes $17.6 million for initial rehabilitation costs. This $88.0 million will be raised, in part, through a cash contribution of $20.0 million by Guilford's parent company. The remainder will be financed through borrowing at an interest rate of 12½ percent, with the principal to be amortized over a seven-year period, beginning the fourth year after consummation.

The required future rehabilitation costs will be paid for out of annual cash flow, except for the $17.6 million to be financed initially.

In accordance with the agreement, Guilford must furnish evidence of its ability to pay the purchase price (a commitment letter of some kind from potential lenders and investors) to NS by the earlier of: (1) 90 days after the date of this Agreement i.e., September 5, 1985 or (2) 30 days after enactment of the legislation permitting the sale of stock to be consummated. While no indication has been received that commitments have been made, for this analysis, it is assumed that they will be.

3. Future Viability

a. Introduction.—In analyzing Guilford's viability after acquisition of the divested lines, Guilford's projections of its income and expenses and its ability to service its debt were considered. Next, those figures were adjusted, based on the estimates from the analysis of the revenues to be gained from the divested lines and the conclusion as to the cost of planned rehabilitation of these lines.

Finally, a sensitivity analysis was performed and Guilford's projected expense ratios, and thereby its projected operating ratio, were adjusted. This adjusted figure was applied to the projected figures and to Guilford's original projections.

b. Projections.—Guilford submitted its projected balance sheets, income statements, and cash flow statements, through 1989 for its present Rail Division and the combined system. It also provided a projected income statement for the Western Extension. The summarized pro forma income statements of all three are set forth below in Tables 14, 15, and 16, respectively.

c. Comments and Adjustments.—The study of this proposal has looked at Guilford's estimates for rehabilitating the Western Extension lines to bring them up to competitive levels, for rehabilitating the various yards being acquired, and for constructing the necessary connections it will need to utilize the acquired lines.

Guilford has indicated that it plans to spend about $63 million rehabilitating the Westen Extension. By comparing the pro forma cash flow statement for the combined system, which shows for years 1986-1989 rehabilitation expense of the entire Guilford system, to the pro forma income statement for the Rail Division, which shows the same numbers for just the existing lines, it can be determined that Guilford plans to spend $52.8 million in the first four years to rehabilitate the Western Extension. Guilford has confirmed that approximately $10 million more will be spent in year 5, 1990.

However, as noted above, Guilford will have to spend approximately $69 million over the five-year period to rehabilitate these lines. Accordingly, this additional $6 million expenditure must be reflected in Guilford's cash flow statement. Although the bulk of the rehabilitation is to be done in years 1 to 3, since the system is to be fully operational by year 3, this additional $6 million cost will be spread over the full five years. Accordingly, the cash flow statement reflects additional expenditures of $1.2 million for years 1986 through 1989.

Further, Guilford has overestimated the additional revenues to be realized from the divested lines. Guilford projects that, by the third year after consummation, it will have increased gross revenues by $149.6 million as a result of the Western Extension. Of this amount, it claims that $79.6 million will be new traffic developed by its marketing team, and, of this new business, $61.5 million will be TOFC traffic.

It is projected that Guilford will develop no more than $125 million additional gross revenues from the divested lines, which is $24.6 million less than it estimated. This "non-attained" revenue has been adjusted in accordance with the schedule presented by Guilford as to the expected timing of the acquired new traffic. A similar adjustment has been made with respect to the expenses associated with this traffic, using Guilford's operating ratios. The resulting revenue and expense figures were combined with the similar figures for the Rail Division, Table 14, to arrive at adjusted figures for the combined system. Tables 17 and 18 show the affect of the revenue and rehabilitation adjustments on Guilford's projected operating results and cash flow.

As the tables show, the projected revenues are only 5.5 percent lower than those estimated by Guilford. The additional annual rehabilitation costs also are only minimal. Further, the resulting operating ratios and fixed charge coverage vary only slightly from Guilford's figures, shown in Table 16.

Notwithstanding the relatively minor adjustments, Guilford has a small negative cash position of $0.3 million in 1989. This is because Guilford is much more highly leveraged than appears on its balance sheet, and the obligations not appearing as debt on the balance sheet, such as redeemable preference shares, the debt to Conrail, and dividends due the principal shareholder, are reflected in the cash flow statement. Also, in 1989, the first principal payment due on the debt incurred for the purchase of the Western Lines is reflected.

d. Sensitivity Analysis.—The Guilford projections for traffic in its Rail Division appear reasonable. It projects 1985 carloads will be 4.9 percent less than in 1984 and that they will decrease 0.4 percent in 1986. Then, Guilford projects a 4.0 percent increase in carloads from 1986 to 1989, but the 1989 total is still 1.3 percent below the actual 1984 traffic level. Also, revenue per car in 1989 is slightly less than the 1984 figure.

In the operating expense category, Table 19 reflects Guilford's projections of ratios of those expenses to revenues.

As can be seen, Guilford's projections generally are not unreasonable when compared to the 1983 industry average.

Guilford's ratios of maintenance of way and maintenance of equipment remain stable throughout the projected period. In 1984, the actual figures were 14.1 percent and 28.9 percent, respectively, and the projected 1989 figures are 14.1 percent and 28.4 percent, respectively. The similar 1983 industry averages were 15.4 percent and 23.5 percent, respectively.

Guilford projects a decline in its general and administrative expense ratio from 13.2 percent in 1984 to 11.0 percent in 1989, which compares to the 1983 industry average of 9.5 percent.

The transportation ratio, however, raises some questions. Guilford's pro forma shows it dropping from 42.4 percent in 1984 to 39.6 percent in 1989, while the industry average in 1983 was 42.6 percent. At this point, it is appropriate to discuss an apparent discrepancy in Guilford's figures. In its 1984 annual report, the company reported a transportation ratio of 46.1 percent rather than the 42.4 percent shown in its pro forma. Guilford's explanation of the discrepancy is that the lower ratio resulted from the elimination of certain railway subsidiary operations and also that its method of accounting tends to decrease transportation expenses as compared to the Commission's method of accounting.

The pro forma statement for the Western extension portrays the difference in the Guilford system results due to the acquisition of the divested lines, including the effect on the present Rail Division. The expense ratios are shown below in Table 20. For information purposes, the projected percentages of year-to-year revenue growth are also shown.

The road maintenance and general administrative ratios drop quite sharply, and the revenue growth in the first two years is also very substantial.

Guilford's pro forma statements for the combined Western Extension and Rail Division are a total of the separate pro forma for each. The resulting expense ratios, which are reflective of the Guilford system after acquisition, are set forth in Table 21.

[2] A minor difference between these figures and those on Guilford's pro forma statement is the result of rounding off each individual ratio prior to adding the components to arrive at the operating ratio.

The progress indicated by some of the improvements in the ratios, which together comprise the operating ratio, would indicate a remarkably fast turn-around for Guilford's component railroads emerging from a very troubled history. Therefore, some need for sensitivity analysis is indicated.

For instance, despite the various capital projects ($106 million for the Rail Division and $63 million for the Western Extension over five years), it may not be possible that the amount proposed to be spent on maintenance could be substantially less than the 15.4 percent average for all Class I railroads in 1983. Therefore, the 1983 industry average was applied in 1986 and reduced each succeeding year by 0.2 percent, instead of the more rapid decline projected by Guilford.

The equipment maintenance is higher than the industry average, but this may be due to the condition of some of the equipment Guilford will acquire from NS-Conrail. There is little description of the locomotives, except that some will be surplus to the seller; however, the 1,400 rail cars will cost $3.0 million, or $2,143 per car, indicating that they are older and may require additional maintenance.

As discussed above, Guilford has explained the difference between its 1984 transportation ratio for the Rail Division as reported in its annual report and as reflected in its Rail Division pro forma statement. For 1985 Guilford projects a reduction in its transportation ratio from its 42.4 percent ratio in 1984 to 42.1 percent. However, the actual ratio for the first half of 1985, 46.8 percent, is higher than the actual 1984 ratio of 46.1 percent. Further, it projects a decrease in the system's ratio to 40.3 percent by 1989, even though it projects that the Western Extension would have a higher ratio of 41.7 percent in 1989.

In view of the substantial projected decrease in Guilford's post-divestiture transportation ratio and considering the actual increase recently experienced by the Rail Division, some adjustment should be made for a sensitivity analysis.

Accordingly, the projected decrease in the ratio will be reduced slightly resulting in a 1989 figure of 41 percent instead of Guilford's 40.3 percent ratio. Since the projected transportation ratio reflects the sharp declines in labor costs on the Western Extension, when these declines are not yet assured, the small adjustment appears reasonable.

Guilford does not project a large amount of general and administrative expenses associated with the operation of the Western Extension. It only estimates a ratio of 4.5 percent for that expense category. Although the Rail Division is projected to have a ratio of 11 percent, the low figure for the acquired lines reduces the post-divestiture system ratio to 8.8 percent, which is well below the 1983 industry average of 9.5 percent.

Guilford has stated that it will centralize much of its support services in one headquarters at N. Billerica, MA. Although this centralization will reduce overhead expenses to some degree, Guilford has indicated its intention to undertake a major marketing effort on the Western Extension. It intends to contact every possible shipper and to develop as much additional business as possible, which suggests a considerable increase in marketing and sales expenses. This increase does not seem to be reflected in the sharp decline in this ratio; therefore, moderate adjustments have been made.

These ratios have been applied to the income and cash flow statements of Tables 17 and 18 which reflect revenue and rehabilitation adjustments.

Table 23 shows the effect of these adjustments on the income statement for the post-divestiture Guilford system. It indicates a few years of rather marginal operations, although the income figure improves in later years.

Table 24 shows the result on the cash flow, which is severely affected. This is particularly important since Guilford's system is not an extremely strong operation, as yet, and is highly leveraged.

It is apparent, then, that a relatively small change in the operating ratio could have a serious affect on Guilford's cash flow. It should be noted that the operating ratios used to sensitize the results are not significantly different than those projected for the Rail Division alone and represent a reasonable sensitivity adjustment.

The adjusted expense ratios have also been applied against the projections presented by Guilford. Table 25 shows the adjusted income statement, and Table 26 reflects the adjusted cash flow. No adjustments have been made for any revenue loss or added rehabilitation expense.

These tables show that, although Guilford will operate at a profit, the cash position of the post-divestiture system will be negative in 1987, and will worsen each succeeding year.

4. Conclusion

Guilford is a highly leveraged company. Therefore, cash flow is a most significant factor in determining its viability. Despite good earnings, the carrier must be able to service all of its obligations, including those that are not shown as debt on its balance sheet. In addition, cash flow is important insofar as it affects Guilford's ability to perform needed rehabilitation.

Guilford's pro forma statements show that, despite gross revenues of almost $445 million in 1989, the carrier will have a positive cash position of only $2.1 million. Therefore, there is very little margin for deviation from Guilford's revenue and expense projections.

Guilford has overestimated the revenues it would gain from the divested lines and has underestimated slightly the cost of planned rehabilitation. Although these adjustments did not have a serious affect on the income statement, they did place the extended Guilford system in a negative cash position in 1989. This, alone, would lead to the conclusion that a post-divestiture Guilford system would not be a viable operation.

In addition, there are some reservations in accepting Guilford's projected sharp decline in the expense ratios that comprise the operating ratio. They were somewhat optimistic and may not be achievable. Therefore, these ratios were adjusted to a reasonable extent, in light of the past history of Guilford's component railroads and the 1983 industry average.

Those adjusted ratios were applied to the revenue and expense figures that were projected for Guilford and lead to the conclusion that Guilford's cash position would progressively deteriorate to a completely unacceptable negative figure.

As a final step, the adjusted ratios were applied to Guilford's projections and it was found that Guilford's 1989 negative cash position would be almost as bad as with the adjusted revenues and costs.

Therefore, it is concluded that, unless Guilford is able to realize all of the additional revenues it projects, hold its rehabilitation cost to the level it estimates, and improve its operating efficiency in the optimum manner it predicts, it will be unable to conduct a viable operation after acquisition of the divested lines.

IV PLE ANALYSIS

A. Overview of PLE Proposal:

1. The Current System

PLE operates approximately 500 miles of track. It has its own lines from Brownsville Junction and Connellsville, PA to Youngstown, OH, via Pittsburgh, and it operates over trackage rights on Conrail's lines from Youngstown to Shenango, PA and to Ashtabula, OH, and over NS lines from Ashtabula to Buffalo.

PLE was a corporate subsidiary of the New York Central System, which became part of Penn Central in 1968. In 1976, most of the rail properties of the bankrupt Penn Central were acquired by the federal government to form Conrail. PLE was not one of those properties and remained a Penn Central subsidiary until 1979, when it was sold to its present private owners.

Although, prior to 1982, PLE had been a profitable company, it has suffered losses in the past three years. From 1982 through 1984, the company lost $24.0 million from rail operations and had a total loss of almost $47.7 million. During this period, its total revenues were $140.7 million.

Although PLE's financial picture is not very bright at present, it has reached an agreement with its creditors to restructure its debt, thereby improving its financial status. Because of improved efficiencies in operations and cost reduction measures, and now the debt restructuring, PLE states that it will be in a position to conduct long-term operations. Also, it should be in a better position to attract investment capital for its expansion.

2. The Divestiture Proposal

PLE will assume leases of 502.3 miles of lines and will be granted a maximum of 119 miles of trackage rights.[19] The purchase price for these lines is $18.0 million, and will be financed through a third party that will lease the facilities to PLE for $4.0 million per year.

The principal line to be transferred to PLE is the NS main line from Connellsville to Toledo. The line is almost 300 miles long and is made up of two segments. The eastern segment, from Connellsville to Pittsburgh Junction, OH, is operated by NS under a lease from the Pittsburgh and West Virginia Railroad Company (P&WV), and PLE will assume NS's interest in the lease. The western segment of the line is owned by NS. In addition, PLE will acquire NS's Brewster, OH yard and may lease certain tracks in NS's Homestead Yard in Toledo.

PLE will acquire NS's 73-mile long line from Cleveland to Harmon, OH. Harmon is a point on the line between Pittsburgh Junction and Toledo. PLE will also acquire NS's Gambrinus Yard in Canton, OH and the Campbell Road Yard in Cleveland.

Further, the PLE proposal contains reciprocal switching arrangements and car haul-age agreements that are similar to those between Guilford and NS-Conrail. Also, NS-Conrail will be granted trackage rights over certain PLE lines.

3. The Post-Divestiture PLE System

PLE states that the acquisition of trackage will enable it to establish itself as a strong regional carrier. It will be able to extend the line haul for a portion of its traffic which is currently interchanged at Youngstown or Ashtabula and, thus, its system will be enlarged to include new markets in Ohio, such as Toledo and Cleveland. Also, it will be to expand its operation in Pennsylvania and will have an opening to the Southeast via Connellsville. The new lines also will allow it access to additional connections, which will permit it to compete more effectively for traffic in the heavy industrial, agricultural, and manufacturing areas of the Midwest. Similar opportunities are presented for increasing revenues on important segments of its coal traffic to utilities in Ohio and the Michigan peninsula by relying on its coal origins at Colona Dock on the Ohio River, at Glassport on the Monongahela River, and at mines accessible via subsidiary railroads. Finally, PLE points out that the expanded Guilford system will restore PLE's friendly connection to eastern markets and western gateways.

Operations on the newly acquired lines will be centered around the yard facility at Brewster. That yard will be the main classification point for traffic generated on the new lines, and it also will provide engine service and light car repair services. PLE intends to operate daily through-train service between Pittsburgh and Toledo, via Brewster. There will be daily service between Brewster and Cleveland, with a connection at Kent, OH for traffic to and from PLE's Gateway Yard at Youngstown. Further, there will be daily service between Brewster, and Zanesville, Massillon, and Canton, OH. Also, there will be local service originating at McKees Rocks, PA and Yorkville, Norwalk, and Cleveland, OH to serve local industries. These operations will require minimal changes on the PLE system, except for the coordination of local switching service and classification work between NS's Rook Yard and PLE's McKees Rocks Yard and the initiation of connecting service between Youngstown and Kent.

The lines are generally in adequate condition for PLE's proposed operations; however, the carrier anticipates an expenditure of $9.7 million for necessary rehabilitation, upgrading of certain lines, and the construction of new connections.

Acquisition of the new lines will not place a strain on PLE's equipment supply. It has almost 14,000 freight cars, of which over 6,000 are idle and can be committed to the new lines. It will, however, need 190 covered hopper cars, 53 automotive flat cars, 27 road locomotives, and 12 automotive shop cars, which will be acquired through operating leases. It will also need to acquire, through purchase or lease, some maintenance of way equipment.

As a result of its new operations, PLE estimates that it will obtain additional gross revenues of $53.0 million. That revenue figure is broken down as follows:

On "New" Lines, $28.6 million;
PLE Extended Haul, 6.8 million;
Competitive Points, 15.4 million; and Bridge Traffic, 2.2 million.

PLE contends that it will realize an immediate benefit from the acquired lines. In the first year after acquisition, it anticipates net operating income of $12.15 million and total net income of $1.1 million. By the fifth year, PLE foresees an operating income of $31.27 million and a total net income of $22.56 million. Further, its improved efficiency is reflected in its operating ratio, which was in excess of 100 percent in 1984, but will improve to less than 80 percent by the fifth year after acquisition.

B. Criticisms of PLE proposal.—CSX, GTW, and Conrail have raised a variety of objections to PLE's proposal. The objections relate to: (1) PLE's current financial status; (2) its operating plan; and (3) its marketing plan. These objections are discussed below.

The opponents contend that PLE's current financial condition is so weak that it is functionally insolvent. They note that PLE lost money in each of the past three years and has been in default on certain debt payments since July, 1983. The opponents assert that even with a restructured debt agreement, PLE's creditors will probably have a secured interest in its assets, leaving little or no margin for additional financing if necessary. They state that PLE's operating efficiency ratio is very high compared to other Eastern District carriers, its profit margin is negative, and its historic return on assets has been very small or negative. Essentially, the opponents argue that PLE is in such poor financial condition that it can barely remain solvent and, therefore, cannot survive if it takes on any additional burden such as the acquisition of new lines.

The opponents argue that PLE's operating plan will not allow it to compete with NS-Conrail. First, they assert that the lines to be acquired are in poor condition and will need substantial rehabilitation before PLE can operate them. They estimate that this rehabilitation will cost between $23.8 and $31.7 million plus an additional $1.4 to $2.2 million for new yards and connections. They question how PLE will finance these sums given its poor financial condition. Second, they argue that, even with this rehabilitation, PLE's service will be inferior to that available from NS-Conrail. PLE plans to offer one train per day service at 40 to 50 m.p.h. between major cities on its lines. Conrail currently runs between 35 and 70 trains per day at 60 m.p.h. between many of the same points. Thus, the opponents contend that PLE cannot hope to compete with NS-Conrail.

Finally, the opponents assert that PLE's marketing plan and revenue projections are unrealistic. They argue that PLE's projection of a nearly 100 percent increase in revenues with no loss of traffic to NS-Conrail is implausible. They contend that a consolidated NS-Conrail will have an excellent opportunity and reason to divert much of the existing NS-PLE interline traffic to NS-Conrail, since 90 percent of PLE's territory is in direct competition with NS-Conrail. They note that PLE will be forced to rely on connections with other carriers since it has no direct access to western carriers. They find no support for PLE's contention that GW and Guilford will provide sufficent traffic to offset that lost to NS-Conrail. The opponents argue that Guilford and PLE are competitors at major gateways such as Buffalo and Toledo and, therefore, Guilford would have no incentive to be a "friendly" connector with PLE. Generally, the opponents argue that PLE will be relegated to running costly, inefficient, short-haul, branch-line service with few long-hauls to support the costs of its basic service. Under these circumstances, they argue that PLE cannot obtain sufficient revenues to support its expanded system, compete with NS-Conrail, and remain even marginally financially viable.

C. Discussion of PLE proposal.

1. Description and Condition of Lines

PLE is obtaining access to between 610.58 and 621.23 route-miles, depending on whether it elects Aternative A or Alternative B near Youngstown, from both Conrail and NS. It intends to purchase 502.31 route-miles and obtain trackage rights over 108.27 route-miles (Alternative A), or 118.92 route-miles (Alternative B). A description of each line, including its current condition as determined by track charts and timetables, is set forth below.

a. The 105 Secondary.—This line is owned by Conrail and runs from Carnegie (MP 1.92) to Glenn, PA (MP 2.5). The line contains 0.58 route-miles and is single track. According to track charts, the speed limit on the line is 15 m.p.h. No rail weight is specified. From the operating plan, it seems that this segment will be involved in connecting traffic to the former P&WV line of NS at Bridgeville, PA. In addition, there is a high probability that some of the traffic over this line will involve special purpose cars, such as depressed center flats, multiple-truck flats, and Schnabel cars, used to transport heavy, excess-dimension shipments of electrical equipment. This line is not in adequate condition to operate these types of equipment.

b. The Washington Secondary.—This line is owned by Conrail and runs from Glenn (MP 0.1) to Bridgeville (MP 3.9), containing 3.8 route-miles. According to track charts and timetables, the speed limit is 10 m.p.h. for the entire line. Approximately 60 percent of the rail is 100-lb. and the remainder is 130-lb. This line is contiguous to the 105 Secondary and will be subjected to the same excess-dimension traffic. This line is currently in FRA Class 1 condition, but needs to be in FRA Class 2 condition in order to handle the traffic described above.

c. The Bridgeville-McDonald Industrial.—This track runs from Bridgeville (MP 0.0) to a point about one mile west (MP 1.5). According to Conrail, this line was approved for abandonment in November 1984. This line is contiguous to the Washington Secondary and will be subjected to the same excess-dimension traffic. The line is probably at or below FRA Class 1 condition, but should be rehabilitated to FRA Class 2 condition to handle the proposed traffic.

d. Cleveland-Pymatuning Line.—PLE is seeking trackage rights over Conrail's Cleveland-Pymatuning line from Brier Hill (MP 61.9) to Leavittsburg, OH (MP 49.2). The line contains 12.7 route-miles and is double track. Alternative A uses the entire line; Alternative B uses the western portion of the line from Warren, OH (MP 53.8) to Leavittsburg (MP 49.2), 4.6 route-miles. Also included in each alternative is a connection at Girard, OH. According to track charts, the line consists almost entirely of double track and the timetable speed is 25 m.p.h. Virtually all rail is 115-lb. B&O's crossing at Deforest, OH has been isolated or removed and the interlocking deactivated. The line is in FRA Class 2 condition, but is inoperable for Alternative A without the B&O crossing at Deforest. For Alternative B, the portion of the line from Warren to Leavittsburg is operable.

e. Freedom Secondary.—PLE is seeking trackage rights over Conrail's Freedom Secondary from Leavittsburg (MP 164.8) to Kent (MP 192.5). The line contains 27.7 route-miles. According to the track charts, the line consists almost entirely of double track and the timetable speed is 25 m.p.h. The former westbound main line is approximately 50 percent 115-lb. and 50 percent 132-lb. rail. The former eastbound main line is 131-lb. and 132-lb.

f. E&A Branch.—PLE is seeking trackage rights over Conrail's E&A Branch from Graham (MP 60.7) to Detour, OH (MP 75.6). The line contains 14.9 route-miles and 15.3 track-miles. According to track charts, the line's timetable speed is 25 m.p.h., with some 20 m.p.h. restrictions in towns and yards. The rail is predominately 131-lb. with some 130-lb. The 130-lb. rail is 1929 vintage and should be considered for replacement.

g. PY&A Secondary.—PLE is seeking trackage rights over Conrail's PY&A Secondary from Detour (MP 75.6) to Warren (MP 79.45). The line contains 3.85 route-miles. There is also a connection at Warren. According to track charts, the line is double track, and the speed limit on the main track is 30 m.p.h. for 0.4 mile, 20 m.p.h. for 3.0 miles, and 15 m.p.h. for 0.45 mile. The second main is all 15 m.p.h. All rail is 131-lb.

h. Weirton Secondary (Gould).—PLE is seeking trackage rights over Conrail's Weirton Secondary from Mingo Jct. (MP 49.4) to Gould, OH (MP 46.7). The line contains 2.7 route-miles. According to track charts, the area under consideration has three tracks, probably two mains and a center passing track. The speed limit on the mains is 25 m.p.h., and 15 m.p.h. on the siding. The rail is mostly 140-lb., with some 131-lb.

i. Powhatan Secondary.—PLE is seeking trackage rights over Conrail's Powhatan Secondary from Mingo Jct. (MP 20.6) to Brilliant, OH (MP 23.0). The line contains 2.4 route-miles. PLE has stated that this is an industrial access line. According to track charts, the line is double track and timetable speed is 10 m.p.h. The main track consists of 131-lb., 130-lb., and 100-lb. rail. Part of this line appears to be yard area, with 6 miles of track immediately outside being 131-lb. CWR. Accordingly, either the tie and surfacing condition is poor or operating and traffic conditions on the line must be the controlling factor, since the speed limit indicates FRA Class 1 condition outside the yard area.

j. Weirton Secondary (Pittsburgh).—PLE is seeking trackage rights over Conrail's Weirton Secondary from Duff Jct. (MP 3.0) to Rosslyn, PA (MP 6.3). The line contains 3.3 route-miles. This line appears to parallel the PC&Y route through this area. According to track charts, the line is all double track with an additional passing-siding. Approximately 80 percent of the line is 152-lb. and 155-lb. rail with the remainder 131-lb. These are the heaviest known rail sections in service. The speed limit is 25 m.p.h. on the main and 20 m.p.h. on sidings. The line passes through a large yard at Scully, PA. Operating considerations in the area may govern the speed limit rather than track condition. This line is part of the connection with NS's Connellsville line at Bridgeville.

k. 105 Secondary.—PLE is seeking trackage rights over Conrail's 105 Secondary from Lewis Run, PA (MP 0.1) to Carnegie (MP 1.92). The line contains 2.02 route miles. According to track charts, the speed limit on the line is 15 m.p.h. No rail weight is specified. From the operating plan, it seems that this segment will be involved in connecting traffic to the former P&WV line of NS at Bridgeville. This line will be subjected to the same excess dimension traffic as the other segment of the 105 Secondary.

l. Pittsburgh, Charters and Youghiogheny Railroad (PC&Y).—PLE is seeking trackage rights over trackage jointly-owned with Conrail from McKees Rocks (MP 0.5) to Carnegie (MP 7.0). The line contains 6.5 route-miles. This line appears to parallel Conrail's Weirton Secondary from Duff Jct. to Rosslyn. According to PLE, this line will need some selective upgrading as part of the route from the connection to NS's Connellsville line at Bridgeville.

m. The Canton District.—This line is owned by NS and runs from Cleveland (MP 0.8) to Harmon (MP 73.6). The line contains 72.8 route-miles and is single track. According to track charts, the section from Cleveland (MP 0.8) to Falls Jct., OH (MP 16.1) has a timetable speed of 20 m.p.h., the section from Falls Jct. to Canton (MP 58.5) is 35 m.p.h. with some speed restrictions, the section from Canton to Gambrinus (MP 64.8) is 15 m.p.h., and the section from Gambrinus to Harmon is 30 m.p.h. with some speed restrictions. The line is mostly 1939 to 1946 vintage 110-lb. rail with some 110-lb and 112-lb. CWR on the south end. PLE has stated that about 33 miles of the line has been out of service and another 10 miles is in use but will require upgrading to FRA Class 3. PLE is addressing the Canton to Falls Jct. segment. NS has stated that it will restore this part of the line to FRA Class 2 condition prior to divestiture.

n. The Toledo-Wheeling District.—This line is owned by NS and runs from Yeoman, OH (MP 54.6) to Pitt Jct. (MP 183.4). The line contains 128.8 route miles and 134.9 track-miles. The line is presently in FRA Class 4 condition with a speed limit of 50 m.p.h. Most of the line is 112-lb., 115-lb., 131-lb., and 133-lb. rail. The signalling system is CTC. Also included is a section of the Lorain & West Virginia Railway Company (L&WV) from Lake Junction (MP 0.0) to MP 1.5. This line contains 1.5 route-miles and is single track. This section also includes Brewster Yard. The section of L&WV considered here has a speed limit of 10 m.p.h. with 90-lb. rail. It appears to be a yard area and it is in adequate condition for yard work.

o. The Connellsville District.—This line is leased by NS from the P&WV, and runs from Connellsville (MP 0.0) to Pitt Jct. (MP 111.2). The line contains 111.2 route-miles and is basically single track. Also included are three branches: the West End Branch, 2.3 route-miles; the Clairton Branch, 5.6 route-miles; and Mifflin Branch, 3.5 route miles. The line is presently FRA Class 4 and most of the line is 112-lb. and 115-lb. rail with some 132-lb. The signalling system is CTC. From MP 0.0 to MP 47.0 the speed limit is 30 m.p.h. with two speed restrictions for a 9-degree and 10-degree reverse curve at MP 41.0. From MP 47.0 to MP 55.4 the speed limit is 25 m.p.h. There is a short stretch of 20 m.p.h. line through Rood Yard. The remainder of the line is 40 m.p.h. The three branches are mostly 105-lb. rail with 10 m.p.h. speed limits. This line traverses extremely irregular terrain south of Pittsburgh and it is difficult to determine if the speed limits are imposed because of track conditions or because of the many sharp curves through the area from MP 41.0 to MP 5.0, especially from MP 49.0 to MP 54.0.

p. The Steubenville Branch.—This line is owned by NS and runs from Warrenton (MP 0.0) to Steubenville, OH (MP 13.2). The line contains 13.2 route-miles and is single track. The line is presently in FRA Class 1 or 2 condition. There is heavy steel mill traffic on the line. The speed limit from MP 0.0 to MP 8.0 is 20 m.p.h. and from MP 8.0 to MP 13.2 is 10 m.p.h. The rail is 132-lb. CWR from MP 0.0 to MP 9.0. The 10 m.p.h. limit is within the yard limits at Mingo and is probably not due to track condition. Operating parameters usually control in these areas.

q. The Wheeling District.—This line is owned by NS and runs from Warrenton (MP 205.4) to Martins Ferry, OH (MP 213.2). The line contains 7.8 route-miles and is single track. The timetable speed is 10 m.p.h. Most of the rail is 1926 vintage 90-lb., with some 1900 and 1919 vintage 90-lb. relay.

r. The Chagrin Falls Branch.—This line is owned by NS and runs from Falls Jct. (MP 0.0) to Chagrin Falls, OH (MP 8.15). The line contains 8.15 route-miles and is single track. According to track charts, the timetable speed is 10 m.p.h., and the rail is all 1942 to 1945 vintage 90-lb.

s. The Carrollton Branch.—This line is owned by NS and runs from Canton (MP 0.0) to Carrollton, OH (MP 27.72). The line contains 27.72 route-miles and is single track. According to track charts, the timetable speed is 10 m.p.h., and the rail is mostly 1926 and 1929 vintage 90-lb. There is also some 1941 vintage 110-lb. rail.

t. The Minerva Branch.—This line is owned by NS and runs from Minerva Jct. (MP 0.0) to Minerva, OH (MP 3.0). The line contains 3.0 route-miles and is single track. According to track charts, the timetable speed is 10 m.p.h., and the rail is mostly 1929 vintage 90-lb. There is also a small amount of heavier rail.

u. The Massillon Branch.—This line is owned by NS. There are two segments of this line under consideration: Orrville Jct. (MP 0.0) to Orrville, OH (MP 1.4); and Dalton (MP 7.0) to Run Jct., OH (MP 22.1). The two sections are not connected; the section from MP 1.4 to MP 7.0 was abandoned in 1954. These two segments contain 16.5 route-miles and are single track. According to track charts, the timetable speed is 10 m.p.h. The rail is mostly 80-lb. and 90-lb., with a small amount of heavier rail.

v. The Zanesville District.—The line is owned by NS and runs from Harmon (MP 73.6) to Zanesville (MP 144.4). The line contains 70.8 route-miles and is single track. There are also two other segments in this area: the Zanesville Belt Line, MP 0.0 to MP 3.1 in the Zanesville area and the Peabody Spur, MP 0.8 to MP 7.2. These two lines contain an additional 9.5 route-miles and are single track. PLE has stated that this line is more than adequate to provide competitive service in its present condition. According to track charts, the timetable speed for the main line is 30 m.p.h. Most of the rail is 1937 to 1941 vintage 90-lb., with some 1945 vintage 110-lb. rail. There are some speed restrictions on curves. The Zanesville Belt has a timetable speed of 15 m.p.h. and is all 90-lb. rail. The Peabody Spur is mostly 112-lb. rail with no listed speed limit.

w. The Cleveland Belt.—This line is owned by NS and runs from Belt Line Jct. (MP 0.0) to Knob, OH (MP 5.42). The line contains 5.42 route-miles and is single track. According to track charts, the timetable speed is 15 m.p.h. and rail is mostly 100-lb. The line appears to be an industrial switching area with numerous sidings and several very sharp curves, five of which are nine degrees or more. The speed limit suggests that the line is at the low end of FRA Class 2 condition and it is suspected that operations over this line are not impacted by the speed limit.

x. The Canton Belt.—This line is owned by NS and runs from MP 0.0 to MP 3.74 in the Canton area. The line contains 3.74 route-miles and is single track. There is heavy steel mill traffic on the line. PLE has stated that the line is in adequate conditions. According to track charts, the timetable is 10 m.p.h., and the line consists mostly of 110-lb. rail.

y. Cherry Street Line.—PLE is seeking trackage rights over NS's Cherry Street line from Cherry Street (MP 2.0) to Ironville (MP 3.7) in the Toledo area. The line contains 1.7 route-miles and is single track. According to track charts, the speed limit is 10 m.p.h. Since the line appears to run through a very congested switching and yard district, it is concluded that the track condition is acceptable because of the timetable speed.

z. Toledo District.—PLE is seeking trackage rights over NS's Toledo District from Toledo (MP 5.35) to Yeomans (MP 54.6). The lines contains 49.25 route-miles and is essentially single track with passing-sidings. The line is presently FRA Class 4 with a speed limit of 50 m.p.h. Most of the line is 112-lb., 115-lb., 131-lb., and 133-lb. rail. The signaling system is CTC.

aa. The Huron Branch.—This line is owned by NS and runs from Huron Jct. (MP 0.3) to Milan, OH (MP 5.5). The line contains 5.2 route-miles and is single track. According to track charts, the speed limit is 10 m.p.h. from MP 0.3 to MP 1.0 and 20 m.p.h. from MP 1.0 to MP 5.5.

2. Operating Plan.

PLE proposes to operate over the lines acquired and leased and via their trackage rights, the following daily through trains:

Brewster to Toledo, OH; Toledo to Brewster, OH; Brewster, OH to McKees Rocks, PA; McKees Rocks, PA to Brewster, OH; Brewster to Cleveland, OH Cleveland to Brewster, OH; Youngstown to Kent, OH (and return).

As required, ore trains will operate between Ashtabula and Mingo Junction; and coal trains will operate between Lewell, PA and Toledo.

Local service of two trains per day will be provided between the following points:

Yorkville and Steubenville/Terminal Junction, OH; and Brewster and Canton, OH (Gambrinus) (including Carrollton Branch).

Daily local service will be provided between the following points:

Cleveland and Chagrin Falls, OH; and Brewster and Massillon/Dalton OH.

Local service will be provided three times per week between the following points:

Brewster and Coshocton/Zanesville, OH; and Zanesville/Coshocton and Brewster, OH.

Local service will be provided at the following locations and points five days per week:

Norwalk, OH; and McKees Rocks and Connellsville, PA.

For the most part, the level of service is equal to that which is provided by current operations.

Major track rehabilitation items consist of two track segments: (1) Falls Junction to North Canton and (2) the PC&Y trackage in the Pittsburg area. Also, the construction of three new connections are needed to connect the acquired lines to PLE's present system. The combination of the track rehabilitation and new connections will provide PLE with a track network which will provide adequate service to its present shippers and to shippers located on the acquired lines.

One important segment is the proposed operation from PLE's Gateway Yard in Youngstown over a combination of Conrail branch lines to Kent including a new connection between Conrail's and PLE acquired tracks in Kent. With this segment, PLE will be able to handle traffic between Cleveland and Pittsburgh over a shorter route than would be otherwise available by the extended PLE system.

The PLE operating plan is viable and capable of providing equal or better service than that which is provided by Conrail at the present time.

3. Rehabilitation

In analyzing the rehabilitation costs, the evidence submitted by PLE and Conrail, as well as empirical data such as track charts and time tables, was used.

Preliminarily, it must be noted that the rehabilitation estimates depend on which of two possible routes PLE uses to go from the Youngstown area to Leavittsburg. Alternative A uses the Cleveland-Pymatuning Main from Brier Hill (MP 61.9) to Kent (MP 192.5). Alternative B uses the E&A Branch from Graham (MP 60.8) to Detour (MP 75.5), the PY&A Secondary from Detour to Warren (MP 79.45), the Cleveland-Pymatuning Main from Warren (MP 79.45=MP 53.8) to Leavittsburg (MP 49.2), then the Freedom Secondary over the same route as Alternative A. The choice of alternative affects both rehabilitation and connection costs.

Conrail presented the most comprehensive rehabilitation cost information. It was also the highest in total cost proposing line rehabilitation costs of $25,226,236 for Alternative A and $30,700,901 for Alternative B and connection costs of $2,522,200 for Alternative A and $2,385,540 for Alternative B. PLE presented information on lines it felt needed rehabilitation based on its operating plan. Since it was PLE's opinion that all but two of the lines were in adequate condition for the service it planned to run, its total estimate was considerably less than Conrail's estimates. PLE's total was $5,915,512 for line rehabilitation and $3,783,210 for connections for Alternative A; no estimates were given for Alternative B.

Relying on work quantities submitted by Conrail, an estimate was developed and the rehabilitation costs were restated where necessary. PLE will need to spend a total of $7,047,512 on line rehabilitation for Alternatives A and B. An additional $3,783,000 will be required for connections in Alternative A and $3,018,510 for Alternative B. Since PLE has indicated that it prefers Alternative A, and has in fact assumed this Alternative when setting forth its trackage rights costs, PLE's total rehabilitation cost is $10,830,512.

Below is a discussion of each of the line segments for which rehabilitation is necessary.

a. Canton District.—Conrail submitted an estimated rehabilitation cost of $2,033,107. PLE has estimated the rehabilitation at $3,683,807. No work quantities have been submitted by either Conrail or PLE. PLE has described its estimate as addressing deferred maintenance on the line from N. Canton to Falls Jct. A portion of this track has been out of service and represents more of a deferred use problem. Approximately 10 miles of the line is in use but will require some upgrading to bring it up to FRA Class 3 standards. Conrail's estimate was for the entire 73-mile line. At this point, PLE's estimate is the most reasonable estimate of rehabilitation cost for this line.

b. Pittsburgh, Chartiers and Youghiogheny Railroad.—PLE states that its estimate of $2,231,705 is more of an upgrading effort than rehabilitation. There was no contrasting estimate and insufficient detail to make an independent estimate. PLE's estimate is accepted as a reasonable indication of the rehabilitation costs for this line.

c. 105 Secondary (both segments).—Due to the operation of special equipment and heavy, excess-dimension shipments over this line, both sections of the 105 Secondary should be rehabilitated to FRA Class 2 condition. This is recommended not to raise the operating speed, but to provide a more stable track structure over which to operate this equipment. This requires replacement of all rail with used rail, sufficient ties to go from marginal FRA Class 2 condition to full FRA Class 2 condition, and one surfacing pass. The estimate for this amount of rehabilitation is $348,000.

d. Washington Secondary.—This line is contiguous with the 105 Secondary and will be subjected to the same traffic. Operation of the above referenced equipment requires better than FRA Class 1 condition track. The replacement of the 100-lb. rail with used rail, sufficient ties to go from FRA Class 1 to 2, and one surfacing pass is recommended. The estimate for this amount of rehabilitation is $556,500.

e. Bridgeville-McDonald Industrial.—This line is contiguous with the above two sections and will be subjected to the same traffic. It will also be the site of the connection with the Connellsville District. Replacement of all rail, a sufficient number of ties to go from FRA Class 1 to 2, and one pass surfacing have been included in the rehabilitation estimate, which is $228,000.

f. Yards and Connections.—PLE has not specified any rehabilitation cost for the yards that it plans to acquire. Therefore, it is assumed that all yards are in adequate condition.

Both PLE and Conrail have submitted estimates on connection costs. There are connections at Bridgeville, McKees Rocks, Girard (Alternative A), and Warren (Alternative B).[20] PLE's estimates are generally higher than Conrail's, although given the probable level of precision of the estimates, the costs are remarkably close, all factors considered. The best estimate of the total connection cost for Alternative B is $3,018,510. For Alternative A, the best estimate of the total connection costs is PLE's estimate of $3,783,210.

4. Traffic Diversion

a. PLE's proposal.—PLE developed a marketing plan to integrate the lines acquired from NS into its existing system. PLE asserts that the expanded system will enable it to extend the line haul for a portion of its traffic that is currently interchanged to connections at Youngstown or Ashtabula. This traffic will be carried to Toledo with a resulting increase in line haul revenues. Working in conjunction with friendly connections, PLE believes that it will also be able to use new routes to compete more effectively for traffic to the heavy industrial, agricultural, and manufacturing areas of Michigan, northwestern Indiana, and northeastern Illinois. According to PLE, similar opportunities are presented for increasing revenues on important segments of its coal traffic to utilities in Ohio and the Michigan peninsula. These opportunities will interface with PLE's coal origins at Colona Dock on the Ohio River, at Glassport on the Monongahela River, and at mines accessible to PLE via subsidiary railroads.

PLE performed a traffic study based on three data sources. These included proprietary NS traffic data for the NS routes involved, proprietary PLE traffic data for its existing system, and aggregated one percent waybill data for certain areas in the expanded PLE service area. In conducting the study, PLE used the following assumptions: (1) PLE will be able to maintain existing market share with customers on its present system; (2) all NS business on acquired lines will be available to PLE; and (3) PLE will attain a competitive market position in the expanded PLE service area. The results of the study indicated that PLE would gain an additional $53 million gross freight revenues in 1986. This figure is based on four categories of traffic that are summarized as follows:

	Carloads	Revenue 1985 dollars
On "new" lines	67,819	28,595,000
PLE extended haul	24,005	6,781,000
Competitive points	28,116	15,421,000
Bridge traffic	4,000	2,200,000

PLE notes that its estimate of its share of traffic from competitive points, 28,116 carloads, is only 15.7 percent of the 179,273 carloads available at those points.

b. Opposition.—Conrail, GTW, and CSX allege that there are numerous fallacies inherent in PLE's assumptions. In addition, GTW performed its own traffic analysis, concluding that PLE would only gain additional revenues of $15.7 million. The principal points raised by the opponents are discussed below.

All of the opponents assert that PLE has taken an unreasonably optimistic view of the future and that its chances for success in providing effective competition for a combined NS-Conrail are slight. PLE's traffic and revenue projections are based on assumptions that cannot be defended, and certainly not presumed, in their view. They find that PLE's assumption that the NS-Conrail combination will divert no existing traffic from it to be wholly unrealistic, especially since PLE admits that it now relies heavily on NS as a connection on east-west routed traffic. Twenty-seven percent of PLE's interline revenues are derived from NS hauls to and from Conrail competitive points. In the event of consolidation, NS would encompass the Conrail system which would parallel 90 percent of PLE's track. This will give NS the opportunity to expand its share in markets that are served by PLE. They note that PLE is aware of this problem since it originally told DOJ that it would lose $12.6 million in traffic to NS-Conrail. They find no support for PLE's conclusion that the divestiture agreement ameliorates the conditions that caused PLE to claim this heavy loss.

Even after the divestiture, these carriers note that PLE will be forced to rely on regular connections with other carriers, since it will still have no direct access to western gateways. They claim that there is no support for PLE's assumption that GTW and Guilford will take on this role, filling the void left by NS. For example, GTW states, in its opening statement, that the amount of traffic it plans to interchange with PLE is "miniscule." Guilford also presents problems as an interchange partner. First, PLE and Guilford will be competitors over certain major gateways, such as Buffalo and Toledo. Second, there is no existing interchange between the two carriers at Wellington, OH. Guilford is to receive only overhead traffic rights on the line through Wellington, and under the terms of the divestiture proposals, cannot interchange traffic there with PLE. Thus, for traffic from Pittsburgh moving to Chicago or St. Louis, the interchange between PLE and Guilford must occur either at Cleveland, which affords PLE only a limited haul over 30 m.p.h. branch line track, or at Toledo, which, because of its undue circuity, would not be a competitive route.

The opponents take issue with PLE's assumption that it will attain a competitive market position in its expanded service area. They claim that the lines to be divested to PLE are second-rate when measured against the competing NS and Conrail lines.

The primary line to be acquired by PLE is the former NS line from Connellsville on the East to Toledo on the West. The parties maintain that the segment from Pittsburgh to Connellsville is redundant in that PLE already serves Connellsville. As for the area between Pittsburgh and Toledo, they cite several factors supporting PLE's inability to offer competitive service. First, this line will be competing with the Conrail route via Alliance and Cleveland. Conrail's track is double-main-line, with remote-controlled signaling, FRA Class 5 condition, 60 to 80 m.p.h. speed. Conrail handles about 70 trains per day between Toledo and Cleveland and 35 trains between Cleveland and Conway Yard, at Pittsburgh. In contrast, PLE will handle only one train in each direction and will experience delays coming west out of Rook Yard at Pittsburgh where PLE will face serious operating problems. The track is between FRA Class 3 and FRA Class 4 condition (40 to 50 m.p.h., respectively) single track. Thus, the opponents believe that PLE will not be any more successful in attracting traffic to this line than NS was, and NS had steadily reduced its service on this line to one train per day. They also point out that PLE is being granted only overhead trackage rights on the portion of this line from Yeomans to Toledo, a length of some 50 miles. The divestiture agreement thereby prevents PLE from providing local service to the many industries in this area, thus reserving this traffic for NS-Conrail.

As to the trackage rights over Conrail's line from Kent to Youngstown, also known as the Pymatuning line, the opponents note that there are few active industries in Youngstown from which PLE could gain additional traffic and few industries along the Pymatuning line itself. The Republic Steel facility, which is still operating there, will not be served by PLE under the terms of the divestiture agreement. Moreover, PLE's one train per-day service over this low-speed branch line will have to compete with Conrail's established service moving through Youngstown and Alliance which offers more frequent trains and faster service.

The NS line from Cleveland to Harmon is also a branch line operated at relatively low speeds (20-30 m.p.h.). A portion of this line is out of service as NS has chosen not to offer the north-south service that PLE envisions it will provide after the line is restored. The main commodity moving along this route is steel between a Cleveland manufacturing plant and a Canton rolling plant. The opponents point out that this short-haul traffic is extremely sensitive to truck competition. Conrail has been able to carry some of this traffic by offering next-day delivery between the facilities and pricing on a truck-competitive basis. The opponents claim that PLE's branch line service will be hard-pressed to compete with Conrail's schedule or to meet the intense truck competition, since this steel traffic must support the total cost of PLE's line.

The opponents take umbrage with PLE's traffic study methodology, which appears to indicate that it will retain all traffic currently handled by NS on the divested lines. They note that NS retains access through reciprocal switching to almost every important traffic generating point on PLE's new lines. Because much of the traffic generated on PLE's new lines traditionally moves to NS or Conrail stations, the opponents believe that NS will be able to retain much of it on its new system.

Finally, the opponents stress that one must consider the reality of PLE's current position in the market. They assert that the addition of new lines to Cleveland and Toledo will not fundamentally change PLE's ability to compete with CSX or NS-Conrail. They note that throughout PLE's opening statement is the admission that PLE is not now a "vigorous, competitive regional railroad." There are many reasons for PLE's present difficulties according to the opponents: overabundance of rail equipment; collapse of rail-using industries in Western Pennsylvania and Eastern Ohio; and brutal competitive tactics by Conrail. The opponents aver that the acquisition of the new lines by PLE will not alter these present problems.

Only one party, GTW, submitted a traffic analysis in contrast to PLE's. GTW's diversion model was a modification of the PRORAIL traffic model used to estimate the real value of the PRORAIL divestiture alternative proposed by PLE and GTW. Thus, according to GTW, its analysis of PLE's new lines employed the same approach and assumptions used in the PRORAIL study that were endorsed by PLE.

Traffic data were drawn from the 1983 ICC waybill sample and were sorted into fifteen relevant groupings. Traffic records were coded by origin and destination carrier or station. Open and closed stations for PLE and NS-Conrail were identified using open switching district counties that were developed from a review of the divestiture agreement. Diversion probabilities were calculated by review of the relative market power of PLE at origin and destination. If PLE would have substantial influence at both origin and destination, a high diversion percentage was used. If NS-Conrail will serve both origin and destination, the probabilities of diversion to PLE would be small. According to GTW, the percentages used in the PLE new lines study closely paralleled the percentages used in the PRORAIL case.

There were several important assumptions that influenced GTW's study results: (1) Guilford and PLE will be unable to coordinate their service to any significant extent; (2) poor track conditions and line circuitry foreclose PLE from participating in intermodal traffic; (3) PLE would not lose any traffic to the new NS-Conrail system; (4) current PLE traffic moving to NS-Conrail stations not served by PLE's new lines is non-divertible; and (5) GTW and PLE would work closely together at Toledo for Western traffic.

GTW's traffic diversion model predicted that PLE would add 46,201 cars in new and extended haul traffic from its new lines. To estimate the new revenues that these movements would produce, PLE's average 1983 revenues per ton-mile were used with the ton-mile results from the diversion model. These produced average revenues of $340 per car. Using this figure, GTW estimated that PLE would gain only $15.7 million in gross annual revenues.

c. Rebuttal.—PLE argues that Conrail, GTW, and CSX have misconstrued the marketing assumptions used in its traffic study. PLE asserts that it did not assume that it will retain its existing traffic base, it only assumed that it will maintain its proportionate share of traffic on current PLE lines. PLE asserts that it did not assume capture of all traffic on acquired lines; it only assumed that PLE would have the opportunity to compete for that traffic via its new lines. Given these conservative assumptions, PLE believes that it is reasonable to expect that it will be able to establish a competitive presence in its expanded service area. Moreover, PLE argues that these assumptions have been comfirmed by the detailed traffic data that it has analyzed.

As to the failure to account for $12.6 million in diversions to the NS-Conrail system, PLE asserts that these opposing carriers did not recognize that the diversion estimate was provided to DOJ before the development of the following measures designed specifically to preserve effective rail competition in PLE markets: (1) divestitures to PLE establishing friendly connections with Guilford and GTW; (2) line divestitures to PLE permitting single line service between Pittsburgh, Ashtabula, Cleveland, Toledo, Weirton/Steubenville, Canton, Youngstown/Sharon, and Massillion; (3) NS assurances to restore competitive rate and efficient route relationships with PLE on present and divested lines after it acquires Conrail; (4) the potential Commission promulgation of effective regulations on competitive access; and (5) new or expanded PLE-served river/rail facilities for coal and other commodities. According to PLE, when these factors are taken into account, the net effect of the NS-Conrail diversion on PLE's current traffic levels is de minimis.

PLE notes that opponents to the divestiture proposals have made much of the speed and frequency of service that it will provide over its expanded system as compared to that of NS-Conrail. But it notes that the efficiency of any railroad is based on two factors—plant design and traffic volumes. If a line is designed and built to carry 25 trains per day, it is highly inefficient and unprofitable to maintain the line at FRA Class 5 (80 m.p.h.) and operate only one train per day. However, if a line is designed, operated, and maintained to handle two or three trains per day, then efficiencies can be obtained at that lesser level of operations. Although the lines to be acquired will enable it to extend its line haul by several hundred miles, PLE notes that this is a relatively short distance. It also notes the time difference between FRA Class 3 track (40 m.p.h.) and FRA Class 5 track (80 m.p.h.) for a 300-mile haul is only 3¾ hours (assuming both trains could travel at maximum speed over the entire distance). Although these time differences might be critical if it were competing with NS-Conrail for TOFC or J.I.T. (just in time) traffic, PLE notes that this is not the case. PLE states that it has examined 100 percent of the 1983 and 1984 traffic on these lines. The principal commodities currently moving by rail are not sufficiently time sensitive to make these service differentials competitively significant. Moreover, PLE asserts that its operating plan calls for the main line between Pittsburgh and Toledo to be maintained at its present operating level, which is more than adequate to compete with NS-Conrail main lines for this type of traffic.

d. Conclusions.—The marketing plan of PLE, as revised, is feasible. The ability of PLE to compete for "new line" traffic in the Toledo-Pittsburgh and the Cleveland-Pittsburgh markets is important to its viability. Opponents have noted that the lines of PLE are not equal in FRA track classification to Conrail lines and argue, therefore, that PLE cannot provide competitive service in these corridors.

The record indicates slower transit times for PLE traffic and the potential for motor carrier competition. However, overlooked by the parties, is the location of the terminal yards and facilities the PLE proposes to use to originate and terminate trains in Toledo and Cleveland.

The use of NS's Cherry Street line and related yards in Toledo to effect interchange by PLE and to assemble trains should provide a more expeditious departure of PLE's trains than that of the other carriers in this market. It is reasonable to assume an earlier departure would offset a slower (if any) road speed.

In Cleveland, PLE will be originating its Pittsburgh train from Campbell Road Yard. This yard is situated within the steel production area of the city. PLE should realize less terminal delay by the shipper to the trains' departure from the terminal than with NS-Conrail.

Of equal importance to PLE's "new line" traffic is that which originates or terminates in the Steubenville/Terminal Junction area. This is an area of heavy steel production with the bulk of traffic on this line related to the steel industry. Two major steel mills will be served by PLE along the line. Of the traffic available to PLE, a very significant portion is local to PLE. In addition, some of this traffic is associated with steel operations at other plants served by PLE. PLE estimates revenues in excess of $12 million from shippers located on these lines. This estimate is realistic.

In conclusion, PLE's estimate of $53 million in additional revenues as a result of acquisition of the divested lines is reasonable.

D. Financial Viability:

1. Introduction

This section focuses on: (1) the recent and current financial position of PLE; (2) PLE's recent debt-restructuring agreement; and (3) the future financial viability of the enlarged PLE system. This examination of PLE's future viability considers PLE's proposal and an analysis of the key elements of that proposal. An alternate case reflecting modifications to PLE's projected operating ratios is also set forth. It should be noted that all of the comments filed with respect to PLE's financial position were considered, even though they are not specifically discussed.

Funds flow analysis was used as the principal determinant in forecasting the near-term viability of PLE. The analysis (i) projects the needed capitial outlays and other fund requirements of the carrier such as debt installments, (ii) determines the amount of funds available from rail and non-rail operations, and (iii) ascertains whether the amount of funds available would meet or fall short of projected requirements. The discussion of viability includes the concept of profitability and stability, which are influenced by such variables as operating margin, investment, and solvency. Consequently, for further insight into the adequacy of PLE's financial health, a variety of financial and operating ratios are included. These ratios readily complement the funds flow test and have a high predicative ability.

2. Current Viability

PLE is a wholly-owned subsidiary of PLECO, Inc., a holding company established in 1979 to acquire all of PLE's outstanding common stock. PLECO paid $66.4 million for the PLE shares through a leveraged buyout, where PLE's assets were used to finance the major portion of the cost of its acquisition.

Prior to 1982, PLE's railroad's operations were consistently profitable, However, since 1982, PLE's revenue tons-miles have steadily declined, and it has sustained significant losses. The railroad blamed deep drops in steel and coal traffic for the business decline. The fosllowing schedule summarizes the unfavorable financial and traffic data for the three years ending in 1984 (000's omitted).

Year	Railway operating revenues	Net railway operating income (loss)	Net income	Revenue ton miles
1984	$50,316	$(3,848)	$(11,598)	1,009,087
1982	47,216	(7,556)	(12,615)	1,076,450

As a result of these losses, PLE's working capital position deteriorated substantially over the 3 years ended 1984. As shown below, it reported a record high working capital deficit of $65.3 million for the 1984 year (000's omitted).

Year	Current assets	Current liabilities	Working capital deficit	Current ratio
1984	$25,865	$91,151	$(65,286)	0.28
1982	23,633	49,782	(26,149)	.47

Table 27 contains further information covering PLE's income statement, balance sheet, and selected key financial ratios for 1984 and 1983. Each of PLE's 1984 financial ratios compares unfavorably to both the industry average and the Eastern District average for the same period.

As a result of its weak financial condition, since July 1983, PLE generally made (i) no payments of either principal or interest on its borrowings and (ii) no payments that were required under its operating leases.

PLE's ability to continue as an operating entity was due to the successful restructuring of its obligations in May 1985. The liquidity and solvency status of PLE was particularly affected by this restructuring. Liquidity is the ability to meet maturing obligations and solvency is the ability to service long-term debt, both interest payments and payments of maturing debt.

PLE has signed an agreement with its creditors to restructure "nearly $159 million in secured debt and equipment lease obligations". Certificates of Interest and Cumulative Preferred Stock represent certain defined payments. Interest on the Certificates will be at 10 percent; no interest payments will be made until after June 30, 1985. If the 1989 maturity date is extended until 1992, the interest rate will be adjusted upward according to a set formula. The Cumulative Preferred Stock will bear interest at a rate of 10 percent; redemption payments will begin on December 31, 1996, with the final payment being made on September 30, 2006.

Under the restructuring agreement, there will be 4 basic types of payments until at least 1989, and aggregate cumulative payments from 1986 to 1989. The 4 basic types of payments are:

1. Minimum Required Payments:

The annual payments, an absolute requirement, vary from about $7.3 million in 1985 to about $8.3 million in 1989.

2. Adjusted Cash Flow Levels:

These payments are equal to a certain percentage of PLE's adjusted cash flow.

3. Sale of Assets:

When any assets are sold, the proceeds are credited to an escrow account and may be used by PLE for authorized purposes. Based on a formula, payments may be made to the creditors beginning on January 31, 1986.

4. If at the end of any fiscal quarter, the cash and short term investments exceed $5 million, PLE must pay the excess to the creditors' trustee. If it succeeds in acquiring the additional lines, PLE intends to seek authority to increase this amount to $8 million; its financial exhibits reflect this higher amount.

Although the amounts of three of the four basic types of payments are variable, PLE is required to pay certain aggregate cumulative sums by the end of each fiscal year. These payments, which include principal and interest, are as follows:

Year ended Sept. 30:	Aggregate cumulative payments
1986	$30,000,000
1987	55,000,000
1989	110,000,000

With its debt restructured, PLE states that it is presently a viable railroad, "but further declines in heavy industry within its existing service area pose a serious threat to future viability unless it can reach new markets." PLE further indicates that the NS line divestitures "will enable it to become a stronger railroad."

3. Future Viability:

PLE's plan proposes that a third party acquire the divested lines and related maintenance of way equipment. Also, the total cost of rehabilitation of the divested lines will be funded by this third party. These expenditures are expected to approximate $30 million. PLE, in turn, will lease the improved assets from the third party over a ten or fifteen year period with annual lease payments beginning at $3.5 million in 1986, and rising to $4.0 million in the balance of the four outlook years. These estimates are reflected in the projected Income Statement, Table 28, infra, under the operating expense category "Lease of Facilities."

As shown in Table 28 [21] PLE expects a turnaround in 1986, projecting a net income of $2.2 million as compared to a net loss of $11.6 in 1984, the latest full year available. For the remainder of the four outlook years, net income is expected to show a continual gain, jumping from about $8.5 million in 1987 to $23.7 in 1990. To accomplish this total revenue is projected to climb to about $111 million in 1986 under the total expanded system and to about $144 million in 1990. Equipment rental revenue and freight revenue are both expected to show steady growth.

In contrast to the 1984 operating ratio of about 108 percent, PLE asserts that it will achieve an 85 percent operating ratio in 1986. The remainder of the four outlook years is expected to show a decline to about 81 percent in 1987 and about 72 percent in 1990.

In 1986, a cash flow of about $4.2 million is projected. For the remainder of the four years in the outlook, the cash outlays are expected to match the cash sources as shown in Table 29.

[1] The debt service figure includes payments due under the debt restructuring agreement as well as payments due to PLECO and the Beloit Corp., PLECO's largest shareholder. However, by letter filed Agust 23, 1985, PLE indicated that its $16 million indebtedness to PLECO and Beloit has been reclassified as equity pursuant to an agreement dated July 31, 1985. The impact of this change is discussed later.

The cash flow from rail operations is insufficient to meet capital expenditures and debt service. This shortfall, which PLE intends to make up through non-rail activity (sale of assets and dividends from subsidiaries), is a significant weakness in PLE's projections. Long-term performance, therefore, can be jeopordized. Table 30, shows the negative impact on cash flow if non-rail activity was excluded.

PLE's cash deficits from rail operations would be $2.8 million in 1986. In 1987 it would increase to about $5.9 million, and it would remain at approximately this level until 1990, at which time the deficit would drop to $2.3 million.

PLE's outstanding debt at the end of December 1990 is expected to total $64.6 million, an obligation that would have to be extended until at least 1992 at higher interest rates.

The format of the funds flow statement appears to indicate that, due to the addback of the total interest expense to net income in each year, there is no plan to make these expense payments to the creditors. Under the debt restructuring agreement, if any interest payments are deferred, additional preferred stock is issued. However, further information obtained from PLE disclosed that the amounts in debt service apply to both principal and interest expense on the debt. Since net cash flow in each year would remain unchanged, this statement was not adjusted for the proper classifications. Table 31 identifies the amounts in the debt service payments that apply to principal and to interest expense.

In reviewing this Table, it must be noted that PLE shows total debt service payments in 1986 of approximately $17 million, yet as noted above, its restructuring agreement calls for an aggregate cumulative payment of $30 million by the end of FY 1986. This apparent discrepancy is explained by PLE's projected payments of approximately $21 million by the close of FY 1985.

Based on the financial and operating projections by PLE, ratios were developed that appear to be most critical to PLE's particular circumstances. As shown in Table 32, the financial ratios were compared to two "benchmarks", namely (a) the Commission's or Industry's guidelines, and (b) the average ratio on returns for the railroads in the Eastern District for 1984 (the 1984 Eastern District average is considered acceptable to compare to the outlook years because the ratios do not undergo significant annual changes).

[2] PLE's Preferred Stock was treated as equity. However, preferred stock bearing a redemption schedule such as PLE's can be classified as debt rather than equity. If this was done here, PLE's capital structure ratio would be even more unfavorable.

The capital structure ratio projected for PLE clearly shows that its debt financing is unusually high in relation to equity, leaving no capacity to incure additional debt in the event of unexpected cash needs due to such events as a downturn in the economy. As another example, PLE shows no ability to pay for the additional $1.1 million in rehabilitation costs to make the new system operational.[22] Also, two other measures underscore the weaknesses in the debt-related areas. The projected fixed charge coverage discloses that initially PLE would have limited ability to make interest payments on its outstanding debt. The projected throw off to debt ratio shows that the carrier can expect to have marginal ability to generate cash flow (net income plus depreciation minus dividend income from affiliated companies) to repay principal on long-term debt that matures during a given year.

On the other hand, the operating ratios projected by PLE would be more favorable than the average ratio for the Eastern District in 1984. However, under the alternate case, which is discussed below, the Eastern's District's average were substituted for the ones forcasted by PLE.

The evaluations of PLE's projections covered the following areas:

1. A review of the findings from PLE operating and traffic data, and the comments from the other railroads such as Conrail, CSX, and GTW;

2. Cost trends and efficiency trends for PLE were developed to evaluate PLE's operating expense projection;

3. Cost comparisons were made between PLE and other carriers;

4. Cost relationships were made to PLE's production measures; and

5. A critical evaluation of PLE's assumptions regarding its projected sources and uses of funds, particularly its cash flow projections, its capital improvement needs, and its debt installments.

The results of the analysis follow.

PLE acknowledges that its operations are labor intensive and subject to short hauls. Labor expense may account for about 50 percent of the average railroad's total operating expenses. Table 33 shows that the ratio of PLE's labor costs (exclusive of fringe benefits), as a percent of operating revenues, ranged from 85 percent in 1982 to a lower 65 percent in 1984.

TABLE 33.—PLE EFFICIENCY RATIOS

Labor ratio (excludes fringe benefits) [5] (percent)	85.1	75.1	64.9

[1] Gross ton-miles/freight train hour—This efficiency ratio is an excellent measure of overall transportation productivity as the ratio reflects train volume and speed, that is, the productivity of the train for every hour of service.

[2] Gross ton-miles/man-hours of employment—This efficiency ratio is a key statistic for measuring the productivity of railroad labor.

[3] Gross ton-miles/Transportation Department man-hours—This efficiency ratio measures the labor productivity within the Transportation Department.

[4] Gross ton-miles/track mile—One of the measures of operating density, the utilization a railroad makes of plant.

[5] Labor ratio—This ratio, expressed as a percentage of revenues, represents the wages charged to operating expenses. The ratio does not include fringe benefits.

Partly as a result, the railroad's operating ratio showed the same trend during this period, ranging from about 126 percent in 1982 to about 108 percent in 1984. By way of contrast, (a) in 1984, Conrail's comparable 35 percent labor ratio produced a favorable operating ratio of 86.5 percent and (b) in 1983, the industry averaged a labor ratio of about 39 percent. Notwithstanding its higher labor ratio, PLE still contends that, in all five outlook years, its operating ratio will fall below the 1984 industry average of 87.7 percent.

To further assess the impact of PLE's labor expense levels, transportation expenses, a category that contains the highest dollar amount (about 45 percent) of the total operating expenses, and contains mostly labor and fuel charges, was examined. As shown in Table 34 during the three years ending 1984, the transportation ratio (expenses as a percent of operating revenue) declined from 59 percent to about 52 percent.

TABLE 34.—ANALYSIS OF TRANSPORTATION EXPENSES HISTORICAL AND PROJECTED BY PLE

Historical			1982	1983	1984

Transportation expenses	$35,845	$36,839	$38,792	$41,187	$42,735
Percent of operating revenues	40.1	37.9	36.8	37.5	37.2

Notwithstanding this favorable trend, the ratios compare unfavorably to other railroads. In 1984, two efficient railroads in the Eastern District, Norfolk and Western Railway Company (N&W) and Conrail, reported more favorable ratios of 43.9 percent and 40.9 percent, respectively. In its projection, PLE expects to achieve a transportation ratio of about 40 percent in 1986, further dropping to about 37 percent in the balance of the four outlook years. In comparison to its recent past performance, its labor expense levels, and the ratios of other efficient railroads, PLE's projected transportation ratio appears overly optimistic.

Also, while PLE may be able to achieve some productivity improvements on the somewhat longer hauls under its newly acquired lines, these savings may be offset by the low operating density, and the lower rated traffic on the new lines. As shown in Table 33, supra, key efficiency measures for 1984 disclosed that PLE experienced a decline in productivity relative to 1983.[23] This does not necessarily denote a clearly unfavorable trend since the 1983 efficiency measures showed a gain over 1982.[24]

On the basis of the foregoing rationale, an alternate case was developed. The latest 1984 operating ratio (87.3 percent) experienced by the Eastern District railroads was applied to the gross revenue projection estimated for 1986 by PLE. The Eastern District's ratio is principally shaped by the two largest carriers, the N&W and Conrail; and it is significant to note that both carriers achieved highly efficient operations in 1984. For the balance of the four outlook years, a drop of one percent annually was assumed, a trend not as favorable as that forecasted by PLE. Therefore, the operating ratio would drop from about 87 percent in 1986 to about 83 percent in 1990.

Under this case, Table 35, PLE may achieve slightly more than a break even status in 1986 and realize profits ranging from $3.1 million to $10.7 million in the four other outlook years.

However, as shown in Table 36, PLE would fail the critical funds flow test, as a negative cash flow would be sustained in each of the last four years ranging from $5.3 million in 1987 to $14 million in 1990.

Cash flow positive (negative)	3,102	(5,354)	(8,949)	(10,644)	(13,999)

It must also be noted that all of these analyses accept PLE's projections of system wide traffic growth throughout the five year period. PLE failed to support its assumption of economic growth in its service area, and it is difficult to accept such an assumption in light of a recent history of recessions and business declines. Consideration of such economic realities would further undermine PLE's shaky financial position.

4. PLE's August 23, 1985 Revision

On August 23, 1985 PLE submitted additional revisions modifying the projections relied on in this analysis. As discussed below, the revisions are relatively minor and do not affect the findings and conclusions contained in this analysis.

The revisions do indicate, in certain instances, some improvement in the relevant debt-related measures. As an example, PLE's capital structure ratio improves as follows:

[In percent]

Year	Table 32	Revised figure
1986	84.0	76.0
1988	72.8	64.3

Even this improvement, however, compares highly unfavorably with the "bench marks" which reflect a 40 percent ratio for the Commission or Industry Guidelines and a 24 percent ratio for the Eastern District. Accordingly, it is proper to conclude that PLE still faces unusually high debt levels and a continued weakness in its ability to make principal and interest payments.

PLE's revised net income projections are only slightly higher, on an overall basis, than the projections in Table 28, supra. Below is a comparison of the differences in net income figures (000's omitted).

[In thousands]

Year	Table 28	August 23, 1985 revision	Variable
1986	$2,207	$2,434	$227
1987	8,499	8,877	378
1988	14,729	15,007	278
1989	18,814	19,006	192
1990	23,734	23,902	168

The latest revision reflects slightly lower revenues that are more than offset by lower operating and miscellaneous (interest) expenses.

In Table 35, PLE's operating expenses were adjusted on the basis of Eastern District operating ratios. The resulting net income projections were referred to as the alternate case. Using PLE's revised data, but also the Eastern District operating ratio, the net income projections for each year except 1986 would increase by about $1 million. The 1986 net income, which was very low to begin with, would increase by about $1.4 million.

PLE also presented data which changes its balance sheet and funds flow projections. As of July 31, 1985, PLE entered into an agreement with PLECO which capitalized PLE's indebtedness to PLECO and Beloit. Under this agreement, over $16 million of long-term debt is moved to the equity portion of the balance sheet. As a result, interest expense estimates were lowered resulting in the higher net income on the income statement discussed above. PLE reported no change to its cash flow in the funds flow statement.

4. Conclusions

PLE has been in poor financial condition since 1982. Recent improvements in operating efficiency and a massive debt restructuring agreement will undoubtedly help PLE to continue in business.

However, PLE is not, and will not for the near future, be able to operate its expanded system and service its debt. PLE admits that it is dependent on the sale of non-rail assets and the income from non-rail properties to stay in business. PLE would have a substantial negative cash flow at least through 1990 without the income from its non-rail assets. Its unusually high debt levels leave no capacity to incur additional debt for cash emergency needs. PLE's financial weakness is further underscored by examining both its projected fixed charge coverage and projected throw off to debt ratio. These ratios indicate PLE's limited ability to make principle and interest payments.

Moreover, PLE's situation is even bleaker because it makes assumptions about the near-term economy and its operating efficiencies that are without support. PLE has not allowed for any economic downturns during the next five years. Thus, the marginal position revealed by its projections is subject to significant change if a recession occurs.

Similarly, if PLE is unable to meet its highly optimistic operating ratio and instead improves substantially but only to the Eastern District railroad average, its ability to finance debt is even weaker. Without substantial income from non-rail assets, PLE could not remail in business.

In conclusion, PLE is not now, and will not in the future, be a viable railroad. Only with substantial reliance on non-rail assets can PLE remain in business.

PLE will acquire overhead trackage rights over the following lines:

1. NS's Cherry Street Line at Toledo, OH from connections with: (1) the GTW at Lang Yard; (2) the Toledo Terminal Railroad's North Yard at Manhattan Blvd.; (3) the Ann Arbor Railroad (the Michigan Interstate Ry.) at Ottawa Yard, all in the vicinity of MP 2.0, then from the vicinity of MP 2.0 across the W&LE Maumee River Bridge to the vicinity of Ironville, OH (MP 3.7) and over NS's Toledo District from Ironville (MP 5.35) to Yeomans, OH (MP 54.6).

2. Conrail's E&A Branch through and from Graham (MP 60.7) to and through a connection with Conrail's PY&A Secondary Track at Detour (MP 75.6) [including the right to reactivate and/or construct a connection from the west end of the former Lake Erie & Eastern Line at Girard, OH (MP 8.4) to Conrail's E&A Branch at Girard Junction, OH (MP 69.8)], over Conrail's PY&A Secondary Track from Detour to MP 79.45 to construct a connection to Conrail's Pymatuning Main Line (also known as Conrail's Cleveland-Pymatuning Main Line), and Conrail's Pymatuning Main Line from Warren, OH (MP 53.8) to Levittsburg, OH (MP 49.2) and through SN Junction to Conrail's Freedom Secondary Track (also known as Conrail's Meadville Main Line from MP 168.4 as far as MP 170), and Conrail's Freedom Secondary Track from Levittsburg (SN Junction) (MP 164.8) to Kent, OH (MP 192.5) to use and/or construct connection(s) at Kent, OH for access to NS's Canton District Cleveland-Canton Line.

3. Conrail Weirton Secondary (also known as Conrail's Pittsburgh-Columbus Main Line) Track from MP 49.4 to and including a connection with Conrail's Powhatan Secondary track via the west leg of the Y at or in the vicinity of MP 20.6 at Mingo Junction (Weirton Secondary MP 46.7) and the right to create a connection hear MP 48 on Conrail's Weirton Secondary Track between that track and NS's Connellsville District Line at or near MP 92.2, and NS's Powhatan Secondary from MP 20.6 to MP 23.

4. Conrail's Weirton Secondary Track (also known as Scully Branch and/or Pittsburgh-Columbus Main Line) from Duff Junction (Scully Branch MP 3.0) to Char (also known as Lewis Run Junction) (Scully Branch MP 6.3) and over a connection with Conrail's 105 Secondary Track from Char (Lewis Run Junction) (MP-0.1) to Carnegie, PA at or near Broadway (MP 1.92), and PC&Y from its junction with the PLE and McKees Rocks (PC&Y MP 0.5) to Carnegie, PA (MP 7.0) (Broadway) and a connection with Conrail's 105 Secondary Track. In connection with operation over PC&Y properties, the agreement shall provide that PLE road trains have priority over yard movements consistent with customary trackage rights provisions.

[8] A discussion of possible port impacts was included in response to a letter from the Honorable Barbara A. Mikulski, a member of the Subcommittee, dated April 11, 1985, (attached as Appendix D).
[9] NS, Guilford, and Conrail each submitted different mileage estimates. The estimate used in this study is based on the contract terms, and to resolve doubt, the track charts and applicable portions of the verified statements were referred to. The specific description of the lines is set forth in Appendix P.
[10] The designation 70/70 indicates that both passenger and freight trains have 70 m.p.h. speed limits. The designation 60/50 means that passenger trains can travel at 60 m.p.h. but freight trains have a maximum permissible speed of 50 m.p.h.
[11] Guilford has stated that it intends to pay an outside contractor to operate the yard and does not intend to do any rehabilitation work to the yard on its own.
[12] The designation 79/70/50 indicates that the speed limit is 79 m.p.h. for passenger trains, 70 m.p.h. for TOFC trains, and 50 m.p.h. for freight trains.
[15] Conrail's statement of July 26, 1985, appears to be in error, showing 32-½ hours of transit time as dock-to-dock time.
[16] This train is delivered directly to the Burlington Northern Railroad Company (BN) at 23rd Street Yard on arrival. The use of terminal services of switching and delivery to connecting lines by Terminal Railroad Association of St. Louis (TRRA) is avoided by the direct connection.
[17] There is some confusion in the record as to what is the current and projected FRA Class for this line. Although Guilford states it wants the line to be at FRA Class 3, its operating plan and maintenance schedules call for maximum speed of 25 m.p.h. This speed is the maximum for FRA Class 2, FRA Class 3 permits 40 m.p.h. It is not clear as to why Guilford would upgrade a line to FRA Class 3, and then restrict the speed to 25 m.p.h. Accordingly, the analysis reflects the level of rehabilitation thought necessary to meet the Guilford operating plan.
[19] NS, PLE, and Conrail each submitted differing estimates; however the PLE mileage was computed in the same manner as in the case of Guilford. The specific descriptions of the lines are set forth in Appendix Q.
[20] There is also the possibility of an optional connection near Mingo Junction. Only Conrail presented costs for this possible connection. This future connection at Mingo Junction has not been considered in this analysis.
[21] It must be noted that PLE submitted numerous revisions of all of its financial statements, the most recent being filed August 23, 1985. In order to complete this study in a timely fashion, the third set of revisions, which were dated August 1, 1985, and filed on August 5, 1985, were relied on. The later revisions were basically de minimis, thus the conclusions are not affected by the inability to analyze this late-filed data.
[22] The additional rehabilitation cost was not considered in any of the financial exhibits. Since this additional cost would further burden PLE's cash flow, the failure to consider it is to PLE's benefit.
[23] The following ratios showed declines between 1983 and 1984: gross ton-miles per freight train hour; gross ton-miles per man-hours of employment; gross ton-miles per transportation, department man-hours; and gross ton-miles per track mile.
[24] Estimated production and operating measures, such as revenue ton-miles, train hours, and employment levels, were not submitted by PLE. An analysis of the causal relationship of operating expenses to production measures would have allowed for another approach to evaluate PLE's contention of sharp improvements in its operating ratios over the outlook years.

Study of the Viability of Guilford Transportation Industries, Inc. and Pittsburgh and Lake Erie Railroad Co., Before and After the Line Divestitures Suggested by the Department of Justice as a Condition to the Acquistion of the Consolidated Rail Corp. by Norfolk Southern Corp.

(Prepared by staff of the Interstate Commerce Commission that was detailed to the Subcommittee on Commerce, Transportation and Tourism, August 30, 1985)

I. INTRODUCTION

A. Background.—On March 27, 1985, the Honorable James J. Florio, Chairman of the Subcommittee on Commerce, Transportation, and Tourism of the Committee on Energy and Commerce of the United States House of Representatives (Subcommittee), requested that the Interstate Commerce Commission (Commission) assist the Subcommittee in analyzing certain aspects of the recommendation by the United States Department of Transportation (DOT) that Consolidated Rail Corporation (Conrail) be sold to Norfolk Southern Corporation (NS).[1] Specifically, the Commission was asked to analyze: (1) the impact consolidation would have on other carriers in terms of traffic diversion; and (2) the viability of two eastern carriers, Guilford Transportation Industries, Inc., Rail Division (Guilford) and the Pittsburgh and Lake Erie Railroad Company (PLE), which had entered into divestiture agreements with NS as a result of certain competitive concerns raised by the United States Department of Justice (DOJ) to the NS-Conrail consolidation.

Based on Chairman Florio's request, a notice was published in the Federal Register on May 10, 1985, indicating that the Commission would prepare an analysis of the issues raised and setting a procedural schedule for receipt of evidence.[2] On May 29, 1985, Chairman Florio requested a modification in the manner in which the study was to be conducted.[3] Under Chairman Florio's modified request, the Commission's role in the study was to be terminated once the information gathering process was completed. At that time, appropriate Commission staff were to be detailed to the Subcommittee to assist in analyzing the evidence presented. A notice was published in the Federal Register on June 18, 1985, indicating the modification of the study procedures.[4]

Opening statements, replies, and final arguments were submitted by a number of States, railroads, and other interested parties.[5] The official filing period closed on June 19, 1985, and the Commission's participation in the study was terminated at that time. The staff completed and submitted to the Subcommittee that portion of the study concerning traffic diversion on August 2, 1985.[6]

However, by letter dated July 26, 1985, the staff had informed Chairman Florio that, because of delays in receiving certain information, the viability portion of the study would not be completed by August 2nd.[7] That analysis, which was to be completed on or before August 30, 1985, is the subject of this report.

In preparing this report the staff found it necessary to request additional data from many of the parties. This information was not served on other parties and was made available solely to the Commission staff detailed to the Subcommittee.

Empirical data such as track charts, traffic density charts, and time tables were submitted by NS and Conrail. Two other carrier participants, CSX Corporation (CSX) and Grand Trunk Western Railroad Company (GTW), also submitted traffic density charts.

More significantly, Guilford and PLE were asked to submit substantial data supporting their earlier statements. In the case of Guilford, the staff requested specific underlying data supporting the generalized statements in its unverified submission dated June 30, 1985, and filed July 10, 1985. The data dealth with Guilford's traffic analysis, rehabilitation plan, cost and revenue projections, and overall financial assumptions. The underlying data generally reflected the statements in the record. No party had an opportunity to review or respond to this data.

Although PLE had submitted more detailed information than Guilford before the June 19th deadline, much of the additional data PLE submitted showed revised projections. PLE submitted numerous revisions of its financial statements and also revised its traffic analysis to reflect additional revenues. PLE also supplied data supporting its rehabilitation analysis. No party had an opportunity to review or respond to this data.

In analyzing the viability of Guilford and PLE, the staff relied heavily on this new data, since the staff's role was that of an expert consultant, not a decision-maker in an adversary proceeding. The staff expertise, gained from years of analyzing various railroad consolidation proposals, enabled it to consider this data without the benefit of rebuttal from other interested parties.

Accordingly, the discussion that follows is based primarily on staff analysis of the supplemental supporting data. Thus, many of the points raised by carriers objecting to the proposal are no longer relevant and they are not discussed.

B. Purpose of The Study.—Chairman Florio requested an analysis of two specific aspects of the proposed sale of Conrail to NS. The first purpose, addressed in the study completed August 2nd, was to estimate the likely traffic diversion from other rail carriers as a result of the proposed combination. That study analyzed diversion to the new CS-Conrail system and to Guilford and PLE as a result of their acquisition of certain Conrail and NS lines. To the extent possible, the diversion estimates were analyzed by carrier, origin-destination corridor, commodity, and pre-diversion and post-diversion routing.[8]

The second purpose of the study, addressed in this report, was to analyze the viability of Guilford and PLE today and after they acquired certain lines that DOJ found must be divested by Conrail and NS in order to avoid certain anticompetitive ramifications of the sale. In this report, the staff analyzes the current financial viability of Guilford and PLE, their ability to finance the proposed acquisitions, and their projected viability under the divestiture proposal.

The question of whether Guilford and PLE will be able to provide shippers with a long-term, viable, competitive alternative to NS-Conrail that will act as a restraint on any possible abuse of market power by NS-Conrail, is beyond the scope of this report and will not be addressed. The issue of competition is only relevant to the discussion of whether Guilford and/or PLE can compete with NS-Conrail for traffic moving between areas served by both Guilford and NS-Conrail and PLE and NS-Conrail. In conclusion, this report analyzes the ability of Guilford and PLE to acquire the lines, undertake any necessary rehabilitation or construction, physically operate trains over the divested lines, offer sufficiently competitive service to attract some level of traffic to the newly acquired lines, and remain financially viable while operating their newly expanded systems.

In keeping with this narrow focus, general allegations about the ultimate advisability of the sale of Conrail to NS were not considered. In addition, alternative plans, i.e. those raised by parties that called for divestiture of additional lines, granting of further trackage rights, additional conditions on the sale, etc., were not considered.

C. Identity of Participants—A number of comments were received both supporting and opposing the proposed divestitute plan. Statements and data in support of divestiture were filed by NS, Guilford, and PLE, all parties to the involved transactions.

Conrail, which NS seeks to purchase, opposes the divestiture plan. Two other eastern rail carriers, GTW and CSX, filed verified statements in opposition. In addition, comments expressing concern about the proposal were submitted by Consolidated Coal Company, Eastern Coal Transportation Conference, The Richmond, Fredericksburg and Potomac Railroad Company, the New York State Electric & Gas Corporation, The Attorney Generals of Ohio and Pennsylvania, and the Departments of Transportation of Iowa, Minnesota, New York, and Ohio.

II. SUMMARY OF CONCLUSIONS

A. The Guilford Proposal.—The Guilford post-divestiture proposal assumes that it will become a key competitor for traffic in the northeast and midwest. (Maps of the current and enlarged Guilford systems are attached as Appendixes R and S, respectively.) Guilford alleges that most of the acquired lines (the Western Extension) are in adequate condition for its proposed operations but that $63 million in rehabilitation is needed. Further, it contends that its operating plan will permit it to provide time-competitive service on trailer-on-flat-car (TOFC) traffic between Chicago, on the one hand, and the New York area and New England, on the other.

Guilford estimates that it will receive additional gross revenue of $161.3 million, less $11.7 million in revenue lost to the NS-Conrail operation. Guilford anticipates that TOFC traffic will account for $61.4 million. In addition to the increased revenue, Guilford foresees continually improving operating efficiencies, resulting in rapidly decreasing operating ratios.

Because these assumptions generally are without merit, Guilford's proposal will not result in a viable post-divestiture operation.

Guilford has underestimated its rehabilitation by only about 10 percent; however, even with the necessary rehabilitation, the carrier's operating facilities will be inferior to its chief competitor, NS-Conrail, in terms of both structure and circuity. Its operating plan does not take into account numerous operating difficulties, such as the lack of double-track line, poorly spaced sidings, and inefficient connections. Guilford also fails to consider how the movement of its trains to and from NS-Conrail lines will be afforded by the large volume of NS-Conrail traffic on those lines.

Because of the lack of comparable facilities, Guilford will not be able to maintain competitive schedules on the TOFC traffic at Chicago and, thus, will find it difficult to attract such traffic. Guilford also has failed to consider that, although it might benefit initially from some diversion of TOFC traffic, it will not be able to retain all of this traffic against the retaliatory efforts of its competitors. Thus, Guilford will not achieve the large traffic gain it projects, and its revenue gain is overstated by approximately $25 million.

Although the more realistic revenue gain will not prevent Guilford from operating at a profit, the defect in Guilford's proposal goes beyond revenue and expense. Guilford is a highly leveraged company and must generate sufficient cash flow to service its debt. Currently, Guilford is marginally viable, in that it is able to pay its annual fixed charges and, thus, service its debt. Guilford, however, will finance a portion of the acquisition, which will increase the debt to be serviced. Without the full amount of revenue it projects, Guilford will be perilously close to being able to meet all its annual fixed charges.

Further, Guilford has overestimated the operating efficiencies it will achieve, in view of the prior history of its component carriers and the nature of the operating efficiencies of other Eastern carriers. Consequently, its net revenue from operations will be substantially less then it projects, and the cash it has available to meet its debt servicing requirements will decrease. In fact, after a very marginal first year, Guilford will be unable to service its debt, and this deficiency will grow in each of the succeeding years.

In the long run it does not appear that Guilford will be a financially viable carrier.

B. The PLE Proposal.—PLE has submitted a reasonable plan for incorporating the lines to be acquired into its existing system. (Maps of the current and expanded PLE systems are attached as Appendixes T and U, respectively.) It appears likely that PLE can meet its proposed operating plan without spending substantially more than it estimated to upgrade the system. Similarly, it appears likely that PLE will be able to attract the local and regional traffic that it has projected.

However, PLE's financial forecasts are far more open to question. It must be noted that, even if all of PLE's projections are accepted, PLE admits that it cannot service all of its substantial debt using revenues from rail operations. Substantial income from the sale of, and use of, non-rail assets is needed to cover debt payments.

Even this finding is based on accepting two highly questionable PLE assumptions. First, PLE provides for no economic downturn in the regional economy over the next five years. Lower cash flows arising from any economic downturn could further impair PLE's solvency. Second, and of more importance, PLE's proposed operating ratios are highly optimistic. It is reasonable to assume that PLE will become more efficient with time and the integration of the new lines. However, it is not reasonable to assume, as did PLE, that it will change from a very inefficient carrier to one of the most efficient carriers in the Eastern District over the next five years.

Accordingly, an alternate analysis was performed assuming more realistic, yet still favorable, operating ratios for PLE. The result was that PLE would be marginally profitable on an operating basis but that it would not be able to meet its substantial obligations under its debt restructuring agreement.

In conclusion, PLE is not now a financially viable carrier and its acquisition of the new lines will not enable it to reverse its already precarious financial postion.

U.S. HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
COMMITTEE ON ENERGY AND COMMERCE,
Washington, DC, March 27, 1985.

Hon. REESE TAYLOR,
Chairman, Interstate Commerce Commission, Twelfth and Constitution Avenue, NW, Washington, DC.

DEAR CHAIRMAN TAYLOR: The recommendation by the Department of Transportation that Conrail should be sold to the Norfolk Southern has raised serious competitive and rail service issues. As a part of its analysis of the Secretary's recommendation, the Subcommittee will review with care the competitive and rail service issues. I would like the assistance of the ICC in analyzing certain aspects of the Secretary's recommendation.

Specifically I would like the ICC to provide the Subcommittee with its analysis of two aspects of the proposal. First, I would like estimates of traffic diversion from other rail carriers as a result of the proposed merger. To the extent possible, this information should be provided by carrier, origin-destination corridor, commodity, and pre-diversion and post-diversion routing.

Second, I would like an evaluation of the viability of the divestiture proposal. As you know, Norfolk Southern has agreed to divest certain lines to Guilford Transportation and the Pittsburgh and Lake Erie. I would like an analysis of the current financial viability of these carriers, their ability to finance the proposed acquisitions, their projected viability under the divestiture proposal, and their ability and resources to compete with a merged Conrail-Norfolk Southern.

Because the analyses will obviously rely on transportation and competition data, it is important that these analyses be conducted as part of an open process, inviting comments and information from interested parties and allowing parties to comment on information submitted by other parties. It is only through this type of process that a sound factual record can be developed.

I appreciate your cooperation with the Subcommittee and your assistance in evaluating this major transportation policy issue. I look forward to your report. Please let me know if I can be of assistance in helping you respond to this request.

Sincerely,

JAMES J. FLORIO,
Chairman, Subcommittee on Commerce, Transportation and Tourism.

APPENDIX D

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, DC, April 11, 1985.

Mr. REESE H. TAYLOR, Jr.,
Chairman, Interstate Commerce Commission, Washington, DC.

DEAR CHAIRMAN TAYLOR: Recently, Chairman James Florio of the Congressional Subcommittee on Commerce, Transportation and Tourism requested that the Interstate Commerce Commission (I.C.C.) conduct a study on the Conrail sale. I write in strong support of his request.

It is important that any analysis of the Conrail sale include a study of the impact that sale would have on affected ports. In particular, I would like to request that a Port Impact Study on the Port of Baltimore be made part of the overall study conducted by the Interstate Commerce Commission. Any sale of Conrail will have a significant impact on the Port of Baltimore. I believe that such a Port Impact Study would provide valuable information that would be very useful as we consider the sale of Conrail.

I appreciate your consideration of this request and I look forward to your response. Thanks again.

Sincerely,

BARBARA A. MIKULSKI,
Member of Congress.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, DC, April 30, 1985.

Mr. REESE H. TAYLOR, Jr.,
Chairman, Interstate Commerce Commission, Washington, DC.

DEAR CHAIRMAN TAYLOR: It is our understanding that a request has been made of the Interstate Commerce Commission to conduct an exhaustive analysis of the Secretary of Transportation's recommendation to sell the government's interest in Conrail to Norfolk Southern Corporation. This recommendation for sale, mandated by Congress in the Northeast Rail Service Act of 1981 (NERSA), is the product of an extensive selection process of a suitable purchaser for Conrail.

The request to the Commission asks for the commencement of a proceeding, which would entail the solicitation of information from "interested parties" and the opportunity for rebuttal submissions, on the traffic diversions that could result from the sale and on the financial and competitive viability of the carriers which will acquire lines to be divested as a condition of the sale imposed by the Department of Justice. It appears that this request is attempting to encourage the initiation of a proceeding similar to those rail merger proceedings undertaken by the Commission under 49 USC 11343 et seq., which provides for a time frame of over two years.

What is most troubling, however, is that this request totally ignores Congressional intent and the explicit legislative language of the Northeast Rail Service Act of 1981. Section 1142 of NERSA, codified as Section 408 of the Regional Rail Reorganization Act (3R Act), states in unequivocal terms:

(c) Review—No transfer of the Corporation's stock or rail properties and freight service responsibilities under this title shall be subject to judicial review or to review by the Commission.

Without doubt, the clear meaning of the statute as contemplated by Congress was that the Commission would not, and could not, play a role in reviewing or analyzing the Secretary's recommendation. This was a role to be played by Congress, as evidenced by the inclusion of legislative veto mechanisms, by which the recommendation was to be scrutinized whether Conrail was sold as an entity or in pieces. (See, Sections 401(a)(3) and 407(d) of the 3R Act.) In light of the Supreme Court's decision holding legislative veto unconstitutional and the need for substantive legislation to effectuate the sale. Congress will review the Secretary's recommendation and enact enabling legislation.

Moreover, the Secretary of Transportation, as part of her thorough negotiation process, asked the Department of Justice to review the competitive implications of a potential sale to Norfolk Southern Corporation. That extensive review led to divestiture requirements as a condition to such sale. Accordingly, the Department of Justice, as indicated in their January 29, 1985, letter to the Secretary, must review and approve any divestitures before the sale can be consummated. In fact, the Department of Justice specifically requires any carrier, which is to acquire the lines to be divested, to "demonstrate to the satisfaction of the Attorney General that it preserves the managerial, operational, and financial capability necessary to compete effectively and to remain a viable entity providing long-term rail service."

Review of this issue by the Interstate Commerce Commission would obviously be duplicative.

The Department of Justice also, as part of its analysis, examined the effect of the combined Norfolk Southern and Conrail entity on the regional carrier's ability to continue to compete effectively in the markets they currently serve. While definitive assessments of diversions were not calculated by the Department, given the general uncertainty and unreliability of such numbers, it did seek to identify and remedy the potential anticompetitive consequences of the merger through the divestiture requirements. Specifically, the divestitures are designed to provide regional carriers "friendly connections" that will enable them to continue to compete effectively in markets they now serve and to ensure competitive access to those markets.

Again, it appears that an independent Commission proceeding on this issue would be redundant and unnecessary.

For the above articulated reasons, we believe that the Commission does not have the legal authority, by virtue of the explicit statutory exclusion of Commission review incorporated in NERSA, to review the Conrail transaction. Moreover, it appears that such a review would be duplicative, unnecessary and an ill-advised expenditure of scarce resources.

JAMES T. BROYHILL,
Ranking Minority Member, Committee on Energy and Commerce, NORMAN F. LENT,

merce, Transportation, and Tourism.

APPENDIX F

INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION,
Washington, DC, May 7, 1985.

Hon. JAMES J. FLORIO,
Chairman, Subcommittee on Commerce, Transportation and Tourism, House Office Building, Washington, DC.

DEAR CHAIRMAN FLORIO: Thank you for your letter of March 27, 1985, requesting the Commission's analysis of certain aspects of the recommendation made by Secretary of Transportation Elizabeth H. Dole that the Consolidated Rail Corporation be sold to Norfolk Southern Corporation. You have asked that we provide your Subcommittee with our analysis of two aspects of the proposal.

First, you have asked us to estimate the traffic diversion from other carriers as a result of the proposed acquisition. More specifically, you have asked us to study the diversions by carrier, origin-destination corridor, commodity, and pre-diversion and post-diversion routing.

Second, you have asked us to evaluate the viability of the divestitures proposed by the Department of Justice, made part of the Secretary's proposal, and accepted by NS. The divestitures involve the transfer of certain lines to Guilford Transportation Industries, Inc. and the Pittsburgh and Lake Erie Railroad Company. You have asked the Commission to analyze the current financial viability of these carriers, their ability to finance the proposed acquisitions, their projected viability under the divestiture proposal, and their ability and resources to compete with a combined Conrail-NS.

In conducting these analyses, you have asked that they be part of an open process, inviting comments and information from interested parties, and allowing parties to comment on information submitted by other parties.

As you are aware, there is some controversy over whether the ICC has the authority to perform such an analysis. While it is clear that under the Northeast Rail Services Act the Conrail sale is not subject to the Commission's normal merger review, the limited technical assistance you have requested is advisory in nature, and therefore, responding to your request is not inconsistent with that Act. Further, the Commission has always endeavored, within the limits of its expertise and resources, to provide assistance to members of Congress when requested. Accordingly, we are undertaking the analysis as described in the enclosed Federal Register notice.

I understand that you are concerned that the analysis be conducted as expeditiously as possible so as to be useful to you in considering the Conrail sale proposal. Also, in view of the Commission's workload, limited resources, and unresolved budget crisis, the Commission cannot devote the amount of time and resources to the analysis that would approach the quality and degree of effort expended in major rail merger cases. However, the staff will make every effort to produce the best analysis possible by August 2, 1985.

Hopefully, our study will provide your Subcommittee with the information you are seeking, and if you have any questions about the project, please don't hesitate to let me know.

Sincerely,

REESE H. TAYLOR, Jr.,
Chairman.

OFFICE OF CHAIRMAN TAYLOR

STUDY OF ESTIMATED TRAFFIC DIVERSION AND VIABILITY OF THE DIVESTITURE PROPOSALS RESULTING FROM THE ACQUISITION OF THE CONSOLIDATED RAIL CORPORATION BY NORFOLK SOUTHERN CORPORATION

MAY 8, 1985.

Memorandum to Deputy Director Gitomer:

On May 7, 1985, in response to the requests for information and assistance received from Congressman Florio and Congresswoman Mikulski, the Commission voted to conduct a staff analysis of:

(1) the traffic that would be diverted from other railroads as a result of the sale of the Consolidated Rail Corporation (Conrail) to Norfolk Southern Corporation (NS);

(2) the viability of Guilford Transportation Industries, Inc. (GTI) and the Pittsburgh and Lake Erie Railroad Company (PLE) after they receive the track which the Department of Justice has said must be divested by Conrail and NS in order to avoid anticompetitive ramifications; and

This memorandum directs you to conduct the above-described analysis and to see that it is finished and transmitted to Congressman Florio by no later than August 2, 1985. You are authorized to use the resources that are necessary to complete the study, but in view of our still unresolved budget crisis, other important work of the agency that is statutorily required must be given priority.

As you know, the study is for the purpose of providing information to Congressman Florio in order to assist his Subcommittee in evaluating the Conrail sale. Accordingly, it is important that you confine your analysis to just the specific questions that have been asked by Congressman Florio and Congresswoman Mikulski. Given the present strain on our resources and the need to complete the study by August 2, 1985, all requests for additional information or assistance, beyond the two already received, will have to be respectfully declined.

Moreover, it is essential that the study not contain any "bottom-line" conclusions about any aspect of the sale. Those kinds of determinations are ones Congress will make itself in due course. The purpose of the analysis is simply to assist Congress in making the ultimate evaluation of the proposed transaction.

Finally, I cannot overemphasize the importance of making sure the study is completed on time. To meet the August 2nd deadline, no extensions can be allowed of the dates specified in the schedule adopted by the Commission.

Please keep me advised of the progress of the study.

REESE H. TAYLOR, Jr.,
Chairman.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION,
Washington, DC, May 9, 1985.

Hon. BARBARA A. MIKULSKI,
U.S. House of Representatives,
Washington, DC.

DEAR CONGRESSWOMAN MIKULSKI: Many thanks for your letter of April 11, 1985, expressing your strong support for Chairman Florio's request that the Commission analyze certain aspects of the proposed sale of Consolidated Rail Corporation to Norfolk Southern Corporation. You also asked that in responding to Chairman Florio's request, we analyze the impact of the sale on affected ports.

Yesterday, the Commission decided to conduct an expedited study designed to comply with the informational requests received from you and Chairman Florio. A copy of my letter advising Chairman Florio of our decision is enclosed herewith.

In order to make sure our analysis is conducted in the most expeditious manner possible, we have adopted a schedule that requires completion of the study by no later than August 2, 1985. The schedule itself is set forth in the enclosed Notice, which will be published in the Federal Register tomorrow.

Hopefully, our analysis will provide the information you are seeking, and if you have any questions about the project, please don't hesitate to let me know.

Enclosures.

Sincerely,

REESE H. TAYLOR, Jr.,
Chairman.

APPENDIX I

U.S. HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
COMMITTEE ON ENERGY AND COMMERCE,
Washington, DC, May 10, 1985.

Hon. REESE H. TAYLOR, Jr.,
Chairman, Interstate Commerce Commission,
Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: We are writing to express our concern about review of the sale of Conrail by the Commission.

It is imperative that the Congress be provided with timely information and analysis to determine whether the Secretary of Transportation's proposal and other alternatives for the sale of Conrail are in the public interest. At this stage of the process, however, we believe it is highly inappropriate for the Commission to commence a formal proceeding, however characterized, on this matter.

It is clear that opponents of a sale of Conrail will attempt to use the Commission as a forum for confusion and delay. Recognizing that any proposal for the sale of Conrail was likely to generate bitter controversy, the Congress expressly exempted the transfer of Conrail from Commission and judicial review in NERSA to avoid protracted consideration in multiple forums. Commencement of a proceeding by the Commission would frustrate this clearly expressed Congressional intent.

The Committee on Energy and Commerce will hold full hearings on the many complex issues associated with the sale of Conrail. All affected parties will be given fair opportunity to present their case in the course of the normal legislative process. Likewise, we would expect the Commission to furnish staff analysis and assistance to the Committee upon request.

The Congress will reach an informed decision after careful consideration of the merits of the various options. Commencement of a formal proceeding by the Commission would be unnecessary and counterproductive.

Sincerely,

JOHN D. DINGELL,
Chairman.

JAMES T. BROYHILL,
Ranking Minority Member.

APPENDIX J

INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION,
Washington, DC, May 14, 1985.

Hon. JOHN D. DINGELL,
Chairman, Committee on Energy and Commerce, U.S. House of Representatives, Washington, DC.

DEAR CHAIRMAN DINGELL: In response to your letter of May 10, 1985 about the staff analysis the Commission voted to undertake with regard to the Conrail-Norfolk Southern transaction, please be advised as follows:

1. The analysis will not constitute a review by the Commission nor will it entail the initiation of a formal proceeding. As pointed out in my May 7th letter to Chairman Florio, the analysis will be confined to the specific questions raised by him and Congresswoman Mikulski, and the information developed will be provided to Chairman Florio's Subcommittee in order to assist that body in evaluating certain specific aspects of the Conrail-Norfolk Southern transaction. A copy of my May 7th letter to Chairman Florio is enclosed herewith.

2. The analysis will be performed in accordance with an extemely tight procedural schedule, which calls for completion of the project and transmittal of the results by no later than August 2, 1985. The schedule and completion date adopted by the Commission are set out in the published Notice, a copy of which is also enclosed herewith.

3. To make certain that the staff analysis is conducted in the most expeditious manner possible, without subsequent broadening or postponed deadlines that might delay completion of the project past August 2nd, I have already transmitted an implementing memorandum to our staff. This memorandum, a copy of which is also enclosed, is designed to maintain the narrow scope of the analysis and make sure the project is finished on schedule, so that the information sought by Chairman Florio can be of timely assistance to his Subcommittee during that body's deliberations on the Conrail-Norfolk Southern proposal.

4. Although some have questioned the Commission's authority to conduct the staff study because of the language contained in Section 1142 of the Northeast Rail Service Act (NERSA), 45 U.S.C. 768(c), our General Counsel's Office has explicitly advised us that the staff study is not precluded by the foregoing statutory provision, and that as an arm of Congress, we are actually obliged to honor the request for assistance made by Chairman Florio. Copies of memoranda from our General Counsel's Office, dated May 3, 1985 and May 10, 1985, are also enclosed for your perusal.

Hopefully, the foregoing is fully responsive to your May 10th letter, but if you have any additional questions about the analysis our staff is going to undertake, please don't hesitate to let me know.

Sincerely,

REESE H. TAYLOR, Jr.,
Chairman.

APPENDIX K

SUBCOMMITTEE ON COMMERCE,
TRANSPORTATION, AND TOURISM,
Washington, DC, May 29, 1985.

Hon. REESE TAYLOR,
Chairman, Interstate Commerce Commission,
Washington, DC.

DEAR CHAIRMAN TAYLOR: I appreciate the Commission agreeing to undertake the study I requested on March 27, 1985 regarding the diversions that will result from the sale of Conrail to Norfolk Southern and the viability of the carriers acquiring the divested lines.

I am aware of some concern that has been expressed regarding the Commission's role in this study. While I believe the Commission's role is appropriate and proper under the Northeast Rail Service Act and other laws, I would propose a slight change in the Commission's study schedule. This change would respond to the concerns that have been expressed while fully meeting the needs of the Subcommittee.

I would suggest the Commission maintain its current schedule for information gathering, through June 19, 1985. At that point, I would suggest that the appropriate Commission staff be detailed to the Subcommittee for the analysis phase of the study.

The detailed ICC staff will complete the study for the Subcommittee using the information gathered prior to June 19, 1985. I believe this arrangement will meet the needs of the Subcommittee for information on diversions and financial viability.

Please let me know if this modification is acceptable to the Commission.

Sincerely,

JAMES J. FLORIO,
Chairman.

APPENDIX L

INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION

NOTICE—STUDY OF ESTIMATED TRAFFIC DIVERSION AND VIABILITY OF THE DIVESTITURE PROPOSALS RESULTING FROM THE ACQUISITION OF THE CONSOLIDATED RAIL CORPORATION BY NORFOLK SOUTHERN CORPORATION

Agency: Interstate Commerce Commission.

Action: Modification of notice of a study.

Summary: On May 29, 1985, the Honorable James J. Florio, Chairman of the Subcommittee on Commerce, Transportation, and Tourism of the Committee on Energy and Commerce of the United States House of Representatives, requested the Commission to change the manner in which the study is to be conducted. Under Chairman Florio's modified request, the Commission will continue to gather information through June 19, 1985, pursuant to the schedule published in the Federal Register on May 10, 1985. However, after submittal of the evidentiary presentations, the Commission's role with respect to this study will be complete. At that time, appropriate Commission staff will be detailed to the Subcommittee to assist that body in its analysis of the information gathered at the Commission. Accordingly, Item 6 of the prior Federal Register notice is modified to read as follows:

"6. At the conclusion of the evidentiary presentation on June 19, 1985, the Commission's role with respect to this study will be complete. At that time, appropriate Commission staff will be detailed to the Subcommittee to assist that body in its analysis of the record."

For further information contact: Louis E. Gitomer (202) 275-7245.

Dated: June 11, 1985.

By the Commission, Chairman Taylor, Vice Chairman Gradison, Commissioners Sterrett, Andre, Simmons, Lamboley and Strenio. Commissioner Lamboley concurred. Vice Chairman Gradison and Commissioner Strenio were present and did not participate. Commissioner Andre did not participate.

JAMES J. BAYNE,
Secretary.

APPENDIX M

INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION,
Washington, DC, July 26, 1985.

Hon. JAMES J. FLORIO,
Chairman, Subcommittee on Commerce, Transportation, and Tourism, House of Representatives, Washington, DC.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN FLORIO: This letter will bring you up-to-date on the status of the study being prepared by Commission personnel detailed to your Subcommittee concerning the Norfolk Southern Corporation's (NS) proposed acquisition of Consolidated Rail Corporation (Conrail).

At this time, ten analysts and attorneys have been detailed on an as needed basis to respond to the issues raised in your March 27, 1985 letter. Basically, the study will analyze (1) traffic that would be diverted from other carriers if NS acquires Conrail; and (2) the viability of Guilford Transportation Industries, Inc. (Guilford) and the Pittsburgh & Lake Erie Railroad Company (P&LE) after they receive certain lines from Conrail and NS.

The analysis of the evidence of traffic diversion will be completed by the August 2, 1985 target date. The portion of the report on this aspect of the study will be submitted by that date. However, this analysis may not include an analysis of diversion to, or from, Guilford or P&LE because of the late filings by these parties.

The viability analysis of Guilford and P&LE has been hampered because certain carriers did not submit the data requested in the Commission's May 10, 1985 notice in a timely fashion. Guilford submitted its first substantive information on July 10, 1985, and Guilford and P&LE will be submitting additional information soon. In light of these late filings and a two-week period for replies to Guilford's presentation, the staff will be unable to complete the viability analysis by August 2, 1985. However, it is our intention to submit this analysis to you before Congress returns from its August recess.

Sincerely,

LOUIS E. GITOMER,
Deputy Director, Rail Section.

*This chart does not reflect diversions to other carriers or NS's arguments regarding possible retaliation by affected carriers.

[4] This table, originally presented at page 6 of the "Report of Estimated Traffic Diversion Resulting from the Acquisition of the Consolidated Rail Corporation by Norfolk Southern Corporation," mistakenly listed GTW's 1984 gross revenue as $1,295,412. The correct figure is noted above. Chairman FLorio was informed of this error and the correct figure by letter dated Aug. 23, 1985.

[5] MIR's gross revenue figure is an approximate figure based on MIR's representations in its submission that it would lose all of its traffic.

APPENDIX

The following rail lines will be acquired by Guilford:

1. The line of NS's Pittsburgh Division, Buffalo and Cleveland Districts, from the end of NS's ownership in the vicinity of MP 1.5 in Buffalo, NY, to Beach Avenue in the vicinity of MP 189.2 in Lakewood, OH (not including the line of the former Fairport, Painesville, and Eastern Railway Company). Also NS's and Conrail's interests in Bison Yard, Buffalo, NY, with the exception of the automobile unloading facility, which will remain the property of NS.

2. The line of NS's Fort Wayne Division, Marion District, from the end of ownership at Douglas, OH, in the vicinity of MP 65.5, to the junction of its Marion and Frankfort Districts in Frankfort, IN, in the vicinity of MP 206.5, including NS's 50% interests in the West Marion Belt in Marion, IN.

3. The line of NS's Decatur Division, Charleston and Madison Districts, from the vicinity of MP 208.0 in Frankfort, IN, to a connection with the Terminal Railroad Association of St. Louis at Madison Yard, in Madison, IL, in the vicinity of MP 447.0. In addition, NS's Madison Yard in Madison, IL.

4. The line of NS's Indianapolis District, from a point north of Kokomo, IN in the vicinity of MP 58.0, to the end of NS ownership in Indianapolis, IN, in the vicinity of MP 2.1, including NS's Kokomo Belt in Kokomo, IN.

5. The line of Conrail's Youngstown and Chicago Divisions, from CP Crest at Crestline, OH to the junction with Conrail's Buffalo-Chicago mainline at CP 446 in Gary, IN. In addition, Conrail's Colehour Yard, in the vicinity of the Illinois-Indiana state line, (not to include Conrail's adjacent Buffalo-Chicago main lines, associated rights of way and facilities).

6. The line of Conrail's Toledo Division, Carrothers Branch, from the junction with NS's Scioto Division at Carrothers, OH (MP 27.1) to the vicinity of Andrus Road in Toledo, OH (MP 82.5). In addition, Conrail's "E" Yard in Toledo, OH less the Conrail main line(s) through "E" Yard.

7. The line of Conrail's Fort Wayne secondary track, from Adams, IN (MP 86.6) to Decatur, IN (MP 70.4).

8. The line of NS from a point opposite Conrail MP 14.1 (Knob) to a point opposite Conrail MP 11.8 (Cloggville) at a connection with NS's Cleveland District line in Cleveland, OH.

Guilford will acquire overhead trackage rights over the following lines:

1. The lines of the Conrail Clark Branch, Cleveland Division, and Cleveland-Indianapolis mainline, Columbus Division, from Clark Avenue in Cleveland, OH (MP 12.9) via Knob, Short and Berea, to a connection with the Crestline-Chicago line (MP 75.7) at CP Crest.

2. The Conrail Buffalo-Chicago mainline of the Toledo Division, from Berea, OH (MP 193.9) to Elyria Yard, OH (MP 204.6) and the line of the Conrail South Lorain Branch from Elyria Yard (MP 0.0) to South Lorain, OH (MP 6.8) to a connection with the Lake Terminal Railroad.

3. In the vicinity of Toledo, OH, over Conrail from the north end of the Conrail line described in Schedule A, Item 6, in the vicinity of Andrus Road (MP 82.5), to a connection to be constructed with NS's line known as the "Wheeling Belt" in the vicinity of Oak Street (MP 0.9), thence over the Wheeling Belt to a connection with NS's Cherry Street line west of Ironville Tower (near MP 5.0), thence over the Cherry Street line, over the Maumee River Bridge, to a connection with GTW south of Lang Yard (near MP 2.0). Also, over Conrail from the vicinity of Andrus Road (MP 82.1) to the vicinity of Conrail's "E" Yard (MP 3.5) in order to reach Guilford's tracks in "E" Yard.

4. The Conrail Pittsburgh-Chicago mainline of the Chicago Division, from CP 446 to a connection with Belt Railway of Chicago, in the vicinity of CP 445, South Chicago, IL.

5. The NS Scioto Division mainline from a connection with Conrail's Crestline, OH-Gary, IN line at MP 62.9 in Bucyrus, OH to a connection with Conrail's Toledo Division, Carrothers Branch at MP 76.6 in Carrothers, OH.

6. The NS Frankfort District line from the junction of its Marion and Frankfort Districts at MP 206.5 to MP 208.0, in Frankfort, IN.

7. NS's Huntington and New Castle Districts between Mike (Fort Wayne), IN (MP 146.0), via Hugo, IN (MP 149.2-184.1), and a connection with the present NS Marion District in Bluffton, IN (MP 162.6).

8. Conrail's Kokomo Secondary Track at Kokomo, IN from a connection with NS's Marion District (MP 159.1) to a connection with NS's Indianapolis District (MP 159.4).

9. Conrail's Susquehanna (Southern Tier) Main Line from Binghamton, NY at a connection with Guilford's existing trackage rights on Conrail's Susquehanna Main Line in the vicinity of "BD" Tower (MP 213.2) to the end of Conrail's ownership at Hillburn (Suffern), NY (MP 31.0), thence over The New Jersey Transit (NJT) Line to Ridgewood Junction, NJ, and over NJT's Bergen County Line to Conrail's Croxton Yard in Jersey City, NJ. NS's or an affiliate's obligations with respect to NJT trackage will be to exercise its best efforts to obtain the necessary trackage rights over NJT.

10. From a connection with Guilford's existing trackage rights on Conrail's Rockville-Buffalo Main Line at Rockville, PA (MP 109.9) via Conrail's Philadelphia-Pittsburgh Main Line to the end of Conrail ownership west of "Harris" (MP 105.2), thence via trackage rights to be obtained over Amtrak to a connection with Conrail's (former Reading) Philadelphia-Harrisburg Main Line at "Harris" (MP 104.8 on Philadelphia-Pittsburgh Main Line-MP 112.6 on Philadelphia-Harrisburg Main Line), thence over Conrail's Philadelphia-Harrisburg Main Line and west leg of the wye track to "Capital" (MP 0.0 of Conrail's Lurgan Branch), thence over the Lurgan Branch to connection with the B&O at Lurgan (Shippensburg); PA (MP 42.4). NS's or an affiliate's obligation with respect to Amtrak trackage will be to exercise its best efforts to obtain the necessary trackage rights over Amtrak.

APPENDIX P

The following rail lines will be aquired by PLE:

1. The line of NS's Canton District, from Cleveland, OH (MP 0.8) to Harmon, OH (MP 73.6).

2. The line of NS's Toledo and Wheeling Districts, from the west switch of the siding at Yeomans, OH (MP 54.6) to Pittsburgh Junction, OH (MP 183.4), including the former L&WV from its connection at Lake Junction (MP 0.0) to MP 1.5.

3. The line of NS's Wheeling District, Steubenville Branch, from Steubenville, OH (MP 13.2) via Mingo Junction, to Warrenton, OH (MP 0.0) and NS's Wheeling District, Main Line from Warrenton (MP 205.4) to Martins Ferry, OH (MP 213.2), including, to extent assignable, any NS rights to operate over Wheeling-Pittsburgh properties to Follansbee, WV.

4. The Chagrin Falls Branch of NS's Canton District (MP 0.0 to MP 8.15).

5. The Carrollton Branch of NS's Canton District (MP 0.0 to MP 27.72).

6. The Minerva Branch of NS's Canton District (MP 0.0 to MP 3.0).

7. The Massillon Branch of NS's Toledo District from Orrville Junction (MP 0.0) to (MP 1.4) and from Dalton, OH (MP 7.024) to Run Jct., OH (MP 22.1).

8. The line of NS's Canton District, Cleveland Belt Line, from MP 0.0 (Belt Line Junction) to MP 5.42 (Knob) in Cleveland, (OH).

9. The Canton Belt Line of NS's Canton District from MP 0.0 to MP 3.74 in Canton, OH including all of NS's rights to serve the LTV facility located at Canton, OH as well as any rights NS may have to use Conrail's Canton Yard.

10. The line of NS's Zanesville District from a connection with the Wheeling District at Harmon, OH (MP 73.6) to Zanesville, OH (MP 144.1), including NS's 50% share in the branch to Peabody Coal at Arnold (Trinway) (MP 0.8 to MP 7.2), as well as, the Zanesville Belt Line from MP 0.0 to MP 3.1 in Zanesville, OH if the Zanesville Belt is not abandoned as of the Closing Date.

11. Conrail's 105 Secondary Track from a connection with the PC&Y at Carnegie, PA (MP 1.92) to a connection with Conrail's Washington Secondary Line (MP 2.5), Conrail's Washington Secondary Line from Carnegie, PA (MP 0.1) to Bridgeville, PA (MP 3.9), and Conrail's Bridgeville-McDonald Industrial Track from its point of connection with Conrail's Washington Secondary Track at Bridgeville, PA for a distance of 1.5 miles and permit a new connection with the line of NS's Connellsville District in the vicinity of Bridgeville, PA (MP 61.3).

12. The line of NS's Huron Branch of NS's Toledo District from Huron Jct. OH (MP 0.3) to Milan, OH (MP 5.5).

Mr. SPECTER. Thank you, Mr. President.

I now wish to turn again very briefly to a very substantial study which has been conducted by R.L. Banks & Associates, Inc., at the request of the U.S. Department of Justice.

At this juncture, Mr. President, it is important to note that there have been three divestiture plans submitted in efforts made by Norfolk Southern to have sufficient divestiture to satisfy the Department of Justice. The first two were rejected by the Department of Justice. Subsequently, there has been what is called a preliminary approval given by the Department of Justice on November 21, which I shall come to, which the Senator believes was very hasty, ill advised, and unfounded on any basis of the record.

The important point in referring to the R.L. Banks & Associates, Inc., report is that the consultants selected by the Department of Justice found the divestiture totally insufficient. That consultant has been discharged by the Department of Justice. The Department of Justice has made the concession that it does not have the expertise to deal with this subject inhouse, but notwithstanding the Department of Justice's concession to that effect, and after having discharged the R.L. Banks & Associates, Inc., consultants, the Department of Justice has given what is called preliminary approval to the third effort at divestiture.

The Department of Justice made this concession, Mr. President, and in these terms: It "* * * does not have in-house expertise to evaluate technical and operational aspects of any proposed divestitures."

It was for that reason that the Department of Justice retained R.L. Banks & Associates, which filed an expansive report on September 13, 1985, detailing its analysis of the proposed divestitures to Guilford and Pittsburgh & Lake Erie.

At page 13 of the summary, these are the conclusions of the Banks consultants' report as to Guilford:

The analysis suggested that GTI's—

referring to Guilford—viability would be dependent heavily upon the realization of several optimistic assumptions, and that even under the most favorable circumstances GTI's continued existence would be parlous—which is a synonym for perilous.

The Banks' report goes on, page 14 to say:

Coupled with projected poor liquidity, GTI would be hard pressed to maintain the quality of service and competitive thrust projected by its marketing and operating plans.

The long term success of the carrier is contingent upon the accuracy of the marketing and operating plans. Substantial revenues from new business (particularly highly-rated, non-time sensitive TOFC traffic) would have to be realized, operational efficiency, as reflected in per-carload expenses would have to improve significantly and rehabilitation costs would have to be constrained to very low levels. Doubts about the realism of the marketing and operating plans apply equally to the financial statements; the very real possibility that GTI would fail to realize projected gains in revenues and efficiency leads to the conclusion that the survival of an expanded GTI system is yet to be proven.

The Banks' report continues at page 15 summarizing other reasons why the GTI proposal simply stated could not succeed.

The Banks' evaluation then proceeded to the proposed divestiture to Pittsburgh & Lake Erie. At page 20, in very summary form, it states as follows:

This review of NS's proposed divestiture to P&LE has been severely hampered by the absence of detailed information concerning P&LE's business plan for the acquisition. The information defects are documented in Appendix A. Once that information (including a sound Business Plan for the P&LE) is made available, detailed engineering, operating, marketing and financial analyses are required to establish a basis for evaluating the plan. This review of available information identified numerous problem areas which are detailed in the text. Significant among these is a three-fold difference between P&LE's diversion estimates and those of NS's. Most significant, however, is the review of available financial data for the P&LE which raises serious concern as to whether a Business Plan and financing agreement can be developed that would allow an affirmative finding with respect to the likely long-term viability of the P&LE.

Mr. President, at this point I ask unanimous consent that the full text of Banks' study be printed in the RECORD as if presented in full.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CONRAIL SALE DIVESTITURE STUDY

(A PRELIMINARY REPORT TO ANTITRUST DIVISION, U.S. DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE)

GLOSSARY OF TERMS AND ACRONYMS

ABS: Automatic Block Signal System, a series of consecutive blocks actuated by a train or engine or by certain conditions affecting the use of a block.

Acquired Lines: Lines of railroad and related facilities to which P&LE and GTI, as divestees, would take title pursuant to the Memorandum of Intent.

Additional Reply Verified Statement(s): Verified Statement(s) filed by an indicated party in the ICC Staff Study on July 26, or August 1, 1985.

BAH: Booz, Allen & Hamilton.

BARNS: Booz, Allen Railway Network Simulation Model.

BM: Boston & Marine Corporation (a subsidiary of GTI).

BRC: Belt Railway of Chicago.

Cr Haulage Agreements: An agreement by which one rail carrier holds itself out to transport in its own trains the traffic of another rail carrier for an agreed charge which covers the operating and maintenance expenses of the hauling rail carrier.

CN/GT: Canadian National/Grand Trunk Railway Systems.

COFC: Container on flat car.

CP: Control Point.

CR or Conrail: Consolidated Rail Corporation.

CSX: CSX Corporation, owner of the Chessie System and Seaboard System railroads.

CTC: Centralized Traffic Control, defined as a system in ABS territory under which train or engine movements are authorized by block signals whose indications supercede the superiority of trains for both opposing and following movements on the same track.

Divestee(s): Rail carrier(s) selected by NS to acquire certain lines of railroad as a result of the NS acquisition of Conrail; divestees are GTI and P&LE.

DH: Delaware & Hudson Railroad Company (a subsidiary of GTI).

DOJ: United States Department of Justice.

E&A: CR Erie & Ashtabula Branch.

FRA: Federal Railroad Administration.

GTC: Grand Trunk Corporation, owner of the Grand Trunk Western and Central of Vermont railroads.

GTI: Guilford Transportation Industries, Inc., owner of the Maine Central, Boston and Maine and Delaware and Hudson railroads.

GTI Business Plan: June 30, 1985 submission of GTI entitled Acquisition of Rail Properties in Connection with Purchase by Norfolk Southern Corporation of Common Stock of Consolidated Rail Corporation.

GTM: Gross Ton-Mile.

GTW: Grand Trunk Western Railroad.

ICC: Interstate Commerce Commission.

ICC Staff Study: ICC Study of the Estimated Traffic Diversion and Viability of the Divestiture Proposals Resulting From the Acquisition of Consolidated Rail Corporation by Norfolk Southern Corporation, undertaken at the request of Congressman Florio, et al.

Intermodal transportation: Transportation involving more then one mode, e.g., rail/barge, rail/truck, truck/barge.

LE&E: Lake Erie & Eastern Railroad Co. (P&LE subsidiary).

LTD: Long-term debt.

MEC: Maine Central Railroad Company (a subsidiary of GTI).

Memorandum of Intent: February 8, 1985 agreement between US DOT and Norfolk Southern Corporation respecting the sale of Conrail as conditioned by DOJ.

MOE: Maintenance of Equipment.

MP: Milepost.

NJT: New Jersey Transit.

NS: Norfolk Southern Corporation.

NSCR: Combined properties and operations of Norfolk Southern Corporation and Consolidated Rail Corporation.

Opening Verified Statement(s): Verified Statement(s) filed by an indicated party in the ICC Staff Study on May 24, 1985.

OR: Operating Ratio.

P&LE: The Pittsburgh & Lake Erie Railroad Co.

Preliminary Review: The effort of RLBA pursuant to DOJ Purchase Order Number 5P-U-ATR-3968.

PWV: The Pittsburgh & West Virginia Railroad, Norfolk & Western Railway, lessee, to be assigned to the Pittsburgh & Lake Erie Railroad, and to GTI in the event that P&LE does not assume the lease obligations.

Reciprocal Switching: A means by which a rail carrier can obtain access to shippers and receivers not served by its lines within a terminal area, forwarding or receiving the traffic to/from the serving carrier at a prearranged charge.

Reply Verified Statement(s): Verified Statement(s) filed by an indicated party in the ICC Staff Study on June 7, 1985.

RLBA: R.L. Banks & Associates, Inc.

Summary Verified Statement(s): Verified Statement(s) filed by an indicated party in the ICC Staff Study on June 19, 1985.

STCC: Standard Transportation Commodity Classification as defined by the ICC.

TOFC: Trailer on flat car.

Trackage Rights: The practice of permitting a rail carrier to use the tracks and related facilities of another rail carrier under a prearranged fee which covers the owning carrier's operating and maintenance expenses and a rental to provide for the return of and on the owning carrier's fixed plant and related facilities investment.

USRA: United States Railway Association.

WBS: Annual sample of railroad freight waybill data compiled by the U.S. Department of Transportation.

RDG: Reading Railroad.

TRRA: Terminal Railroad Association of St. Louis.

In January 1985, the Department of Justice (DOJ) concluded its analysis of the proposed sale of the Consolidated Rail Corporation (CR) by the U.S. Department of Transportation (DOT) to Norfolk Southern Corporation (NS) and on January 29, 1985 advised DOT of its finding that on balance "the possible benefits of the proposed merger are not sufficiently great to outweigh the very serious anticompetitive effect the merger would have, particularly in the designated east-west corridor" [1] which runs between Buffalo and Pittsburgh in the east and St. Louis and Chicago in the west. DOJ had identified markets in corridor for which the "merger would have a significant adverse effect on competition for the transport of commodities" in those markets.[2] In March, DOJ advised Mrs. Dole that additonal markets within the corridor would likely suffer from reduced competition as a result of the proposed sale.[3] DOJ indicated that the defects of the merger would be remedied were NS to divest itself "of rail assets to an independent entity or entities capable of providing long-term, viable, and competitive rail service along this corridor" following DOJ guidelines. DOJ's rationale was that the "potential efficiency gains—particularly relating to the offering of single-line service—are, however, likely to be sufficiently great to offset the less significant adverse competitive effects that would remain after the divestiture . . . is effected." [4]

DOJ established three conditions, which in its view would "ensure competitive service:"

"First, the acquirer or acquirers (hereinafter "acquirer") must demonstrate to the satisfaction of the Attorney General that it possesses the managerial, operational, and financial capability necessary to compete effectively, and to remain a viable entity providing long-term rail service along the designated corridor.[5]

"Second, the divestiture should provide the acquirer direct connections in Buffalo, Chicago, Toledo, and East St. Louis to one or more railroads other than the merged carrier or CSX Corporation or any railroad controlled by either of them.

"Third, following the divestiture, in each of the designated counties [see Attachment A to the DOJ letter] in the east-west corridor, the merged Norfolk Southern/Conrail entity must switch cars between its tracks and facilities and the tracks and facilities of any shipper served by Norfolk Southern, Conrail, or Norfork Southern/Conrail [and open to service by both NS and CR] on customary terms and conditions whenever switching is practicable and necessary in order to provide a shipper with effective competitive access to the track and facilities of the acquirer.[6]

DOJ further clarified those conditions in Attachment A to its January 29, 1985 letter to Secretary Dole by specifying that rail services provided by acquirers "may be limited to service along those sold or leased rail lines where prior to divestiture shippers had service by both NS and CR." [7]

On February 8, 1985, DOT and NS entered into a Memorandum of Intent (Memorandum) under the terms of which NS would purchase Conrail for $1.2 billion. The DOJ letter of January 29, 1985, including Attachment A, is incorporated as Exhibit E to the Memorandum. To comply with DOJ's conditions set forth as Exhibit E to the Memorandum, NS entered into a Divestiture and Acquisition Agreement with Guilford Transportation Industries, Inc. (GTI) on May 10, 1985 which was revised on June 5, 1985.[8] NS also entered into a Divestiture and Acquisition Agreement with The Pittsburgh and Lake Erie Railroad Company (P&LE) on April 19, 1985. On their face, the Agreements satisfy the DOJ conditions except the first one which requires a demonstration by each acquirer that it will be capable of providing "long-term, viable and competitive rail services" along the corridor defined by DOJ in its letter to Secretary Dole. In particular, the associated divestiture sales (in combination with lease transfers, car haul agreements and trackage rights grants) by NS to GTI and P&LE are contingent upon the Attorney General finding that each acquirer will satisfy that condition along the rail corridors running between Buffalo and Pittsburgh in the east and St. Louis and Chicago in the west.

To assist the Attorney General, the Antitrust Division of DOJ now must determine whether the acquirers will satisfy the divestiture standards. To assist the Division in evaluating whether GTI and P&LE each meet DOJ's standard or whether, to the contrary, NS's proposed divestiture is either materially or irremediably defective, DOJ engaged R.L. Banks & Associates, Inc. (RLBA). This report has been prepared with respect to the four Technical Analyses required by DOJ's Statement of Work:

"(1) an engineering assessment of estimates prepared by interested parties of expenditures needed to complete any necessary rehabilitation to the divested properties in light of the amount of traffic that each acquirer anticipates will move over those properties;

"(2) a preliminary analysis of the costs which flow from and the feasibility of the operating plans submitted to DOJ, as well as the assumptions which underlie each operating plan;

"(3) a preliminary order of magnitude assessment of the consistency with each other of the market plans submitted by each of the acquirers, the assumptions underlying each plan and the extent to which those plans and marketing projections incorporate the effects on marketing projections of trackage rights and reciprocal switching arrangements which each acquirer has entered into with NS; and

"(4) a review of the pro forma financial statements prepared by the acquirers to determine whether the data are adequate and the financial plans are realistic and consistent both with the operating and marketing plans and with accepted accounting methods.

These Technical Analyses, first addressing the GTI plan and then the P&LE plan, are presented following the Summary of Findings, in the next section of this report. The Summary presents the conclusions reached in each Technical Analysis, as well as a preliminary evaluation with respect to the ultimate findings DOJ must make with respect to (i) whether each proposed divestiture is materially defective with respect to satisfying DOJ's service and viability standards; and (ii) whether each proposed divestiture is irremediably defective with respect to satisfying those standards. The preliminary nature of these analyses (with the necessary limitations on their scope and depth as described below) does not permit definitive findings on the abilities of either GTI or P&LE to meet the DOJ standards. Appendix A to this report identifies areas in which further information is needed.

The preliminary analysis was limited in its scope as the following excerpt from the July 3, 1984 Statement of Work states: "the Contractor shall utilize only (1) documentation provided to DOJ by GTI, P&LE, NS and Conrail and in the possession of DOJ on August 1, 1985, or such earlier date as may be mutually agreed upon; (2) information presently in the Contractor's possession; and (3) information which is otherwise publicly available and accessible to the Contractor. If materials are provided to DOJ after the date contract performance commences, DOJ will permit, but not require the Contractor to analyze them. The Contractor shall not interview nor secure date from officers or employees of affected railroads, of users of such railroads, of carriers of other modes, or of governmental entities except DOJ."

Significant sources of information relied upon in preparation of this report include many documents received from DOJ, as well as verified statements submitted to the Interstate Commerce Commission (ICC) on May 9, June 7, June 19, July 26, and August 1, by various railroads, including GTI, P&LE, NS, CR, CSX and Grand Trunk Western (GTW) for consideration in its information investigation entitled Study of the Estimated Traffic Diversion and Viability of the Diverstiture Proposal Resulting from the Acquisition of Consolidated Rail Corporation by Norfolk Southern Corporation (hereinafter referred to as the ICC Staff Study). Included among those documents are GTI's statement of June 30, 1985, Acquisition of Rail Properties in Connection with Purchase by Norfolk Southern Corporation of Common Stock of Consolidated Rail Corporation (hereinafter referred to as the "GTI Business Plan") and the Opening, Reply and Summary statements submitted by CR, NS, GTW and P&LE.

A further significant source of documentation was material provided to DOJ by each of the four parties involved in the transaction in response to detailed questions posed by DOJ. For example, on May 9 and July 25, DOJ sent letters of request for information to Kirkpatrick & Lockhart (outside counsel for GTI). On July 29, July 31 and August 8, 1985, GTI responded. Similarly, on May 28, DOJ requested information from Norfolk Southern Corporation and NS responded in letters dated July 2, July 15, July 25, and August 13, 1985. On May 15, DOJ requested information from P&LE. P&LE responded in letters dated June 27, July 16, July 31, August 2, and August 9, 1985. Finally, on May 31, 1985, DOJ requested additional divestiture information from Conrail. Responses from Conrail to DOJ were contained in letters dated July 8 and August 1, 1985.

[8] Article I of the GTI/NS Agreement requires that GTI acquire certain rail properties (described in Schedule A, Part II) in the event that P&LE fails to acquire those properties pursuant to the P&LE/NS Agreement. Approximately 255 additional route miles are involved. GTI also would be required to assume the PWV lease, involving approximately 120 route miles, if P&LE does not. These contingent obligations were not addressed by GTI.

It should be noted that the anlaysis upon which this report is based was not limited to documents received by DOJ by August 1, 1985. Many documents received by DOJ subsequent to that date, as well as public documents disseminated as recently as early September 1985, were reviewed and considered in the preparation of this report.

SUMMARY OF FINDINGS WITH RESPECT TO THE PROPOSED DIVESTITURE TO GTI

ENGINEERING ASSESSMENT OF PROPERTIES TO BE ACQUIRED BY GTI

GTI has identified (albeit in a very generic fashion) various capital and rehabilitation projects associated with properties it would acquire. It appears that GTI would need to rehabilitate two of three major line segments acquired: the Delphos to E. St. Louis segment with approximately 373 route-miles and the Crestline to Chicago line with aproximately 260 route-miles. In addition, GTI would need to construct connections at several locations and make improvements at various yards among other start-up capital projects.

Estimates of the costs for capital and rehabilitation cover a wide range, with CR's estimate being about double GTI's. One significant difference between the estimates is that Conrail assumed GTI would rehabilitate the E. St. Louis line for higher operating speeds than GTI did. Nevertheless, it appears that GTI would be more likely to require expenditures closer to CR's estimate of almost $160 million than its own current estimate which is approximately half that amount.

REVIEW OF GTI'S OPERATING PLAN

Although GTI provided a wealth of documentation regarding its consultant's computer studies of operations, significant questions remain regarding cost and operating assumptions relied upon in GTI's operating analysis. A significant general issue is whether the historical cost data relied upon by GTI is appropriate for analysis of operations on the divested lines. For example, GTI's estimated maintenance of way costs appear to exceed industry averages, but an assessment of the specific elements of these costs is precluded by the insufficiency of supporting documentation.

In addition, there are significant differences in the rates of variability for equipment costs used by GTI and standard ICC rates, and equipment depreciation and lease costs seem not to have been treated adequately. There are also numerical errors in GTI's equipment cost analysis both of omission and commission. Finally, GTI's rates of equipment utilization seem unreasonably high compared to past experience and consequently its equipment costs are probably understated.

Significant issues concerning GTI's development of transportation operating expenses include lack of documentation as to crew costs and reconciliation of train mile and yard service statistics used in the cost analysis. Similar problems also apply to non-operating, fuel, loss and damage, joint facility, piggyback lift charges and general and administrative costs. Until the validity of unit costs and costing assumptions can be established, the reasonableness of GTI's operating cost estimates must remain open to question. In addition, there are significant unexplained discrepancies concerning service units between available ICC statistics on GTI's operations in 1983 and comparable operating statistics for the base case simulation of GTI's 1983 operations.

The results of GTI's operations simulation with the divested lines included in the system indicate that some rather heroic assumptions about efficiency improvements may have been built into the GTI Business Plan. Noteworthy is the result that empty car-miles relative to loaded car-miles will be reduced by 30 percent for the GTI system. When incremental TOFC traffic is excluded from the analysis, the system makes less efficient use of freight cars.

The feasibility of GTI's operating plan has been challenged by competing railroads in the ICC Staff Study. As the following observations indicate, evaluation of those challenges has identified significant concerns:

1. GTI's transit and connecting time assumptions, though not unreasonable, seem not to have allowed sufficiently for normal operating delays;

2. GTI may not have fully explored the need for, and cost of, yard and terminal crews;

3. Slow speeds and traffic sufficient for only one train a day will leave GTI at a substantial competitive disadvantage versus NSCR between Buffalo and E. St. Louis;

4. GTI may have underestimated annual labor protection costs by several million dollars;

5. GTI may be unable to achieve the labor cost savings inherent in its assumption of three man crews; and

6. It is not clear that GTI has done the necessary engineering and cost analyses regarding the feasibility of its plans for intermodal facilities in Chicago and E. St. Louis.

Analysis of the circuitry of GTI's routes between Buffalo and Chicago and E. St. Louis indicates that they are comparable to Conrail's and that the differences are inconsequential in terms of operating viability and mileage-related costs. Circuity, however, will be a factor disadvantaging GTI in competing from the exterior of the corridor to and from Toledo and Indianapolis. That disadvantage will be compounded by significantly inferior service levels being offered by GTI on those routes.

Documents necessary to evaluate the GTI-NS trackage rights agreement were not available; if these agreements follow standard formats and charges, they are not likely to have significant adverse effect.

REVIEW OF GTI'S MARKETING PLAN

The competitiveness of GTI's proposed service (as opposed to the feasibility of the proposed schedules, discussed above) varies by corridor and class of service and, indeed, GTI's Business Plan acknowledges that GTI expects to be competitive only in certain markets. GTI's scheduled TOFC services appear to be competitive between Chicago and New York, less competitive between Chicago and Boston, and non-competitive between St. Louis and both Boston and New York. Thus, GTI's expectations regarding diverting significant levels of TOFC traffic from Conrail in the Boston/New York and St. Louis corridors appear to be overstated. For general freight, GTI's schedule it will offer service superior to Conrail's between Chicago and Boston.

Despite apparent inconsistencies in GTI's diversion assumptions, GTI's analysis of its ability to attract new interline traffic is comparable to an independent analysis performed by NS with regard to such traffic. However, because GTI has not considered the impact of competition from carriers other than NS or CR at stations on the lines GTI will acquire, it appears that GTI's estimate of the traffic and revenue which it will gain from the expansion of the GTI system is somewhat overstated.

With respect to new business (TOFC and general freight traffic which presently moves via other, non-GTI system routes) which GTI will attract through its system expansion, the largest component is TOFC traffic which GTI expects to divert from other rail carriers (or motor carriers). While GTI's estimated TOFC traffic in the New York/Boston and Chicago corridors which it can attract may be reasonable under GTI's service assumptions, the TOFC traffic in the St. Louis and New York/Boston corridors which GTI estimates it will attract appears to be overly optimistic given the non-competitive schedules GTI proposes.

GTI has addressed potential diversions of both its current and new traffic to NSCR. GTI anticipates both outright loss of traffic to NSCR as a result of trackage and reciprocal switching rights which GTI has granted NSCR, and losses of traffic through GTI being shorthauled by NSCR on traffic currently moving via Buffalo, Park Junction and Potomac Yard which GTI assumes will be rerouted by NSCR via Enola and Albany. GTI has adjusted its estimates of traffic and revenue resulting from its system expansion to reflect the impact of losses to NSCR.

REVIEW OF GTI'S PRO FORMA FINANCIAL STATEMENTS

GTI's pro forma financial statements, encompassing a five year forecast period, were examined for adequacy of data provided, conformity with accepted accounting principles, consistency with marketing and operating plans, and reasonableness of financial results. The analyses suggested that GTI's viability would be dependent heavily upon the realization of several optimistic assumptions, and that even under the most favorable circumstances GTI's continued existence would be parlous.

The pro forma statements as provided indicate expected rapid improvement in GTI's financial health, with net income exceeding $30 million in later years.[1] However, even by the fifth year the operating ratio, or ratio of operating expenses to operating income was slightly above 90 percent. Thus, the contribution that freight traffic could make towards fixed costs would be only about ten percent of revenues. Small adverse errors in anticipated revenue levels or operating expenses could easily reduce operating income below levels needed to cover interest expense. Coupled with projected poor liquidity, GTI would be hard pressed to maintain the quality of service and competitive thrust projected by its marketing and operating plans.

The long term success of the carrier is contingent upon the accuracy of the marketing and operating plans. Substantial revenues from new business (particularly highly-rated, non-time sensitive TOFC traffic) would have to be realized, operational efficiency, as reflected in per-carload expenses would have to improve significantly and rehabilitation costs would have to be constrained to very low levels. Doubts about the realism of the marketing and operating plans apply equally to the financial statements; the very real possibility that GTI would fail to realize projected gains in revenues and efficiency leads to the conclusion that the survival of an expanded GTI system is yet to be proven.

[1] The Financial Review of GTI indicates that income taxes have not been provided for, therefore net income may be overstated.

EVALUATION OF THE PROPOSED DIVESTITURE TO GTI

This review of NS's proposed divestiture to GTI has been, by necessity, preliminary in nature, limited in scope and constrained by inadequate information in certain areas to the point that a definitive judgement cannot be made with respect to whether the proposed divestiture is defective.[2] The review has indicated that in each area of investigation additional information and analysis is required before a definitive judgement could be offered on the existence of material defects in the GTI proposal and before alternative potential remedies (within the parameters of DOJ's January 29 and March 26, 1985 letters to Secretary Dole) could be identified.

The details of the GTI proposal in each of the four areas of investigation are discussed at length in the body of this report. The principal areas for further research are as follows:

1. A sound capital projects and rehabilitation plan for GTI must be developed before conclusions can be reached on the competitiveness of GTI's service. The costs associated with that plan must be developed before the full financial impacts can be properly ascertained.

2. The details of GTI's operations planning (and simulation model) must be reviewed in depth with respect to its sensitivity to critical assumptions. More realistic transit times, yard times and through-put rates need to be developed. The likelihood of GTI achieving its negotiating goals with regard to labor agreements must be more firmly established. The cost significance of likely improvements in the efficiency of the GTI system's constituent railroads needs to be established.

3. The competitiveness of GTI at stations jointly served with NSCR (and other rail carriers) as well as in terminals open to GTI through reciprocal switching must be explored in depth with substantive shipper input. GTI's ability to compete for TOFC and motor carrier business must be similarly explored. The impact of competition with CSX and other carriers not yet considered by GTI needs to be reviewed.

4. The sensitivity of GTI's pro forma financial statements to the engineering, operating and marketing factors discussed above needs to be established.

Additional specific areas for further research are identified in the text. In addition, Appendix A documents numerous information inadequacies which have been identified and which would need to be remedied.

SUMMARY OF FINDINGS WITH RESPECT TO THE PROPOSED DIVESTITURE TO P&LE

ENGINEERING ASSESSMENT OF PROPERTIES TO BE ACQUIRED BY P&LE

P&LE has not provided any estimate of rehabilitation of the lines which it will acquire; P&LE provides no estimate of the cost of constructing or upgrading connections. In the absence of P&LE estimates, it is necessary to rely upon those submitted by CR in the ICC Staff Study. CR's estimate of the cost of rehabilitating lines to be acquired by the P&LE and constructing or rehabilitating connections is approximately $30 million; this is the only comprehensive estimate available at this time.

[2] "Defective" means that GTI would be unlikely to be able to "compete effectively" and "remain a viable entity providing long-term rail service along the designated corridor."

REVIEW OF P&LE'S OPERATING PLAN

Available information regarding P&LE's operating plan was insufficient to permit an evaluation of the costs associated with the rail services P&LE would operate over the divested lines. The available description of the plan was also insufficient to estimate such costs. The feasibility of P&LE's operations could not be determined due to the absence of sufficient information respecting the plan and its underlying assumptions.

With regard to circuity, P&LE is now a north-south carrier between Pittsburgh and Youngstown with trackage rights north to Lake Erie at Ashtabula over CR, as well as limited trackage rights between Ashtabula and Buffalo over NW. P&LE does not now offer general freight service to and from Buffalo nor do they propose to do so after acquisition. In terms of route mileage, P&LE would have a slightly shorter route to Toledo than CR would but its route to Cleveland would be appreciably longer than CR's.

Lack of information on operations on tracking rights segments do not permit any firm conclusions as to whether administration of trackage rights arrangements would create operating difficulties and increase costs. However, the NS/P&LE trackage rights agreements appear to follow conventional railroad industry practices and fall within the normal range of charges found in the industry.

REVIEW OF THE P&LE MARKETING PLAN

Analyses of P&LE's marketing plan could not be performed because of lack of P&LE data. However, certain assumptions set forth in P&LE's verified statements in the ICC Staff Study have been reviewed:

(1) With regard to competitive service, P&LE would limit itself to competing for selected commodities and would not compete for time sensitive traffic including automotive industry and TOFC shipments;

(2) P&LE would depend on its new interchange partners GTI and GTW to enhance its ability to attract interline traffic;

(3) P&LE's projected traffic which it would gain from its expansion is based on the assumption that all NS business on acquired lines will be "available" to P&LE. That assumption was clarified by P&LE in subsequent statement in the ICC Staff Study which stated that some traffic on the lines to be acquired by P&LE would not be diverted from NSCR. P&LE only clarified its previous statement, it did not revise its estimate of traffic and revenue which P&LE would attract by its expansion.

It should be noted that P&LE's projection of traffic which the expanded P&LE system would attract is three to four times the volume which NS estimated P&LE would gain in its analysis of traffic on the lines to be acquired by P&LE. This review of P&LE's marketing plan, also noted a potential inconsistency between the P&LE and GTI plans with respect to the interchange of traffic which GTI contemplates with P&LE. It cannot be determined from materials supplied by either P&LE or GTI whether this traffic has been claimed by both acquirers.

REVIEW OF P&LE'S PRO FORMA FINANCIAL STATEMENTS

Although the data provided by P&LE are incomplete and inadequate to support a positive assessment of P&LE long-term viability, there is adequate evidence to support the view that seriously unrealistic assumptions have been factored into P&LE's planning. In addition, it is questionable whether there is a reasonable expectation that P&LE is likely to be financially capable of providing a long-term viable rail service over the divestiture properties even given the fact that a third party would acquire the lines and lease them back to P&LE.

P&LE's pro forma balance sheet shows that even after financial restructuring, its debt/equity ratio is extremely unfavorable reaching a level usually considered above financially sound levels.

P&LE's pro forma income statement indicates it is projecting 30 percent real growth in revenue over five years. Such a substantial and consistent increase in business volume would be difficult to obtain in P&LE's service territory in the near term at least without significant rate reduction, which would impair profitability. The income statement also indicates that continuing increases in efficiency have been assumed but the supporting documentation has not been provided. The pro forma also suffers from accounting methods that are at times deficient.

EVALUATION OF THE PROPOSED DIVESTITURE TO P&LE

This review of NS's proposed divestiture to P&LE has been severely hampered by the absence of detailed information concerning P&LE's business plan for the acquisition. The information defects are documented in Appendix A. Once that information (including a sound Business Plan for the P&LE) is made available, detailed engineering, operating, marketing and financial analyses are required to establish a basis for evaluating the plan. This review of available information identified numerous problem areas which are detailed in the text. Significant among these is a three-fold difference between P&LE's diversion estimates and those of NS's. Most significant, however, is the review of available financial data for the P&LE which raises serious concern as to whether a Business Plan and financing agreement can be developed that would allow an affirmative finding with respect to the likely long-term viability of the P&LE.

GUILFORD TRANSPORTATION INDUSTRIES ENGINEERING ASSESSMENT

FACILITIES TO BE DIVESTED

The engineering assessment begins with a tabulation of physical facilities to be acquired, rehabilitated and maintained. Pursuant to the Divestiture Agreement between it and NS of June 5, 1985, GTI will acquire certain lines and associated yards, will acquire still others if the P&LE divestiture is not consumated, and will be granted certain overhead trackage rights on lines now owned by NS or CR. These prospective divestitures and rights are set forth in Tables 1, 2 and 3, respectively.

To determine engineering (capital and maintenance) costs associated with the acquisitions and trackage rights described in the divestiture agreement, certain information must be analyzed. A description of the specific element of this information, and the cost of implications of each, follows.

NATURE OF PROPOSED OPERATION

Two factors, operating speed and tonnage to be carried, will determine the infrastructure required of the line segment being analyzed. Sometimes, the initial operating scenario must be adjusted in order to keep engineering costs within reasonable limits.

Alignment. This factor is a major determinant of train speeds. If proposed speeds are within present timetable limits, it is safe to assume that present alignment is satisfactory. If speeds are to exceed these limits, perhaps to achieve former timetable speeds, it must be determined whether the present alignment is adequate to support such an increase and, if not, what remedial measures and associated costs are required to achieve the new speeds.

Track Configuration. Depending on the operation, it will have to be ascertained whether track configuration, which can range from a single track with passing sidings to multiple tracks, is suitable for the proposed operation. If additional tracks are required, construction cost estimates have to be prepared. Track configuration, in combination with the type of signal system (if any) in place, has a major effect on rail line operating capacity.

Signals. Signal system condition must be determined as must its adequacy to meet the needs of the proposed operation. The system must be analyzed concurrently with track configuration for capacity determinations.

Track. This is the single greatest engineering cost component; track inventory and condition is critical. Are the existing track structure components (rail, joint bars, tie plates, fastenings and ballast) of the correct size, in good condition and what is their remaining useful life? Ties and rail are the major components. Tie counts (number of defective ties per mile) will tell how much rehabilitation work might be needed and what ongoing maintenance costs will be. Also, if a line is to carry additional traffic (for example, if it is to be upgraded from branch to main line status) a determination must be made as to the adequacy of tie spacing (number of ties per mile). Rail for today's rail lines are usually either in the medium weight (112, 115, 119 pounds per yard) or heavy weight (131, 132, 133, 136, 140 pounds per yard) range. It is important to know whether or not the rail is control cooled (a manufacturing process fully adopted by steel mills after the early 1950's rendering rail far less prone to certain defects), the amount of wear sustained and other problems associated with use. As might be expected, heavy rail sections would be used for higher tonnages, say over 10 million gross ton miles annually (MGTM) while light sections, down to 90 pounds per yard would be adequate for slow-speed, lightly-trafficked lines. Having optimum track structure reduces annual track maintenance costs; less than optimum, of course, increases maintenance costs. Knowing existing track conditions and the proposed operations, it is possible to determine what rehabilitation work is needed. There is some flexibility in that a less than optimum track structure can be used at the expense of higher annual maintenance, but this reduction in standards can be carried only to certain limits, beyond which the operation ceases to be viable.

Structures. Bridge conditions and load limits must be known to estimate major repairs or special high maintenance costs. Where load and speed limits exist they must be examined in light of the proposed operation to determine if any remedial measures are required and a cost determination made. A similar investigation must be made for tunnels. Also, clearance limitations must be accounted for if they are substandard.

New Connections. The feasibility and cost of a new connection is primarily determined by land availability, topography, existing rail line conditions and the use to which it will be put. The acquisition of land can be the most contentious item with time and cost implications. Topography is important where lines to be connected are at different elevations (e.g., one bridges over the other), buildings to be demolished, water courses to be crossed, etc. Existing rail line arrangements might necessitate expensive modifications to signal systems and installation of additional turnouts (beyond those of the connection).

Other Factors. Items of a less sensitive nature such as interlockers, grade crossings, culverts, ditching, etc., that can affect costs can be handled as they surface in the course of analyzing the above-mentioned items.

Analysis. Fortunately, most railroads keep fairly complete records as to alignment, track configuration, signals, track and structure. Using these records, interviews with key railroad personnel, selective field inspections (usually made by high-rail), employee timetables and current slow orders, a comprehensive and accurate assessment can be made of existing facilities eliminating the need for detailed field inspections. Topographic maps and site visits are required to estimate new connection costs.

In the documentation made available by GTI, CR, NS, and GTW (either publicly or through DOJ), information in varying degrees of completeness and detail was provided as to: (1) the condition of the lines to be acquired or over which trackage rights are to be granted; (2) route mileage and track mileage; (3) locations of new connections required to implement GRI's plan; (4) cost to construct required new connections; (5) signal systems; (6) locations and condition of yards to be acquired by GTI; (7) cost to rehabilitate lines and existing connections; and (8) annual normalized track maintenance costs. No cost data were supplied as to the PWV. Absent from these sources is any significant discussion of the condition of structures, buildings, shops, communications facilities, and signal systems.

The most comprehensive description of these facilities to be divested to GTI and the associated costs of maintenance, upgrading and construction is provided by CR Witness W.F. Wulfhorst in a series of tabulations in his testimony in the ICC Staff Study.[1] The cost information in these tabulations is purported to have been developed by skilled engineering personnel after undertaking field inspections.[2] Submissions of GTI, NS, and GTW, although far less comprehensive than the CR data, provide some useful comparative information. A summary of Mr. Wulfhorst's maintenance, rehabilitation and construction cost estimates is presented in Table 4.

NORMALIZED MAINTENANCE ESTIMATES

The annual cost of normalized maintenance is largely a function of operating speeds and tonnage over the lines in question. The FRA Track Safety Standards, partially summarized below, represent a widely-used system of distinguishing among various types of track according to their maximum authorized speeds:

FRA class	Maximum allowable freight train speed (mph)	Maximum allowable passenger train speed (mph)
1	10	15
2	25	30
4	60	80

Passenger trains operate only between Crestline, OH and Gary, IN,[3] approximately 255 miles (Amtrak's daily New York-Chicago Broadway Limited). Because of Amtrak's requirements, this segment of line must be maintained to FRA 4 (i.e., 80 mph passenger or 60 mph freight) regardless of the level of freight operations.

GTI estimated track maintenance and rehabilitation costs based on an unexplained sampling of eastern railroads' practices and materials lifetimes. The results of this undisclosed analysis are arrayed in a matrix of track maintenance costs by speed and tonnage.[4]

CR has estimated annual maintenance costs for freight traffic at two levels: Level A, 11 to 15 million gross ton miles per mile annually (MGTM) and Level B, 0 to 5 MGTM.[5] These categories appear to be adequate for the purpose of establishing a potential range of annual maintenance expense, representing as they do approximately three to five trains in each direction daily (Level A) and one train (or less) in each direction daily (Level B).

CR does not explain nor provide work papers to indicate how it arrived at its maintenance estimates; however, those estimates are consistent with industry averages based on the relevant FRA track class. Annualized unit costs of all acquired lines are:

	Dollars per route-mile	Dollars per main track-mile
Level A	15,161	13,266
Level B	8,629	7,550

Only GTI has provided information similar to that provided by CR which compares, in a limited fashion, normalized maintenance data in GTI's printout labeled "Track Maintenance Costs." [6]

The GTI normalized track maintenance cost was developed by adding the administrative, bridge, building, signal, fringe benefits casualty and other expenses [7] developed by GTI to the trackwork expenses also developed by GTI for the acquired lines [8] after deducting the capitalized portion of the estimates (which—over five years—constitute GTI's projection of rehabilitation expenses).

The GTI maintenance cost estimates are greater than are CR's, even though GTI in some cases assumed a lower FRA track clsss. Because GTI's estimates are based on a formula approach, they inspire less confidence than do CR's numbers which are said to be based on field observation.

REQUIRED REHABILITATION ESTIMATES

In its ICC submission, CR specifies two levels of rehabilitation cost, designated "new" and "fit", "new" means the use of only new materials and "fit" comprehends the use, to the extent possible, of suitable used rather than new materials. CR states, however, that "It is highly unlikely the vast amount of fit material required would be available".[9] This statement is generally true for rail, given the limited amounts of fit or suitable used rail currently available in the market. While neither CR nor any other party gives any breakout of the rail component of total rehabilitation costs, it must be concluded that at this level of analysis an average of the cost of "fit" and "new" rail appears appropriate. This average cost (which provides for a mix of new and relayable rail) will be applied in assessing CR's estimates of all of the two rehabilitation costs.

GTI's work papers that estimates of rehabilitation cost are limited to track elements; no rehabilitation cost estimates are indicated for bridges, signals and other structures. No detail of the work elements proposed as rehabilitation (ties, rail, bridges, signals, etc.) was found in the documents supplied by CR. Some evidence with respect to the condition of those lines which require rehabilitation was supplied, but the detail is insufficient to support a definitive estimate.[10] Yard rehabilitation is addressed below.

There is a considerable amount of rehabilitation to be accomplished on GTI. It is estimated that this work can reasonably be accomplished in five years. Though more costly, an accelerated program could be completed in three years. The schedule limitations are availability of materials (particularly ties and rail), labor (skilled foremen) and track machinery. Over a five year period there would be better opportunity to purchase "fit" (acceptable second-hand) rail at less than half the price of new.

NEW INVESTMENT REQUIREMENTS

GTI's work papers contain no estimates of new investment identified with specific facilities. It can only be assumed that they are contained within the amounts for the segments identified on such work papers.[11] The source of the following connection and yard rehabilitation cost estimates is the CR statements in the ICC Staff Study.[12] Where both "Fit" and "New" estimates were supplied, the average of the two is used.

Connection at Crestline, OH: $1,450,000.

Connection at Oakdale, OH: $498,205.

Connection at Clark, OH: $320,820.

Rehabilitation of Colehour Yard (IN): $1,681,505.

Rehabilitation of Yard "E" (Maple Grove, OH): $995,066.

ENGINEERING JUDGMENTS

Normalized maintenance: There are differences between GTI and CR estimates of normalized maintenance expense, which appear to be attributable to variations in the following: Definitions of line subsegments; Track miles ascribed to identical segments; Assumed level of operations; and Unit costs (per mile) for maintenance.

However, GTI and CR estimates can be readily compared if short subsegments are combined to yield estimates with respect to major line segments. Table 5 displays the differences between the GTI and CR estimates of annual maintenance expense with respect to each major segment.

The GTI estimates vary widely, while CR's unit costs are fairly consistent among individual segments and overall, thereby leading to questions with respect to GTI's unit cost estimates. When similar segments are compared (Table 5) the GTI unit cost per route mile averages $16,290, while the CR unit cost averages $12,014 per route mile. GTI data can only be compared with CR data on a per route mile or segment basis.[14]

GTI maintenance estimates with respect to bridges, buildings and signals have been provided on an aggregate basis without reference to specific facilities.[15] It is assumed that those items have been included in the line maintenance costs furnished by CR. CR erroneously has included in its estimates the expense of normalized maintenance for the lines over which GTI will have trackage rights.[16] The GTI/NS Divestiture Agreement relegates such matters to the trackage rights agreements which GTI has yet to supply. In the absence of those GTI/NS agreements, the P&LE/NS agreements supplied to DOJ were examined. Those agreements clearly state that the owner will be responsible for track maintenance, with the car-mile charge of $0.17 covering this and other expenses.[17] NS indicates that the trackage rights agreements between NS and GTI will be similar to P&LE's.[18] Therefore, track maintenance charges on the trackage rights lines will not be considered in this analysis in order to avoid double counting of maintenance of way costs which are addressed separately.

The total GTI annual normalized maintenance expense is $15,107,141; CR's estimate of GTI's total normalized maintenance expense for comparable segments is $11,412,493. It appears that GTI has overstated normalized maintenance expense. Therefore, because CR's estimate approximates industry experience for annualized maintenance in similar operating situations, the CR estimate will be used.

REHABILITATION AND NEW CONSTRUCTION

The GTI Business Plan is vague as to the precise track work included in rehabilitation costs on its acquired lines. At page 37, an expenditure of "approximately $58 million" is mentioned.[19-24]

tate the Delphos-St. Louis segment to FRA Class 4.[25]

They estimate $1,823,015 for connections at Delphos and Crestline (no yard improvements shown).[26] These are the only figures CR has prepared that can be compared to those submitted by GTI. The difference should be explored in any future analysis.

Using an average of new and fit material costs, estimated by CR (and displayed in Table 4), rehabilitation costs can be estimated as follows:

	Line rehabilitation costs	Other rehabilitation and connection costs
Acquired Lines	$146,815,050	$4,997,791
Trackage Rights Lines [27]	6,949,625	320,820
Total	153,764,675	5,318,611
Total line and other costs		159,083,286

Previously CR's estimate of $159,083,286 and GTI's maximum of $78,000,000 are far apart.

The only two segments of line of which some detail is known are the Celphos to East St. Louis and Crestline to Chicago (CP501) sections.

Between Delphos and East St. Louis comparative rehabilitation estimates are:

GTI—$10,452,860 (FRA Class 3) or $30,452,860 (FRA Class 4)

CR—$93,983,360 (avg. new and fit)[28]

GTW—$37,159,000 [29]

Between Crestline and Chicago (CP501) it is known that Amtrak's Broadway Limited will require FRA Class 4 track. It is also known that the line has approximately 100 track-miles of jointed rail over 35 years old which has carried considerable tonnage over that period.[30] With this knowledge CR's estimate of $25,591,960 appears reasonable.[31] To determine the money required to rehabilitate these rail lines with any degree of confidence, detailed information would be needed as to their proposed level of service (train speeds and projected tonnages) and existing track conditions (particularly ties and rails).

At this juncture it is reasonable to assume that to rehabilitate and construct connections would cost somewhere between GTI's $78,000,000 and CR's $159,083,286. Considering differences in the level of effort exhibited in the documents available, it would be prudent to conclude that an estimate closer to CR's could be more accurate.

Operating Plan Review

In assessing the operating plan of an existing rail system, there are several fundamental question to be addressed:

(1) Is the plan consistent with the physical capabilities of the network over which operations would be conducted?

(2) Has sufficient attention been given to the ability of yard and terminal facilities to support the proposed operation? (This is a common failing of proposed operating plans, concentrating as they sometimes do on over-the-road train operations, despite the fact that freight cars typically spend a greater proportion of their time in terminals than they do moving in trains.)

(3) Are the routes involved competitive with those of other rail carriers, in terms of both distance and speed? If not, can these disadvantages be overcome through minimization of car detention at terminals?

(4) Are the plan's labor assumptions reasonable? Are significant changes in existing labor arrangements (e.g., crew manning levels, crew districts, and other matters covered by collective bargaining agreements) required by the plan?

These and related questions have been considered in the course of reviewing GTI's operating plan with regard to the divestiture properties. This review has, of course, encompassed not simply the materials available in the public record with regard to the proposed transactions but also those documents furnished DOJ on a confidential basis.

Proposed operating plan

The centerpiece of GTI's proposed operating plan would be the operation of four new through trains in each direction daily over various portions of the acquired lines. Three of these trains would originate/terminate in Chicago, the fourth in St. Louis. In addition, GTI would operate unit coal and grain trains on certain of its newly acquired lines, as well as local train service on all lines west of Buffalo. Table 6 lists the new train services contemplated by GTI.

GTI's consultants, BAH, appear to have undertaken a comprehensive and detailed modeling exercise (using the firm's BARNS model) to develop the proposed operating plan. The data generated by this exercise includes detailed traffic flows, schedules of each train to be operated, assignment of traffic (both loads and empties) to specific blocks, assignment of blocks to trains, and statistics as to train-miles, car-miles and ton-miles. These statistical data apparently were used as the basis for the development of the expanded system's operating expenses, a matter discussed in more detail below. Notwithstanding this wealth of documentation, questions remain as to whether the assumptions underlying the statistical data are complete and credible and, even if so, whether the resulting operating plan will be commercially viable.

It is important to note that, while GTI's consultants, BAH, have furnished copious documentation of the quantitative data of the BARNS model, there is an almost complete absence of descriptive material that would facilitate understanding the interrelationships of the assumptions and the model's results. The only document provided that describes the model, GT 000401–14, is not specific to the GTI simulation; rather it appears to be a sales tool, describing as it does the model's past and potential applications, rather than how it works. It appears, in fact, to have been prepared for distribution outside the U.S., as in certain places it uses the British term "wagon" where the North American equivalent would be "car", and "marshalling" rather than "classification" yards (see, e.g., GT 000406). Analysis of the BARNS data therefore has depended on experience both in railroad management and analysis and in the development and use of other rail network simulation models.

The BAH operations modeling effort is a principal underpinning to the operating assertions made in GTI's Business Plan for the divestiture properties. As part of the ICC Staff Study, certain parties opposed to the NSCR transaction filed Additional Reply Statements on July 26, 1985, in which they addressed, inter alia, the perceived failings of GTI's operating plan. These opponents included CSX Corporation and CR itself, whose witnesses on operating issues were F.W. Yocum, Jr., and W.F. Wulfhorst, respectively. While these witnesses lacked access to the underlying BAH documentation, questions they raised are significant even in the face of that documentation, and may be summarized as follows:

Yocum

(1) The circuitry of the routes to be acquired by GTI versus those of competing carriers principally NSCR;

(2) The physical condition of routes to be acquired, and attendant speed restrictions;

(3) GTI's alleged failure to address the condition (and rehabilitation and maintenance expense) of the yards it would acquire;

(4) The disparity between forecast equipment productivity levels (revenues per locomotive and car) on GTI's acquired lines and those on its existing lines;

(5) Whether GTI's transit times on intermodal traffic would be competitive with CR's; and

(6) The seeming conflict between GTI's assumption that it would employ 3-man train crews and its offer of employment to all current NS or CR employees on the lines to be divested.

Wulfhorst

(1) The alleged overoptimism of GTI's intermodel train schedules;

(2) The need to construct new intermodal terminals at Croxton, NJ (New York area), Colehour, IL (Chicago), and Madison, IL (St. Louis);

(3) The fact that GTI's assumption of an interchange with P&LE at Wellington, OH does not appear to be supported by the NS/GTI Divestiture and Acquisition (D&A) agreement;

(4) The allegedly poor condition of some of the yards that GTI proposes to acquire;

(5) The alleged overoptimism of GTI's assumptions as to yard efficiency; and

(6) The need for (and cost and construction schedules of) new connections needed between the acquired lines.

One of these questions may be disposed of rather quickly, or at least categorized as being of somewhat lesser significance than others. Mr. Yocum notes that revenues per locomotive and car will be far higher on GTI's western extension than on its existing lines, suggesting either that revenues have been overestimated, equipment needs underestimated, or both. However, without necessarily concluding that either of these items has been estimated accurately by GTI, it is conceivable that revenue per unit of equipment may indeed be relatively high on the divested lines. These lines are to be used primarily for through freight services, whereas much of GTI's existing network is yard and branch-line intensive, both of which imply low levels of equipment utilization per revenue dollar. However, the BARNS data do raise other questions concerning car utilization, discussed below.

The question of the present condition of the divestiture properties, and the potential cost of rehabilitating them to levels adequate to meet GTI's needs, as well the cost of new connections required, has been discussed in the section of this report devoted to engineering issues. Other major issues raised by opponents of the divestiture are discussed below.

Underlying operating assumptions and feasibility

In order to assess the feasibility of a proposed operating plan, one must first look to the assumptions that underlie it. If the transit times assumed over key segments are unrealistic, for example, then the service may not be as competitive as described by the plan's proponents, and anticipated operating costs may be understated. In the section that immediately follows GTI's principal operating assumptions are reviewed and their feasibility or reasonableness assessed.

A second test of an operating plan's feasibility relates to the statistical and financial results that would flow from implementation of the plan. The forecast results of GTI's expanded operation are therefore treated in the subsequent section, "Imputed Operating Costs." Taken together, the underlying assumptions employed by GTI and its consultants and the forecast results of GTI's expanded operation raise a number of significant questions as to the plan's feasibility.

Transit times and operating speeds

The development of train schedules and related operating statistics by the BARNS model relies in part on the user's specification of traversal (i.e., movement) times over each segment, or link, in the rail network being analyzed. Three distinct traversal times may be specified for each link: "slow", "regular" and "expedited." The first would apply to local, manifest and unit trains, the second to higher priority trains and the third to passenger trains and those carrying intermodal traffic.[1] In the case of the GTI analysis, the slow and regular times have been set equal, and selected links between Croxton and Chicago have been assigned faster times for intermodal trains. The cumulative traversal time over the Croxton-Chicago route (exclusive of intermediate stops) is 32 hours 3 minutes for intermodal trains and 34 hours 30 minutes for other trains.[2]

In order to test the reasonableness of GTI's assumed transit times over the segments which comprise its Western Extension (including the new trackage rights between Croxton and Binghamton, and the existing DH trackage rights over the Conrail line between Binghamton and Buffalo), two methods have been used. On the route between Croxton and Chicago, via Binghamton, Buffalo, Cleveland, Crestline and Fort Wayne, GTI's schedules haave been compared with those of CR. Because detailed CR freight schedules were available, while similar NS data were not, GTI service on the segment between Buffalo and Cleveland has been compared with CR service while GTI would operate on trackage today owned and operated by NS. The two routes between these cities are closely parallel and are both high-density, well-maintained lines, presumably with similar service capabilities. Document NS 001491 shows that the NS line, 184 miles in length, has 45 miles of double track, and that the maximum speed on the line is 60 mph except for 32 miles of 40-mph operation, 23 miles of which is in the westward direction only in double-track territory.

On the route between Delphos and St. Louis such a comparison was not feasible (even if historical NS freight schedules were available); no through train service has been operated over the line for several years and the condition of the line apparently has been allowed to deteriorate in recent years. GTC witness Meyer in his Opening Verified Statement in the ICC Staff Study displays (at page 10) an enumeration of maximum authorized operating speeds over this route, which he says was developed in the course of a recent inspection of the line. On this route, therefore, GTI's assumed speeds have been compared with the maximum authorized speeds presented by Mr. Meyer.

Table 7 displays a comparison of GTI forecast and CR actual schedules over various segments of the Croxton-Chicago route. The most recent available CR schedule data have been employed; with respect to the Crestline-Fort Wayne-Chicago portion of the route, where CR no longer operates through freight service, these data are from the period 1977-80. However, despite the removal of through freight service, it is believed that schedules over this route would be similar to those operated today because the line has continued to be maintained at relatively high levels to accommodate Amtrak's New York-Chicago Broadway Limited passenger service. The downgrading of this route is understood to have involved primarily the removal of double track segments as well as signal modification, neither of which would be likely to affect the ability of GTI to operate service at its forecast levels.[3]

As Table 7 indicates, GTI's forecast schedules are somewhat more optimistic on most segments than are CR's. However, there is substantial variation even among CR's own train schedules, and it must be realized that development of freight train schedules is an inexact science at best. They are often structured to accommodate a certain amount of day-to-day variation attributable to operating, mechanical and other delays. It is apparent that while GTI's assumed schedules may fall within the range of reasonableness, they cannot properly be described as conservative. Inevitably, delays will occur whose location, duration and frequency cannot be predicted, and GTI's transit time assumptions appear to have given insufficient weight to such factors, particularly on the line segments west of Cleveland (Berea).

A similar conclusion is suggested by Table 8, which displays average speeds over various segments of the Delphos-St. Louis route, both as currently in force (based on the Meyer evidence) and as assumed by GTI. The weighted average maximum authorized speed over this line, including 28 miles of 10-MPH slow orders between Delphos and Frankfort, is 26.5 MPH; GTI's assumed average speed is 22.8 MPH. While once again this is within the range of reasonableness, it does not appear to reflect a sufficient allowance for typical delay. In addition, it must be remembered that freight trains do not spend 100 percent of their time operating at maximum authorized speed; they must accelerate as they depart each stopping point and decelerate when approaching such points, and recovery from intermediate slowdowns also erodes the average speed of a train.

Yards and terminals

Like many rail operating plans, GTI's appears to give less attention to the role of yard and terminal operations than to line-haul train service. The BARNS model generates a report quantifying the number of cars switched daily at each principal station, or node, but no document has been identified that uses those figures as a basis for determining the number of yard crews needed on the acquired lines has been found in the materials provided to DOJ. Table 9 sets forth a list of those points west of Buffalo where intermediate switching (i.e., reclassification of cars at a point other than origin or destination, labelled in the BARNS model as "transit" switching) would occur. At two of these points (E. St. Louis TRRA and Chicago BRC), such work would presumably be performed by crews of the respective terminal railroads. At others, it is unclear whether the work would be done by GTI yards crews or by local trains serving these stations. There is a BAH document that provides for 2,340 annual yard crews (45 weekly) on the acquired lines, but the locations of these crews cannot be determined from the available data.[4] The absence of explicit, detailed treatment of yard crews suggests that GTI may not have fully explored the need for, and cost of, this type of activity.

It also appears that GTI's consultants, BAH, have made fairly optimistic assumptions with respect to car throughput times at yards at which such intermediate switching would be performed. Table 9 lists, in addition to projected numbers of design day transit switches, the minimum connecting times on such traffic at each yard. Four of the eleven yards listed have minimum times on "regular" traffic of 200 minutes; the other seven have minimum times of 300 minutes. On expedited traffic, the minimum time is a uniform 120 minutes.

A switching time of 3 to 5 hours on non-expedited traffic is somewhat optimistic. Calculation of such times for an existing or prospective rail operation must take into account such factors as yard congestion at peak hours, yard crew schedules, and relative priorities afforded various inbound movements. It is not clear that BAH took such considerations into account in its connecting time assumptions as to regular traffic.

Table 10 lists the connecting times between CR trains at Elkhart, IN, and Selkirk, NY, two of CR's principal classification yards. The minimum connecting time shown at both Elkhart and Selkirk is 4 hours 30 minutes. However, in both cases, these times apply to inbound trains carrying time-sensitive traffic: DNEL arriving at Elkhart consists largely of automotive traffic from Michigan points, while PXSE arriving at Selkirk is a perishables train. The next-shortest connecting times at both terminals exceed 5 hours.

Source: CR Freight Schedules, July 1, 1985.

An expedited (intermodal) traffic, BAH's assumption of a 120-minute minimum connecting time also may be considered optimistic. CR's July 1, 1985, freight schedules show the following connecting times from arrival of intermodal trains reclassified at intermediate points to their first connecting trains:

Yard	Inbound Train	Inbound Arrives	Connects to Train	Connects to Departs	Connecting time (hours/minutes)
Harrisburg	TV–4M	0200	TV–26	0830	6'30"
Harrisburg	TV–4M	0200	TV–62H	0430	2'30"
Selkirk	TV–6	0400	TV–6	0630	2'30"
Conway	TV–26	1255	TV–26	1745	4'50"

Thus, CR's minimum connecting time on such traffic is 150 minutes versus GTI's 120 minutes. It is understood that GTI's assumed connecting times (both regular and expedited) are minimums, not averages. However, it appears that they do not take into account the actual capabilities of the yards in the GTI network, but have instead been applied based solely on a conceptual stratification of the BARNS nodes' various functions.[5]

Operating labor requirements

Section 15.01 of the GTI/NS Agreement states that: "Employees of NS and its affiliates (including CR) who fill the positions designated in Schedule J will, upon the effectiveness of the applicable implementing agreements, thereafter be considered employees of GTI or its affiliates for all purposes . . ."

This section further provides that NS shall indemnify GTI for labor protection costs in excess of those "payable under New York Dock" with respect to the employees filling the positions listed in Schedule J.[6] Schedule J lists 837.5 positions to which those provisions apply (530 NS and 307.5 CR). Of these, 114 represent engine service employees (enginemen and firemen) and 194 represent conductors and brakemen in freight service. An additional 135.5 positions are identified as clerical, supervisory and related assignments in the carriers' operating departments; such positions are commonly described as "non-operating" to distinguish them from train and engine service employees. Documentation furnished DOJ by BAH[7] indicates that GTI's western extensions will have the following numbers of weekly crew starts in various types of service:

Weekly crew starts	Service	Employees per crew
196.0	Thru trains	3
7.4	Unit trains	3
63.0	Local trains	3
23.0	Local trains	4
45.0	Yard	3

Taken together, these numbers indicate 334.4 weekly engineers' crew starts and 691.8 weekly trainmen's crew starts. If each employee is assumed to have five starts weekly, the resulting manpower needs are 67 with respect to enginemen and 138 with respect to trainmen. The same set of documents lists projected "non-operating" labor requirements that total 106.7 positions.[8]

As can be seen from the table below, GTI's operating labor requirements are below the numbers of personnel that the company would be required to employ under its agreement with NS, assuming that all current employees on the acquired lines accept employment with GTI.

Category	GTI projected requirements	Current employees	Difference Number	Difference Percent
Enginemen	67	114	47	70
Trainmen	138	194	56	41
Nonoperating	106.7	135.5	28.8	27
Total	311.7	443.5	131.8	42

Since the agreement requires GTI to offer New York Dock protection to its employees acquired from NS and Conrail, GTI is likely to incur costs for labor protection not accounted for in its pro forma financial statements. If the average annual compensation level per employee (including fringe benefits) were $35,000, this cost would approximate $4.6 million annually with respect to operating department employees alone. This could be reduced by attrition, by absorption of some new employees on present GTI lines (with attendant relocation costs) and by the fact that extra train and engine service employees would be needed to fill irregular vacancies. However, the magnitude of the differences noted above makes this issue worthy of exploration with GTI.

GTI has not detailed, however, how it will achieve the 3-man crew levels that it has assumed; doing so will require negotiations with the operating craft unions, the outcome of which is by no means assured. There is a growing number of precedents for the use of 3-man crews (particularly on Conrail), but Norfolk & Western (the present operator of much of GTI's to-be-acquired trackage) has not been in the forefront of carriers seeking this concession from its labor organizations, and so the GTI assumption on manning levels must remain an open question.

Intermodal facilities

The GTI marketing and operating plans contemplate the movement of intermodal traffic between Chicago and St. Louis in the West and Croxton and New England points in the East. To do so, GTI will require new intermodal terminals at Chicago, St. Louis and Croxton. The last of these is specifically referenced in Schedule B of the June 5, 1985, NS-GTI Divestiture and Acquisition Agreement, which states that NS will lease to GTI three tracks at Croxton capable of holding at least 60 intermodal flatcars per track. However, the only references made to the specific location or configuration of the terminals at Chicago and St. Louis in any of the materials reviewed, other than in the BARNS printouts,[9] are in correspondence of August 7, 1985,[10] from GTI's consultant, BAH, to GTI's outside counsel describing briefly the anticipated functions of newly-acquired GTI yard facilities.

Absent any explicit detailed treatment of the Chicago and St. Louis TOFC terminals, the following questions remain unanswered:

(1) What will the physical configuration and capacity of these terminals be, and is capacity consistent with traffic levels assumed in the marketing plan?

(2) Is sufficient land available at Colehour and Madison, and would intermodal operations be compatible with other switching activities conducted there?

(3) Will there be easy rail and highway access to these terminals?

(4) What are the capital costs of these new facilities? These cannot be dismissed as mere details to be resolved at some future date. GTI's Chicago operation in particular is heavily dependent on intermodal traffic, and if the physical facilities to support this operation are not readily available, GTI's marketing and operating plans could both require substantial adjustment.

Equipment utilization

Analysis of car utilization data produced by the BARNS model discloses that the operating plan proposed by GTI would result in less efficient freight car use upon inclusion of the Western Extension. The table below shows car-miles and car-days for the GTI system both with and without the inclusion of the Western Extension. The percentages in parentheses represent the respective changes from the base case (excluding the Western Extension).

	GTI without Western extension	GTI with Western extension	GTI with Western extension TOFC excluded
Loaded car—miles (000)	114,499	202,250 (77%)	126,679 (11%)
Empty car—miles (000)	105,264	155,908 (48%)	142,150 (35%)
Loaded car—days	1,099,801	1,553,699 (41%)	1,361,997 (24%)

[6] The so-called New York Dock conditions are labor protective provisions traditionally imposed by the ICC in rail merger and consolidation cases. They provide, in brief, for maintenance of pre-merger compensation levels for employees adversely affected by a transaction, up to a maximum of 6 years. See 360 ICC 60.

[9] These printouts show a "CHGO TOFC" node one mile east of Colehour Yard (to be acquired by GTI) and a "STLOUIS TOFC" node at the same geographic location as GTI's connection with the TRRA, in the vicinity of Madison yard (also to be acquired by GTI). See, e.g., GTI network Description Report, GT 00415–432, esp. 000429, and 000432.

Empty car—days	1,016,699	1,348,200 (33%)	1,332,085 (31%)

The data indicate that expansion through the addition of the Western Extension would result in an increase in loaded car-miles of 77 percent while empty car miles would be increased by only 48 percent. Similarly, car-days show a greater change in loaded days (41 percent) vis-a-vis empty days (33 percent). Based on these relative changes, it would appear that the Western Extension contributes to improved productivity of the fleet. However, if incremental TOFC traffic (traffic currently not handled by GTI) is removed from the GTI/Western Extension case, the opposite effect is observed; productivity of the on-line car fleet, in fact, deteriorates significantly. While loaded car-miles increase 11 percent, empty car-miles increase by 35 percent. The gain in empty car-miles is so significant when the additional TOFC traffic is excluded from the Western Extension scenario, that the empty return ratio increases from 0.92 in the Base Case to 1.12 indicating that empty car-miles exceed loaded car-miles. With respect to car time, a similar deterioration holds. The percent increase in empty car-days (31 percent), is greater than the increase in loaded car-days (24 percent).

Examining each existing operating entity, a similar deterioration of fleet productivity is visible:

	Without Western extension	With Western extension	With Western extension TOFC excluded
Boston and Maine:
Loaded car—miles (000)	43,261	51,086 (18%)	43,198 (—)
Empty car—miles (000)	39,249	43,402 (11%)	42,131 (7%)
Delaware and Hudson:
Loaded car—miles (000)	59,205	79,874 (35%)	52,100 (—12%)
Empty car—miles (000)	54,650	62,156 (14%)	57,646 (5%)
Maine Central:
Loaded car—miles (000)	12,034	12,763 (6%)	11,709 (—3%)
Empty car—miles (000)	11,368	12,066 (6%)	11,635 (2%)

Note.—Car-day data are not available on an operating entity basis.

When incremental TOFC traffic is removed from the traffic base of each operating unit, empty car-miles increase at a faster rate than loaded car-miles. On the D&H, empty car-miles exceed loaded car-miles.

Wellington interchange with P&LE

At page 21 of the GTI Business Plan, and throughout the BARNS documentation, there are references to a junction between GTI and P&LE at Wellington, OH. This point is 24 miles west of Berea (Cleveland) on the Cleveland-Crestline route over which GTI would be granted overhead trackage rights. As noted by Mr. Wulfhorst of CR, it is questionable whether GTI could in fact interchange with P&LE at this location given the restrictive nature of the GTI trackage rights.

Although provision is made for the Wellington interchange in the BARNS model, it appears that BAH did not assume the movement of any traffic over this junction. The GTI Timetable Generator (GT 000924-37), for example, shows no trains stopping there to pick up or set out traffic. In addition, the Link Loading Report (GT 000814) shows the same number (13.91 million) of gross tons moving over the segments east and west of Wellington. If there were in fact any traffic routed via this junction, the tonnage figures would differ east and west of Wellington. Thus, the reason for the various references to this junction cannot be ascertained from the available documentation.

Circuity

The GTI routes between Buffalo and Chicago and between Buffalo and St. Louis will be approximately equal in distance to those utilized by Conrail today, and available for use by NSCR subsequent to the acquisition of CR by NS. The mileages between these points are as follows:

	GTI	CR	GTI miles as percent of CR miles
Buffalo-Chicago (Colehour)	523	504	104
Buffalo-E. St. Louis	716	693	103

The circuity that GTI would face on these routes is inconsequential in terms of operating viability and cost, in and of itself. Competing carriers seldom are so closely parallel between major traffic hubs that their routes are precisely equal in length. There are, of course, certain operating expenses that vary more or less directly with distance, such as the mileage component of car hire payments, and roadway maintenance expense, but these will have relatively little impact on total operating expense given the small difference involved in these routes.

Service capability is likewise little affected by small differences in relative distance. Two factors can work to offset the apparent disadvantage of a longer route as related to overall transit times: average operating speed and percentage of total time spent by cars in intermediate yards and terminals. The projected transit time of GTI's expedited trains between Buffalo and Chicago would be 12 hours 46 minutes, inclusive of intermediate stops, versus 15 hours 40 minutes for Conrail's premier intermodal train service. Even if, as indicated previously, GTI's projected schedules are somewhat optimistic, GTI should at least be able to equal CR's transit times on this route. Moreover, on manifest traffic, Conrail routes virtually all traffic between its Chicago connections and New England points through at least one (and in many instances both) of its intermediate classification yards at Elkhart, IN, and Selkirk, NY. GTI, by contrast, is proposing a blocking strategy that would involve creation of Chicago blocks as far east as Portland, ME, and vice versa. Since freight cars typically spend a high percentage of their time in yards rather than being moved in trains, a blocking strategy that keeps cars out of yards can go a long way towards offsetting minor disadvantages in the relative circuity of routes.

Between Buffalo and St. Louis, however, GTI will face a substantial disadvantage versus NSCR because of the slow speeds associated with its Delphos-St. Louis trackage. This disadvantage will be compounded by the fact that GTI projects sufficient traffic along this line to fill only one train daily. Thus, unlike the Chicago route, where intermodal traffic would move on expedited trains while manifest traffic moves on somewhat slower trains, all GTI traffic to and from the St. Louis gateway as well as intermediate points between St. Louis and Delphos would be carried on a single train with numerous intermediate stops.

While circuity alone will not pose a significant disadvantage to GTI on its primary western routes, this will not be the case with respect to Toledo and Indianapolis. A comparison of GTI and present CR mileages between these two points and other major terminals on GTI's new routes reveals the following:

	Toledo (miles)		GTI miles as percent of CR miles	Indianapolis (miles)		GTI miles as percent of CR miles
	GTI	CR		GTI	CR
Chicago	324	220	147	332	243	137
Cleveland	160	115	139	316	291	109
Buffalo	341	283	120	497	460	108
East St. Louis	517	471	110	311	234	133

Even circuity as great as shown above could be overcome if GTI possessed the high-density, service-intensive routes to Toledo and Indianapolis while CR had the reverse. This is not the case, however. Indianapolis is an intermediate point on CR's main line between St. Louis and eastern points, while Toledo occupies a similar position with respect to CR's high-density route between Chicago and the East. GTI proposes to operate only one six-day-per-week train on each of its branches between Bucyrus and Toledo and between Kokomo and Indianapolis. Thus, the circuity disadvantage will be compounded by the wide disparity in service frequencies between GTI's routes and NSCR's.

Trackage rights issues

Schedule B of the NS-GTI Divestiture and Acquisition Agreement of June 5, 1985, calls for NSCR to grant overhead trackage rights to GTI as follows:

(1) between Cleveland and Crestline, OH (approximately 63 miles);

(2) between Berea and South Lorain, OH (18 miles);

(3) in the vicinity of Toledo, OH, in order to facilitate GTI access to connecting lines;

(4) in the vicinity of Chicago, so as to provide GTI with a connection to the Belt Railway of Chicago;

(5) between Bucyrus and Carrothers, OH (14 miles);

(6) at Frankfort, IN;

(7) betweeen Fort Wayne and Bluffton, IN, for a period of 3 years;

(8) at Kokomo, IN;

(9) between Binghamton and Suffern, NY (182 miles), with NSCR to attempt to secure for GTI trackage rights via NJ Transit between Suffern and Croxton, NY (27 miles); and

(10) between Harrisburg (Rockville) and Lurgan (Shippensburg), PA (55 miles), including a short segment on Amtrak, over which NSCR would attempt to secure trackage rights for GTI.

Schedule D of the same agreement provides that GTI will grant to NSCR trackage rights:

(1) in the vicinity of Bison Yard, Buffalo, NY, in order to provide NSCR with access to an automobile unloading facility;

(2) in the vicinity of Wallace Jct., PA, so as to provide NSCR with access to the Bessemer and Lake Erie Railroad;

(3) between Marion and Van Buren, IN (9 miles), to afford NSCR industry access on this line; and

(4) between Indianapolis and Fishers, IN (13 miles), also for industry access by NSCR.

However, the agreements that would apply to the trackage rights segments listed above had not been furnished to DOJ as of July 25, 1985 (see NS 001322); these would be Appendix A to Schedule B (GTI trackage rights on NSCR) and Appendix A to Schedule D (NSCR trackage rights on GTI) of the NS-GTI June 5, 1985, agreement. Although NS has said that it "expects the agreements to follow the standard format for such agreements" (000289 and 001322), absent the documents themselves, no firm conclusion can be reached as to the reasonableness of their terms.

The inherent risk of any trackage arrangement to the tenant is, of course, that it lacks the same degree of control over the operation of the line that it has over proprietary trackage. Train movements and track maintenance are controlled by the owner, as there is a risk that the tenant's trains will be given low priority or that the owner may not maintain the line to an acceptable standard.

Imputed operating costs

The GTI Business Plan employs BARNS to simulate GTI's operations in the base year 1983 on the existing system and the proposed operation in the pro forma year over the GTI system, including the acquired lines, in order to calculate operating statistics associated with each year. The difference between the statistics yields the incremental change in service units associated with the transaction, which are combined with 1983 unit cost data of GTI and CR or estimates developed by GTI to impute the incremental expenses incurred by GTI in implementing the proposed transaction. The specific unit costs developed by GTI include operating (crew) costs, fuel, per diem, freight car and locomotive maintenance, track maintenance, accessorial charges, transporation (non-operating) and general and administrative expenses. The unit costs are extended and reflected in the GTI financial pro formas to demonstrate the divestiture's positive outcome.

Consistency of presentation

The operating expense components presented in the GTI Business Plan for the acquired lines (Exhibit 14) were reviewed. The review traced the applied incremental expenses as calculated on detailed work papers (GT 000121-52) and presented in the pro forma financial statement contained in the GTI Business Plan. However, this review does not stand in place of the need to examine, verify and test the reasonableness of the calculations which underline GTI's presentation. The underlying values and their applicability to the instant application are not explained in GTI's work papers. Whether the use of such cost data is pertinent to the proposed operation is highly speculative given GTI's short history and the long history of weak financial performance by two of the GTI railroads, D&H and B&M. Of particular concern is GTI's apparent failure to present financial results on a uniform basis based on inconsistent cost and financial presentations made by GTI. At page 43 of the GTI Business Plan, it is stated that:

[T]he analysis utilized unit costs developed from costing data and results reported by The Guilford railroads or Conrail for 1983. . .

At page 49, the Business Plan describes GTI's results without the extension (Exhibits 11, 12 and 13), saying that "[a]ll results are expressed in 1985 dollars." GTI does not state whether the results for the acquired lines (Exhibit 14) ad GTI including the Western lines (Exhibits 15, 16, 17) employ 1983 or 1985 costs.

Determining that the financial results are consistently presented and properly take into account and reflect revenues and costs for a common period is vital to prudent analysis.

Maintenance of way

In response to DOJ's question concerning cost development, GTI provided documents GT 000123-28 and a description of the process in GT 001275 and 001276. These costs (categorized as Engineering Expenses in the Income Statement) are based upon a matrix used to develop maintenance of way expenses and average unit costs based upon practices and materials lifetimes of "eastern railroads".

GTI's array of track maintenance costs by segment (GT 000124), when analyzed on a per-mile basis, is wide-ranging but averages $16,290 per route mile, considerably higher than industry averages. Additional details are discussed in the Engineering Assessment section of this report. Except for casualty expense (discussed below) GTI's underlying maintenance of way expense elements (GT 000123) are unsupported.

GTI calculates casualty expense for BM and DH based upon their respective 1983 R-1 reports to the ICC (GT 000123). GTI included road property damage and casualty insurance expenses in the calculation of casualty expense for BM and DH. GTI employs a casualty expense of 55 cents per train mile for the lines to be acquired and MEC which approximates an average of the 50.6 cents and 61.74 cents per train mile reported by BM and DH, respectively. However, GTI has supplied no documentation with respect to use of this amount.

Maintenance of equipment

The percentages by which BAH predicts various GTI expenses of maintaining equipment (locomotives, cars and other equipment) will vary with traffic volume differ significantly for some accounts from percentages developed by the ICC for some accounts, as shown below:

With increasing service units (measures of output), a variability percentage higher than the BAH percentage would produce higher total cost, while use of a lower variability percentage would result in lower total cost. Since the BAH percentages are higher than the ICC percentages for most accounts (especially the higher value accounts), the BAH percentages could be expected to produce higher total MOE cost as compared with total MOE cost developed through use of the ICC percentages.

BAH employed BM variable unit costs in projecting MEC equipment maintenance expenses. Variable unit costs differ significantly from one railroad to another, as evidenced by BM variable cost of locomotive repair and maintenance of $0.855 per locomotive unit-mile as compared with DH cost of $0.37 per locomotive unit-mile. A preferable method would be to develop MEC variable unit costs from MEC records of expenses and service units.

BAH based its estimated locomotive depreciation on unit age and car depreciation on fleet size (the details of which are excluded from Equipment Costing Worksheets). BAH projected no increase in these costs to BM, DH and MEC, and excluded depreciation of owned locomotives and cars from the Projected Mechanical Expenses of Western Lines (lines to be acquired by GTI). BM, DH and MEC locomotive and car depreciation would vary more appropriately with locomotive unit-hours and car-days, respectively, and these depreciation expenses on additional owned locomotives and cars should be included in the analysis of MOE expenses. If additional locomotives and cars are to be leased, lease unit costs of locomotives and cars should reflect unit-hours and car-days, respectively, of leased equipment only (not total unit-hours and car-days).

Some errors were noted in the BAH Equipment Costing Worksheets. For instance, higher levels of DH expenses were projected for locomotive and car leases and rents but the additional expenses are not shown in the difference (DIFF) column. In developing MEC costs, which are bottomed on BM variable unit costs, fixed costs are erroneously shown at the BM dollar level. MEC fixed costs should, of course, be developed from appropriate MEC unit costs, service units and variability percentages.

Car-days projected by BAH appear unrealistically low as compared with car-miles. As shown below, the car-miles per car-day projected by BAH for BM, DH, MEC and GTI Acquired Lines are 2.0 to 2.8 times the 1980 average for U.S. Class I railroads:

Railroad(s):	Car-miles per car-day
BM	124.6
DH	138.7
MEC	117.3
GTI acquired lines	168.8
U.S. class I railroads—1980	60.2

Car hire

The estimate of net incremental car hire, $10,680,000, attributable to the inclusion of the lines which GTI will acquire (the so-called Western Extension) appears to be understated based on examination of car-day and car-mile estimates produced by BARNS. According to the BARNS results, the average car-mile per car-day ratio for the Base Case System is 104 miles per day; inclusion of the lines to be acquired by GTI increases the ratio to 143 car-miles per car-day.[11] By comparison, the 1983 combined BM and DH car-mile to car-day ratio (estimated using R-1 car hire data and average car-hire rates used in BARNS) is 69.6 miles per day. Furthermore, the difference in car-miles per car-day between the Base Case and the inclusion of the lines to be acquired by GTI reflects a car-mile per car-day ratio of 255 for the incremental traffic related to the GTI system expansion. Assuming that the estimate of car-miles is reasonably accurate, in all likelihood a sound assumption since car-miles are more reliably projected than car-days, then there appears to be an overstatement of the on-line, foreign car-days and therefore and underestimate of car-hire expense.

[11] Time at shipper sidings is excluded from ratios; insufficient data was available to allow a car-mile per car-day ratio which incorporated shipper time to be developed. From the data in hand it is estimated that inclusion of shipper time would decrease the ratios by not more than 5 percent.

Transportation expenses

GTI's transportation expenses consist of direct crews, non-operating fuel, loss and damage, joint facilities (terminals and trackage rights) and TOFC trailer terminal handling expenses.

Direct crew expense (GT 000144) is subdivided into through and unit trains (GT 000148), local trains (GT 000148-9); other trains (GT 000149) and yard crew (GT 000149). GTI states at page 44 of its Business Plan that crew costs are based on 1983 average pay rates and take into account base mileage pay, crew size and other pertinent factors. However, the rates per train mile employed on the backup documentation, calculated separately between base, additional and guaranteed miles, do not explain how the aforementioned unit costs were developed. Also unexplained is the basis for calculating the cost of constructive allowances, vacations and holidays.

Mileages corresponding to unit costs are separated between base, additional and guaranteed miles (GT 000145-7). Although the methodology of the calculation is readily apparent, the basis for its use is unexplained. Of concern is that the mileages shown therein (see GT line labelled as TRN miles costed from TRN STATS, File MITVT7AR, are greater than the mileages shown GT 000371-5 which are the statistics associated with the GTI Business Plan. In the cost calculation, for example, the train miles are 56, 30 and 0.2 percent greater than the incremental service units for the DH, BM and west, respectively. Although these differences are adjusted by an unexplained methodology on GT 000149, the fact that GTI advances two different statistics for train miles brings into question the validity of statistics employed in the GTI Business Plan.

The calculation of yard crews is displayed on GT 000149. However, there is no explanation as to the underlying cost development and service units and thus no basis for testing the validity of this cost.

GTI computes total crew costs by adding fringe benefits, materials and supplies and productivity fund expenses to total direct costs (GT 000144). Fringes and materials/supplies are calculated as 30 and 14 percent of total direct costs while the productivity fund calculation is shown on GT 000149. The 30 percent additive for fringe benefits appears reasonable based upon the 1983 experience of BM and DH. However, the 14 percent additive for materials and supplies cannot be supported without a more detailed explanation of its derivation. The expense associated with the productivity fund is unsubstantiated in the work papers although the GTI Business Plan at page 44 describes it as being similar to the existing Conrail plan.

Non-operating costs are detailed on GT 000151, which as noted elsewhere, fails to take into account the costs associated with New York Dock protection. Additionally, GTI offers no basis upon which to assess the validity of the annual salary and associated fringe benefits and materials supplies cost, as well as the reduction by one-half for joint facilities billed to others for towermen/operators which constitute transportation non-operating costs (GT 000151).

Fuel cost assumptions are set forth beginning at page 44 of the GTI Business Plan with the corresponding calculations provided on GT 000150. The GTI Business Plan at page 45 provides several fuel consumption figures, one of which is expressed as being per gross ton mile (GTM) while others are shown as being consumption per thousand GTM. The correct basis for consumption figures of the magnitude discussed by GTI is per GTM. Fuel consumption would, of course, be affected unfavorably and costs increased accordingly if GTI should operate less efficiently than planned.

Loss and damage expense is shown on GT 000143 and is equal to 0.569 percent of freight revenues. The reasonableness of the charges cannot be verified since the use of the relationship is unexplained.

Costs associated with trackage rights, terminal charges and TOFC trailer terminal handling charges are presented on GT 000143 and at page 47 of the GTI Business Plan are said to be based on existing contract rates or estimates. Trackage rights are based upon car-miles without explanation as to the derivation of the unit cost. Terminal and TOFC trailer terminal handling charges are undocumented, and thus open to question.

General and administrative

General and Administrative costs are developed on work paper GT 000152. The costs displayed are at the aggregate level by subcategory but GTI has not provided supporting documentation which verify reasonableness of its cost estimates.

Summary of GTI imputed incremental costs

Table 11 summarizes the incremental unit cost for each GTI rail division component based upon GTI's functional components of operating expense. In each cost component there is a wide discrepancy in the incremental unit cost among the individual GTI railroads. Since these are incremental costs, these differences may well be justifiable. However, it also may be that underlying assumptions and costs, which were not provided, do not reflect accurately the GTI operating expenses associated with its Business Plan. In order to be viable over the long term, GTI must achieve the goals stated in its Business Plan. The supporting documentation provided to date does support such a conclusion.

Comparison of annual operating statistics

The BARNS documentation reviewed contains statistical summaries of GTI's operating results with respect to a "Base Case" and a "Case 8A." The base Case appears to represent a simulation of operations and expenses of the three GTI railroads (BM, DH and MEC) as they existed in 1983. Case 8A represents the forecast results of these three carriers, respectively, as they would be modified by addition of the acquired lines to the GTI network, as well as a separate report with respect to the lines which GTI will acquire which treats those lines as if they comprised another GTI rail operating subsidiary. The only significant structural difference between the three existing GTI carriers in the Base Case and as described in Case 8A is that the new trackage rights between Binghamton and Croxton and between Harrisburg and Lurgan are shown in Case 8A as being part of the DH rather than the so-called Western Extension.

Table 12 displays key operating statistics, by GTI component (BM, DH, MEC, and Western Extension) and with respect to the system as a whole, derived from the 1983 Annual Reports (Form R-1) of BM and DH to the ICC and from the BARNS Base Case and Case 8A documentation. Form R-1 data with respect to MEC are not available because MEC, a Class II rail carrier, is exempt from filing Form R-1 under ICC regulations. BM and DH Form R-1 data can be expected to serve as a useful benchmark of Base Case reasonableness; in fact, many of the statistics shown compare very closely. Others, however, vary by significant percentages as the following array demonstrates:

More significant is the fact that Case 8A indicates a significant improvement in the productivity of resources (i.e., efficiency) flowing from addition of the Western Extension to the GTI system. For example, the GTI system empty return ratio improves by 30 percent, declining from 92.0 percent to 64.4 percent. On DH and BM, the corresponding improvement is 22 and 13 percent, respectively. While, as noted elsewhere, the Western Extension should be more efficient than GTI's present rail carriers, given the relative absence of branch lines and yards, improvements of this magnitude in the performance of the existing GTI railroads imply the existence of significant excess capacity (or inefficiency) in 1983 GTI operations.

Conclusions

Taken together, the assessments of the GTI operating plan's underlying assumptions and anticipated results described above leave open, at least until such time as more detailed and credible documentation is furnished, the question of whether the plan is, in fact, feasible. Both assumptions made and results forecast have an aura of optimism about them that appears inappropriate given the marginal character of GTI's present rail operations and the scale of the incremental routes sought by GTI in comparison with its existing regional network.

The operating plan does not exist in a vacuum, however; the reliability of its forecast results is only as good as that of the marketing plan on which its traffic projections rest. Any major variance between those projections and the business actually generated once operations have been implemented could alter the operating pattern and attendant expenses to a significant degree. This is of particular importance where, as in the present case, an acquiring carrier has offered employment to all current employees on the routes in question, and therefore has assumed a certain minimum level of labor expense regardless of traffic levels. While there is nothing about the GTI operating plan that is totally outside the realm of possibility, the probability of GTI's various assumptions being fulfilled remains a proper subject of further scrutiny.

MARKET REVIEW

The objective of the review of the marketing plan submitted by GTI is to allow a determination of whether the anticipated traffic flows will operate sufficient revenue to cover capital and operating cost which GTI will incur on a long-term basis. In reviewing that marketing plan, a preliminary order of magnitude assessment must be made of:

(i) whether the marketing plans [of GTI and P&LE] are consistent, i.e., are they complementary or do they contest for some or all of the same traffic;

(ii) whether the assumptions upon which each marketing plan relies are clearly defined and consistent with each plan; and

(iii) to what extent each divestee's marketing plan incorporates the effects of trackage rights and reciprocal switching agreements between itself and NS?

As a basis for the assessment of that plan, it is required that the analysis include:

(i) comparisons to services to be offered by each acquirer with those likely to be provided by competing railroads;

(ii) evaluation of each acquirer's ability to attract interline traffic; and

(iii) evaluation of potential diversions from divested properties to NSCR.

Proposed marketing plan

On June 30, 1985, in the ICC Staff Study, GTI submitted a document which can best be characterized as the GTI Business Plan. The facts which the GTI Business Plan and supporting exhibits purport to convey are not immediately discernible. Further, the documents supplied to DOJ by GTI in response to DOJ's May 9 and July 25, 1985 requests for information are cryptic and sometimes fail to support the Business Plan data. Those documents supplied to DOJ relating to the traffic flows employed by GTI in its marketing plan are summaries of various work of GTI's consultant, Booz, Allen & Hamilton Inc. (BAH). The documents were supplied by GTI's outside attorneys to DOJ in response to DOJ's requests for detailed information regarding the GTI marketing size.

Marketing assumptions

General Assumptions

GTI prefaces its discussion of the Marketing Plan with a summary of GTI's marketing strategy related to its existing rail system. GTI states that its present marketing strategy has resulted in a number of improvements which benefit both GTI and its shippers. Among the improvements cited by GTI are the establishment of dependable and efficient run-through trains (from Maine to Buffalo and Maine to Washington, DC) through implementation of single-system service by the GTI Rail Division which is comprised of the three GTI railroads, i.e., BM, DH and MEC. GTI also states that it has concentrated on the development of rate and service packages that are responsive to the transportation needs of its customers and that it will extend its present marketing strategy to new business which GTI expects to gain from expansion of its existing rail system.

GTI describes the addition of the lines which it will acquire as being analogous to its previous acquisition of the BM and DH railroads. Given the historically weak financial condition and relatively light traffic density of both BM and DH, they may provide an appropriate basis for comparison with the proposed acquisition of discrete rail lines by GTI. There is, however, a critical difference between the acquisition of operating companies, irrespective of their relative financial and traffic-generating strength or weakness, and the transaction now proposed.

In the present situation, GTI will purchase only certain discrete rail lines. Therefore, GTI will not acquire a functioning management team with experience in operating and managing the lines to be acquired and in dealing with shippers on the lines. Such management expertise will have to be developed, and developed very quickly, by the existing GTI management before GTI can implement its present marketing strategy on the lines it will acquire.

That present marketing strategy is described at page 30 of the GTI Business Plan as follows:

"Reduced to its essence, Guilford will meet the individual needs of each customer by tailoring rates and services."

In order to determine the needs of individual shippers served by the lines which GTI will acquire, GTI states that it will meet with as many potential customers on the lines to be acquired as possible prior to the start-up of operations, a process that GTI indicates it has already begun. In the meantime, GTI must depend upon NS and a reluctant Conrail to supply all of the operating and commercial data necessary to develop the GTI operating and marketing plans.

Specific Marketing Initiatives

(1) Solicitation of Shipper Input. It is difficult to assess the results of a traffic study which does not incorporate shipper data with respect to present shipping patterns and the combination of rates and services which GTI must offer to secure the traffic of individual shippers served by the lines which GTI will acquire. GTI recognizes that such shipper data can best be obtained by interviews and so states at page 31 of the Business Plan. The absence of such significant data in the development of the diversion and penetration assumptions which GTI employed in its traffic study suggests strongly that the GTI marketing plan is at present largely conjecture, long on goals and short on essential statistics such as quantifiable commodity, traffic flow and revenue data.

(2) Loaded Back Haul Traffic and Use of GTI Motor Carrier Subsidiary. In the Business Plan, GTI has identified two marketing initiatives which may produce traffic and revenue gains not yet included in its traffic study results. Those marketing initiatives include the possibility of using loaded back haul rate incentives to provide eastbound traffic and revenue in GTI freight cars which would otherwise be returned empty to the GTI system and aggressive use of the newly formed GTI motor carrier subsidiary, Guilford Motor Express, Inc. (GMX) in providing the trucking portion of GTI door-to-door TOFC services. GTI indicates that its motor carrier subsidiary will assume responsibility for "various activities and maintenance" at GTI intermodal facilities to assist in controlling costs at those installations.

(3) Presently Untapped Traffic and Revenue on Lines To Be Acquired. With respect to the lines to be acquired by GTI, the marketing plan states GTI's belief that those lines have been ignored in terms of business development by their present owners. No estimate of the amount of value of such traffic is offered by GTI in its Business Plan. However, GTI states that it will add additional marketing and sales personnel to provide timely service to customers located on the lines to be acquired and the additional expenses associated with an expanded GTI sales and marketing staff have been addressed in the GTI operating plan.

(4) Competitive Access to Certain Problem Markets. In certain markets of concern to DOJ such as Toledo, Indianapolis, Cleveland and Ft. Wayne, GTI states that its services will be competitive in terms of frequency, transit times and rates with those presently provided by NS or Conrail, citing GTI's access to the shippers at those locations via reciprocal switching or the use of other terminal arrangements. As discussed in the service analysis below, GTI's claims have yet to be substantiated.

(5) Competition in Certain Intermodal Markets. GTI states that it intends to compete directly with Conrail in the intermodal corridors between New England/Boston and Chicago/St. Louis and between New York and Chicago/St. Louis with schedules which will be comparable to those presently offered by Conrail in those corridors. GTI proposed to operate one daily train in each direction in each of those corridors. GTI states that it will offer rates which are competitive with the Conrail rates in those corridors and that the combination of GTI rates and services will enable GTI to capture a significant share of the intermodal business in these corridor markets.

(6) Extended Haul Traffic. GTI states that the lines to be acquired will give GTI "the benefit of single-system service and rate-making to its new western gateways at Chicago and St. Louis." [1] In addition to the traffic presently moving over the GTI system which could be routed over the new western gateways, GTI asserts that it will endeavor to attract other business by working with its new friendly interline rail connections at those gateways.

Trackage Rights and Reciprocal Switching

GTI's diversion and traffic penetration assumptions are set forth in Exhibit 2 of the Business Plan (reproduced here as Table 13) which contains two sets of diversion percentages defined as "unfavorable" and "favorable." (Only the "favorable" percentages appear to have been used by GTI in its traffic studies.) In its Exhibit 2, GTI has applied a diversion rate of 40 percent to interline traffic either originated or terminated at stations open to NSCR (or other carriers) through reciprocal switching or car haulage agreements. GTI also assigns a 60 percent diversion rate to interline traffic originated by GTI at exclusively served stations and interchanged to GTI's western connections and a 40 percent diversion rate to interline traffic which GTI will receive from such western connections for termination at exclusively served stations. The work papers supplied to DOJ with respect to such traffic employ a uniform diversion rate of 100 percent. GTI has supplied no explanation with respect to this apparent inconsistency between the work papers and its Exhibit 2.

Thus it appears that GTI may have overstated the traffic and revenue which it expects to gain at exclusively served stations on the lines to be acquired. Further, at certain stations open to NSCR through reciprocal switching on the lines which GTI will acquire, GTI will provide service for NSCR pursuant to car haulage agreements. The agreements provide that GTI will handle NSCR traffic which originates or terminates at those stations in GTI trains between those stations and the nearest interchange with NSCR. With respect to traffic at those stations, GTI's share is assumed to be 40 percent, irrespective of whether the traffic is originated by GTI or terminated by GTI; the NSCR share is assumed to be 60 percent uniformly.[2] GTI's use of uniform diversion percentage rates is inconsistent with Exhibit 2 of the GTI Business Plan and related text and ignores GTI's awareness of the fact that a rail carrier will have greater influence over traffic which the carrier originates than over traffic which it terminates. As GTI notes at page 23 of the Business Plan;

[i]n general, the origin carrier has more control over traffic than the destination carrier. This concept is reflected in the diversion percentages [displayed in Exhibit 2 of the Business Plan].

It is apparent that GTI has failed to consider the relatively lesser influence it will have with respect to traffic terminated at stations open to NSCR through reciprocal switching or car haulage. As a result it would appear that GTI may have overstated the traffic and revenue of this type which it is likely to realize from traffic on the lines to be acquired.

In addition to the apparent inconsistencies in GTI's analysis of the traffic which it expects to gain at stations on the lines which GTI will acquire from NSCR, GTI has ignored the fact that some of the so-called "exclusive" stations are served by railroads other than NSCR. The reason supplied for ignoring the presence of other potential rail competitors in the GTI traffic study is specious.[3] Tables 14 and 15 display (for CR and NS lines respectively) the list of 136 stations which GTI has classified as "exclusive" and identifies all other rail carriers which are listed in the Official Railway Guide as serving those stations. At 37 of those "exclusive" stations, there is another rail carrier listed; at 14 of the 37 stations, Conrail is listed as serving the station and at three of the 37 stations, NS is listed. Tables 16 and 17 list (for CR and NS respectively) 44 stations not included in Tables 14 and 15 on lines GTI will acquire which are open to NSCR and other railroads through reciprocal switching. Failure to consider the fact that other railroads have access to a large number of GTI's so-called exclusive stations may result in overstating traffic and revenues which GTI claims it will gain.

[1] This is a misuse of the "single-system service" concept which generally applies to the complete haul being handled by a single system as opposed to interline movements involving two or more systems.

[2] Within the scope of this preliminary analysis, a complete comparison of the GTI and NS diversion studies could not be accomplished.

[3] See document GT 000389 which contains the following statement with respect to the so-called "exclusive" stations. "Other railroads serve many of these same stations, but their rights are not affected by the transaction between GTI and NS, and thus were of no concern in our analysis." The issue is not whether another rail carrier's rights would be affected, but whether the presence of that carrier should have been considered in the application of GTI's diversion rules to the traffic potentially available at such stations.

Service Comparisons

Exhibit 8 of the GTI Business Plan (reproduced in Table 18) displays a comparison of through freight schedules which GTI will offer in nine origin-destination corridors with the services which Conrail presently offers in six of those corridors. Three of the corridors involve Portland, ME, Conrail does not publish through freight schedules which involve Portland, ME, because Conrail comes only as far east as Boston and does not serve that city.

In each of the nine corridors, through freight schedules are provided in each direction, i.e., westbound from an eastern origin to a western destination (or interchange) and eastbound from that same western location to the eastern destination.

New York/Chicago and Chicago/New York Corridor, TOFC Service

In this corridor, GTI services appear to be competitive with those presently offered by Conrail, both with respect to departure time and elapsed time between origin and destination.

Boston/Chicago and Chicago/Boston Corridor

In this corridor pair, GTI TOFC services appear to be less competitive, while GTI's manifest train schedule is superior to Conrail's present service (64 hours 48 minutes versus 71 hours westbound and 66 hours 35 minutes versus 89 hours 30 minutes eastbound). GTI TOFC services include 6-8 hours additional elapsed time and will require the movement of loaded TOFC trailers during evening rush hour periods at both origins. In addition, in the Chicago/Boston corridor, loaded TOFC trailers will not be available to consignees until the second afternoon, whereas a consignee using the Conrail service can pick up his TOFC trailer by mid-morning of the second day.

New York/St. Louis and St. Louis/New York Corridor, TOFC Service

In this corridor, GTI TOFC services appear to be non-competitive with respect to elapsed time (54 hours 43 minutes versus 35 hours westbound and 55 hours 27 minutes versus 32 hours 20 minutes eastbound), although GTI's later departure time will avoid the problem of rush hour traffic congestion for TOFC traffic originating in the New York market.

Boston/St. Louis and St. Louis/Boston Corridor, TOFC Service

In this corridor, it appears that Boston and New York traffic will be handled in the same train, and thus Boston service is susceptible to the non-competitive features with respect to elapsed time (59 hours 13 minutes versus 40 hours westbound and 63 hours 40 minutes versus 40 hours 55 minutes eastbound).

Portland/Chicago and Portland/St. Louis Corridors

In these corridors Conrail offers no through freight service, either TOFC or manifest trains and no comparison is possible.

Albany/Chicago and Chicago/Albany Corridor, Manifest Train Service

In this corridor, Conrail's westbound service is superior with respect elapsed time (62 hours versus 87 hours 33 minutes), while GTI's eastbound service is superior using the same criterion (58 hours 48 minutes versus 75 hours).

From the schedule comparison set forth above, it would appear that GTI's schedules (if they can, in fact, be met) will be competitive for TOFC traffic in the New York/Chicago corridor and for other general freight traffic in the Boston/Chicago corridor (both directions) and the Albany/Chicago corridor (eastbound only). GTI's through freight services appear to be non-competitive in the other corridors where comparisons are provided in Exhibit 8 of its Business Plan.

Capability of GTI System to Attract Interline Traffic

In its analysis of the traffic which the expanded GTI system will be able to attract, GTI separated the traffic which the expanded system will transport into three mutually exclusive categories:

(i) traffic on the lines to be acquired;

(ii) traffic currently moving via the existing GTI system which could move over the lines which GTI will acquire; and

(iii) traffic which GTI does not presently handle and which does not presently, but could, move over the lines to be acquired.

GTI's analysis of the traffic and revenues which the expanded GTI system is expected to realize from traffic in each of these categories is discussed below.

(1) GTI traffic gains from lines to be acquired

GTI states that it expects to gain $38.0 million in annual revenues from traffic originating or terminating on the western extension lines "immediately upon acquisition." [4] As shown in Table 19, the $38.0 million revenue gain is to be comprised of three elements, i.e., $11.1 million from lines to be acquired from NS; $19.8 million from lines to be acquired from Conrail; and $7.1 million from car haulage services which GTI will perform for NSCR. Complete traffic flow data have not been provided and all elements of their $38.0 million cannot be replicated from the GTI work papers.[5]

(3) GTI traffic gains from new business

The largest single component of GTI's total net gain from the expansion of its present system is the $79.6 million which GTI claims it will gain from traffic which will be entirely new to the expanded GTI system. Such traffic presently moves via other rail carriers or motor carriers. In this instance, Exhibit 3 supports the text of the Business Plan. Exhibit 3 displays a revenue gain of $79.558 million, distributed as follows:

	Millions
GTI Western extension gain	$44.608
DH gain	20.857
BM gain	9.849
MEC gain	4.244
Total	79.558

The sources of this major component of the total revenue which GTI estimates it will gain from the expansion of its present system through the acquisition of lines to be acquired from NSCR are described at page 21 of the GTI Business Plan, as follows:

New Intermodal Business.—The new routes to Chicago and St. Louis will put Guilford in a position to compete in the intermodal markets now dominated by Conrail between Boston-New England and the New York area in the East and Chicago and St. Louis gateways in the West.

New General Freight Business.—The new routes to the Chicago and St. Louis gateways will make it possible for Guilford to compete on certain traffic (grain, paper, autos and chemicals) currently moving between New England and the West or Midwest via truck or other railroads and not presently handled by Guilford.

New intermodal business

The largest component of the New Business which GTI states that it will gain is New Intermodal Business amounting to 73,770 carloads with GTI revenues of $61.458 million. The largest component of that traffic is comprised of 66,488 carloads of TOFC presently transported by other rail carriers which are not identified by GTI, while the balance of New Intermodal Business is expected to be diverted from motor carriers. The composition of the TOFC traffic to be diverted from present rail carriers is identifed in GTI's work papers at GT 000377 as follows:

GTI NEW INTERMODAL BUSINESS

Traffic lane	GTI carloads	GTI revenue (thousands)
Boston Area and Maine/Chicago	19,688	$17,077
Oak Island, NJ/Chicago	36,000	27,900
Maine/St. Louis, MO	1,800	1,651
Boston Area/St. Louis, MO	6,300	5,947
Oak Island, NJ/St. Louis, MO	2,700	2,567
Total GTI new TOFC business diverted from rail carriers	66,488	55,512

As indicated in the description of new Intermodal Business which appears at page 21 of the GTI Business Plan, the TOFC traffic which GTI estimates it can divert from other rail carriers will be diverted from Conrail. While there is no confirmation of this assumption in the GTI Business Plan or the supporting consultant work papers, Conrail is the only rail carrier which provides single-line service in this corridor.

The balance of TOFC traffic which GTI estimates it can divert is comprised of 7,282 carloads of predominantly westbound traffic with $6.316 million in GTI revenue which presently is transported by motor carriers in the traffic lane between Maine and the Boston area in the east and Chicago in the west.

NS's February diversion analysis estimated that GTI would capture five percent of CR's New Jersey TOFC traffic. In the July supplement to that analysis, NS observed that GTI trackage rights between Binghamton and Croxton would heighten [GTI's] ability to compete with Conrail . . . in particular, [for] intermodal traffic.

The TOFC traffic claimed by GTI amounts to over one quarter of Conrail's 1983 New Jersey TOFC traffic. Despite NS's observation about Southern Tier trackage rights, GTI's expectations seem overly optimistic.

It is problematic whether GTI will be able to attract such highly competitive TOFC traffic unless the service which GTI will perform in the indicated corridors will be consistently equivalent to the services which the combined NSCR system will offer. It is also unlikely that GTI will be able to offer reduced rates in order to attract such highly competitive TOFC traffic.

TOFC rates and services under the Staggers Act have been granted total exemption from ICC regulation, thereby giving rail carriers nearly total discretion in pricing such services. Rail carriers have already reduced rates on TOFC to levels which are only marginally profitable. Further, irrespective of any rate reductions which GTI may contemplate to attract such traffic, retaining significant volumes of TOFC business which GTI initially might secure through rate reductions will be problematic if the competitive service standard cannot be met consistently by GTI. Accordingly, little weight should be given to GTI's claimed revenues from diversion of this traffic either from other rail carriers or from motor carriers.

New general freight business

Of the 9,400 carloads of New General Freight Business estimated by GTI, only the Chicago and St. Louis gateways are identified as points at which the expanded GTI system would interchange such traffic with its new interchange partners. GTI work papers indicate that the composition of this new traffic is 8,700 carloads of paper westbound from origins served by GTI or the Bangor and Aroostok Railroad (BAR) in Maine and 700 carloads of eastbound miscellaneous traffic received from connections at Chicago and St. Louis and destined to stations served by GTI in New England and New York.

With respect to paper shipments, no destinations are identified; with respect to the miscellaneous traffic, neither origin nor destination are supplied. The only origin or destination identification provided by GTI is found in a BAH computer printout which does not agree with the summary work paper respecting these New General Freight traffic gains. No reconciliation has been provided by the consultant or GTI.

GTI apparently has not identified any new business which it might obtain at new interchanges located along lines it will acquire from NS or Conrail. Conspicuously absent is evidence of potential traffic which GTI might handle in joint service with NSCR, CSX, or Bessemer and Lake Erie (BLE) at such intermediate interchange locations.[11]

Such traffic would fall within the New General Freight category since it would be comprised entirely of traffic which did not move over those lines in the historical traffic records of NS or Conrail and thus would not have been analyzed by GTI as either extended haul traffic or traffic to be acquired through the GTI system expansion.

At page 21 of its Business Plan, GTI indicates that automobiles are among the New General Freight Business which GTI will divert from other rail carriers. Manufactured automobiles are transported on specially equipped flat cars from a variety or origins in southern Michigan, none of which will be served directly by the expanded GTI system. The GTI work papers supplied with respect to that segment of GTI New Business identify only box car shipments of paper and miscellaneous freight; shipment of finished automobiles which are transported on automotive flat cars equipped with damage-inhibiting shrouded racks are not mentioned.

[11] As previously noted, NS's February analysis estimated diversions of about 14,500 cars with loss of $12.6 million associated with NSCR traffic interchanged with GTW and P&LE/MGA.

Connection with Pittsburgh and Lake Erie

At pages 20 and 21 of its Business Plan, GTI states that P&LE will acquire certain NS lines in Pennsylvania and Ohio and that GTI assumes that P&LE will be a friendly connection at interchanges which GTI has identified at Wellington, Cleveland and Ashtabula, OH. In Exhibit 3 of the GTI Business Plan, GTI indicates that traffic which it will gain from its interchange with P&LE amounts to 4,000 cars with GTI revenues of $3.036 million. The source, routing and revenue associated with the joint GTI/P&LE traffic are not identified in the work papers supplied to DOJ in support of Exhibit 3. As has been noted elsewhere, the Divertiture Agreement would not seem to grant GTI the right to interchange at Wellington which is on a trackage rights segment.

Potential diversion of traffic from GTI by NSCR

GTI has identified the amount of traffic and revenue it expects to lose through diversion by the combined NSCR system. The results of such diversion by NSCR are set forth in Exhibit 3 of the GTI Business Plan for traffic diverted from the expanded GTI system, as well as traffic which will be rerouted by NSCR. Traffic which will be diverted from the expanded GTI system is displayed separately with respect to "General Freight" ($10.551 million) and "TOFC" ($0.242 million). Traffic moving via the present GTI system which will be rerouted by the combined NSCR system so as to shorthaul the GTI system is reported under the heading "Enola Reroutes" ($0.939 million). Thus, GTI losses to the combined NSCR system associated with "Total Diversions and Reroutes" in Exhibit 3 amount to $11.732 million.

FINANCIAL REVIEW

The pro forma financial statements of GTI have been examined for the following:

1. The adequacy of data presented,
2. Their consistency with accepted accounting principles,
3. Their consistency with marketing and operating plans, and
4. The realism of the results, also in light of marketing and operating plans.

These analyses are intended to assist DOJ in determining whether GTI is financially capable of operating rail service over the divestiture properties. It is apparent that the pro formas are insufficiently supported to affirm GTI's financial viability. On their face, they indicate that operations would be viable, however, the genesis of the underlying data is frequently too obscure to properly validate them. The projected income levels are also insubstantial and profitability is highly sensitive to any abrupt changes in the economy. Further, the pro formas are based upon optimistic traffic projections and cost ascertainment reflecting expectations of substantial improvements in efficiency. Failure to realize these gains would imperil GTI's financial viability.

Description of pro formas

The GTI Business Plan contains three sets of pro forma financial statements which were the focus of our review. Specifically they are:

1. GTI's Rail Division pro formas covering the consolidated results of the MEC, BM and DH. The Business Plan displays the consolidated pro formas showing actual results for 1984 and planned results by year for 1985 through 1989 in Exhibits 11 (Balance Sheet), Exhibit 12 (Operating Plan), and Exhibit 13 (Statement of Changes in Financial Position which covers only 1985-1989). All results are expressed in 1985 dollars.

2. A financial statement covering the projected results for Western Lines (Extension), displayed in Exhibit 14, which shows the Operating Plan results of only the effect of Western Lines acquisition on the GTI Rail Division for four years 1986 through 1989. Although not explicitly stated, it has been assumed that this exhibit reflects results in 1985 dollars.

3. Combined financial statements for the current GTI Rail Division and the Western Lines displaying actual results for 1984 and planned results for 1985 through 1989. Exhibits 15, 16 and 17 provide the Balance Sheets, Operating Plan and Pro forma Statement of Changes in financial position respectively for the combined GTI and Western Lines. These are assumed to be stated in 1985 dollars.

4. Other Underlying Data Relied Upon: The analysis of the pro forma financial results presented in Exhibits 11 through 17 of the GTI Business Plan is based upon the description of the proposed transaction contained in the GTI Business Plan, as well as supplementary materials supplied to DOJ in support of the GTI Business Plan:

(i) Assumptions related to GTI's projected five year plan;[1]

(ii) Details and assumptions of operating costs;[2]

(iii) Annual statistics for the base case and the base case with western extensions;[3]

(iv) Description of methodology for maintenance of way, mechanical and per diem costs;[4] and

(v) Description of basis for reduced labor costs.[5]

In addition, BM and DH 1983 Form R-1 Annual Reports to the ICC were analyzed in the review of GTI financial results.

Consistency with accepted accounting methods

The pro forma financial statements prepared by GTI are presented in an ordered, rational and coherent manner and appear to be internally consistent with the assumptions of the engineering, operating, and marketing plans. Additionally, the underlying work papers[6] can be traced to the pro forma results for the western lines[7] and the effects of these incremental revenues expenses and balance sheet items can be traced from the pro forma results for the existing lines[8] to the pro forma results for GTI including the acquired lines.[9] In this respect the GTI pro formas conform with accepted accounting principles.[10]

Determined that the financial results are adequately and consistently presented and properly reflect revenues and costs for the same period of time, is important in meeting a standard of consistency. If GTI has failed to present revenue and cost data on a consistent basis (i.e. comparing revenues, costs, and capital expenditures for the same year) as the review indicates, then its pro formas are inadequate. Accordingly, the financial results may be deficient to the extent that inflation assumptions or changes in year to year cost levels are not consistently accounted for in the calculation. Since the work papers supplied to DOJ do not detail the actual calculation and indexing of unit cost it is possible to verify whether all unit cost have been consistently calculated at 1985 levels.

A review of GTI financial statements disclosed that no provision for state and federal income taxes (current and deferred) was included in the determination of net income.[11] No explanation is given by GTI concerning the lack of any provision for taxes. This is a particularly troublesome omission since the combined Western Line and Rail Division Income Statement (Exhibit 16) estimates a total net income (exclusive of taxes) for the period 1985 through 1989 of $98.8 million. GTI's 1983 audited Financial Statements indicate net operating loss carryforwards and investment tax credit carryforwards of $21.0 million and $2.3, respectively for financial reporting purposes are available for 1985 and subsequent years.[12] Based on this information alone, we estimate approximately $25.3 million of forecasted profits would be offset by tax credits. The remaining $73.5 million of estimated net income, assuming no subsequent tax credits, would require a computation for financial statements of a provision for income taxes and adjustment downward of GTI's forecasted net income. Accordingly, based on our review of available information we conclude:

(1) GTI's financial statements do not adequately reflect income taxes and may be at variance with GAAP and

(2) New income as reported may be overstated, although the magnitude is unknown,

(3) The financial profitability ratios set forth in this section may be overstated because of (2) above, and

(4) The effect on cash flow generated from operations cannot be estimated but probably would not be substantial because of timing differences existing between depreciation for tax versus financial accounting. That is, estimated net income would be reduced, however cash flow from operations (the sum of net income plus the provision for deferred taxes) would probably be the same as GTI has estimated for 1985-1989.

Adequancy of pro formas

The pro forma balance sheet and income statement, excluding the acquired lines, which appear in Exhibits 11 and 12 of the GTI Business Plan present actual results for 1984, and projected results for 1985 through 1989. The pro forma statement of changes in financial position, excluding the acquired lines (Exhibit 13), presents projected results for 1985 through 1989.

Despite a thorough review of each of these statements, it cannot be determined whether they are adequate since GTI has provided no data in support of them. Since they are based upon projections, one must understand the critical assumptions which affect the bottom line (profitability) in order to judge their adequacy in predicting whether their goals can be met.[13]

The GTI Business Plan also presents (in Exhibit 14) the pro forma operating results projected for the acquired lines for 1985 through 1989. The incremental operating expense components presented in Exhibit 14 were reviewed; it was then possible to trace the incremental expenses associated with the acquired lines as calculated on the detailed work papers and reflected in the exhibit. In reviewing incremental expenses, GTI's calculation of incremental annual statistics associated with the acquired lines in the supporting backup work papers[14] was first replicated; it was then verified that these annual statistics were those actually employed in GTI's calculation of incremental costs for the acquired lines.[15]

At the next step it was verified, when sufficient detail was available from public sources, that unit costs were properly calculated by GTI as explained in detail elsewhere in this report. The next step was to replicate GTI's calculation of total incremental costs by multiplying the incremental annual statistics and corresponding unit costs. Finally, the total incremental costs were replicated and traced to the pro forma operating results for the acquired lines.[16] The underlying unit costs and operating statistics and their applicability to the Business Plan are not explained thoroughly in GTI's work papers. The review performed does not replace the need to examine, verify and test in detail the reasonableness of the underlying GTI assumptions on unit costs and operating statistics.

The GTI Business Plan presents pro forma results (balance sheet, income statement and statement of changes in financial position) for GTI including the acquired lines. These pro forma results were developed by adding the incremental revenues, expenses and balance sheet items associated with the acquired lines to the existing five year plan for GTI excluding the acquisition.

It was possible to replicate these pro forma results by combining the incremental revenues, costs and balance sheet items associated with the line with the pro forma results excluding the acquired lines. However, since the information as provided to support the existing five revenue and expense projections is inadequate, it must be concluded that these pro forma results suffer a similar deficiency—that these statements rest upon undisclosed and (with the available data) unverifiable GTI assumptions.

Realism and reasonableness of pro formas

Beyond the sufficiency of underlying documentation and the method by which the pro formas have been prepared, two major issues with respect to the financial statements are whether the results, as shown, are (1) indicative of financial viability and (2) realistic. To a large extent, these issues are intertwined; the pro formas do not, and would not be expected to indicate impending insolvency. The margin of error in financial assumptions which would permit continued operations is, however, susceptible to analysis, which may shed light on the question of whether there should be reasonable expectations of viability.

[13] For example, approximately $14.2 million of capital grants remain available for 1985 and 1986 pursuant to an agreement between GTI and New York State. (See GTI's 1983 Annual Report to Stockholders, note 9 to the Financial Statements.) The remaining balance of the capital projects of $26.6 million, as incorporated in the pro formas, could not be validated or tested for reasonableness because of insufficient supporting information. If such a capital fund shortfall of this magnitude does occur during the 1985-1989 forecast period, the financial implications would raise serious questions on GTI's ability to raise funds given its projected liquidity problems discussed below.

Ratio analyses can illuminate the strength of the projected financial results as presented; the solidity of the results may be weighed by reference to both the ratio analyses and the discussion of consistency with operating and marketing plans.

Table 21 displays financial ratios and measures utilized to test the viability of GTI's acquisition. It is important to note that these ratios and measures are subject to any limitations which also pertain to the underlying data supplied by GTI. Specifically, the basis of GTI's proposed plan is the existing five year plan. The GTI Business Plan and supporting work papers provide little documentation as to the assumptions and estimates provided therein. To the extent that the existing five-year plan is overly optimistic, GTI will be unable to achieve the goals in its Business Plan. Secondly, BM and DH, as they have existed historically, are not the railroads they are today. GTI has effected a financial reorganization of each of those carriers and the effects of those reorganizations need to be compared with historical results. GTI needs to provide explanations which would properly reflect the historical results. Finally, GTI fails to provide sufficient justification with respect to both anticipated revenues and expenses flowing from its acquisition.

The current ratio, or ratio of current assets to current liabilities, reflects GTI's projections of negative working capital (an excess of current liabilities over current assets), in each year, both with and without the acquired lines. This ratio is at a low level, 0.86, in 1984. Although it improves to 0.96 by 1989 according to the pro forma balance sheets with the acquired lines, it remains weak. While such a situation is not unusual in the rail industry, particularly among smaller and weaker carriers, it does cause concern since GTI may be unable to withstand the impaired financial results should it fail to achieve its revenue and expense projections. Inability to meet current obligations and expenses would probably force GTI to seek additional debt financing beyond that planned, probably at higher interest rates.

The quick ratio, which is the current ratio excluding less liquid current assets, is also less than might be desired. It too shows that GTI has insufficient liquid assets to meet current obligations and expenses. A commonly used rule of thumb is that current assets minus inventories should at least equal current liabilities, producing a quick ratio of 1; GTI's quick ratio averages approximately .70.

An analysis of GTI's financial statements disclosed a possible debt repayment problem beginning in 1988. Generally, lenders and investors prefer that depreciation expenses generate sufficient charges to cover the current portion of long-term debt. However, in the case of the acquired liens, GTI will have $14,991,000 in payments due in 1989 and only $10,636,000 in depreciation charges available. Thus, current debt payments will exceed cash flow made available from depreciation by 41 percent, which will have to be made up from net operating income.

Examining the balance sheet for the acquired lines, one finds that the debt/equity ratio of GTI reaches its peak in 1986 with a ratio of 53.47 percent.[17] By the end of 1989, GTI's balance sheet indicates that this ratio would be 35.15 percent or an impressive improvement of 34 percent in three years. Given GTI's negative working capital, inability to meet current debt obligations from depreciation charges, and need to achieve the goals stated in its Business Plan to generate cash, the GTI results may be unobtainable. Even though its debt/equity ratio is projected to be respectable, GTI may be unable to use debt financing to meet cash shortfalls due to encumbrances on the property.

Times Fixed Charges Earned is a ratio that divides income plus interest expense by fixed charges. This ratio indicates a firm's ability to handle its interest expense and long-term leases by showing how much excess income is earned after these expenses are paid. A ratio of 1 means that the company earns just enough to pay off fixed charges and has no profits left. GTI starts at a relatively respectable 2.29 in 1984, but falls to the dangerous level of 1.21 in 1986. At this point, very small deviations in actual from projected results could result in either default or the necessity of obtaining new, high-risk debt.

GTI does claim that this ratio would rise to 3.89 by 1989 with the Extension. Without the Extension, and the consequent new debt requirements in 1986, times fixed charges is projected to increase to 6.26 by 1989.

Return on Equity stands at a low, but not unacceptable, level of 6.23 percent in 1984 and with the acquired properties this is projected to improve to a strong 19.61 percent by 1989. Without the Extension, the improvement is only to 15.40 percent. This increase is predicated on optimistic claims for future revenue, containment of expenses, and zero income taxes.

The operating ratio, or ratio of operating expense to operating revenue is derived from the income statements of Exhibits 12 and 16. By 1989 GTI expects its operating ratio to be 90.13 percent in the case of the acquired lines, which would be a significant improvement from an operating ratio of 98.58 percent in 1984. Such an improvement would allow $70.67 of each carload's revenue (based upon GTI's estimate of $716 per car) to be available for fixed charge coverage. Even a 90 percent operating ratio is high by industry historical standards, although not particularly out of line with industry financial results of the past five years. How precarious such a ratio is, however, depends largely on the level of fixed expenses (principally interest payments) and the volatility of a given carrier's traffic and revenue base.

A 90 percent operating ratio indicates that maintenance of a positive net income would be very sensitive to traffic levels. Because of the relative invariability of several expense categories, a shortfall in projected revenues would not result in a corresponding decline in expenses. The operating ratio would be expected to increase markedly with revenue reduction, eviscerating operating income, and threatening the carrier's ability to cover fixed charges.

While a carrier enjoying a lower operating ratio is not immune from this effect, it indicates that, all else being equal, the margin of protection for creditors is greater. Also, a low operating ratio is an indication of intrinsic viability of railroad operations. Even were such a carrier to become insolvent, as might result from an excessive debt burden, the operations themselves would in all likelihood continue through and after reorganization. The same cannot be said of rail operations which lack the ability to consistently produce strong operating results.

Consistency with marketing plan

The financial pro formas provided by GTI accurately track its assumptions with respect to traffic; thus, internal inconsistency between portions of its Business Plan is not at issue here. However, defects, generally characterizable as over-optimism in the marketing plan, cause serious concern that GTI's financial results may be more sanguine than reality would warrant.

No attempt is here made either to specify what the effect on the financial pro formas may be of questionable traffic assumptions as embodied in the marketing plan or to recast the financial statements based on substituting independent judgment for GTI's. Nevertheless, a recitation of two of the marketing plan's major components (discussed in greater detail above) may illuminate potential overstatements of revenues and income.

1. GTI claims immediate revenue gains of $38 million from traffic originating or terminating on the western extension lines.[18] These gains are predicated on an analysis which employs a uniform 40 percent diversion rate for traffic at stations open to NSCR through reciprocal switching, irrespective of whether the traffic originates or terminates at stations on the lines which GTI would acquire. Further inadequacies have been noted with respect to GTI's treatment of reciprocal switching rights granted to NSCR. Thus it appears that the $38 million claimed by GTI is overstated by an amount not quantifiable from the documents provided. The credibility of this diversion rate is questioned at greater length in our analysis of the marketing plan.

2. GTI asserts that it will gain $79.6 million in revenues from traffic which will be entirely new to the expanded GTI system. $61.4 million of this figure would be from new intermodal business, diverted principally from other rail carriers. As discussed above in the analysis of the marketing plan, the actual capture of this business is problematic, and the contribution to net income of the traffic that is captured may be negli-

[17] As previously discussed, GTI does not appear to have accounted properly for income taxes; its 1984–1989 financials make no provision for such taxes. Any change in this assumption would have a negative impact on GTI's debt/equity ratio, times fixed charges earned ratio, and return on equity.

gible. This is because intermodal traffic is highly sensitive to service quality as well as price; GTI will have great difficulty matching competitors' service levels and rates on intermodal traffic (which is generally already poorly remunerative due to heavy competition from motor carriers). Given the precariousness of GTI's financial position even as projected, the heavy reliance on potential intermodal revenues as evidence of financial viability of itself creates cause for concern.

In sum, the financial statements are accurate representations of the marketing plan, but the assumptions underlying the marketing plan are questionable in several respects. Thus, the reasonableness of the financial projections cannot be supported from the aggregate of the materials provided by GTI.

Consistency with operating plan

As is the case with its marketing plan, GTI's financial statements do not disagree with its operating plan. Similarly, important assumptions underlying the operating plan, which could not be tested for reasonableness, are incorporated in the pro formas. Set forth below are the areas found questionable in the analysis of the GTI operating plan and which could have a substantive effect on the pro forma statements:

1. Labor protection costs (payments) appear to be substantially understated given the planned level of manning and the number of people currently employed.

2. Maintenance of equipment expense is a "mixed" situation. Unit costs employed appear to be conservative and could result in an overstatement of total expenses. However, certain operating statistics (car-days and car-miles) appear unrealistically low which would result in understatement of expenses.

3. Car hire payable—(Per diem payments) appear to be understated because on line foreign car-days are understated.

4. Costs of rehabilitation and construction of connections is estimated by GTI to be approximately $58 million with a possible addition of $20 million to a total of $78 million, and by CR, $159 million. That latter figure, while perhaps overstated, appears to be more accurate. The possible understatement by GTI of these capital costs by several tens of millions of dollars would necessitate the raising of much, now unanticipated, capital, the cost of which would severely reduce net income. Alternatively, curtailment of rehabilitation or a "quick fix" would probably have significant implications for the GTI Marketing Plan and revenue forecasts.

5. The ability of GTI to meet its proposed train schedules is doubtful. If GTI's ability to compete on a service basis for much of its projected new traffic is diminished, its traffic volume and hence revenue is likely to be reduced as well.

6. The absence of any provision for income tax liability for the years 1985 through 1989 seriously undermines the credibility of the GTI estimated net income for each of those years.

Pittsburgh & Lake Erie Railroad Engineering Assessment

Facilities to be divested

Line segments and associated yards to be acquired by P&LE are listed in Table 22. The trackage rights which P&LE would receive are arrayed in Table 23. Both tables are derived from the P&LE/NS Divestiture and Acquisition Agreement of April 19, 1985. P&LE is also to be assigned the lease of the PWV from Connellsville, PA to Pittsburgh Jct., OH (111.2 miles of main line plus 11.4 miles of associated branch lines), thereby replacing NS subsidiary Norfolk and Western Railway Co., as the lessor of this property.

In the documentation made available by P&LE, CR, and NS (either publicly or through DOJ), information in varying degrees of completeness and detail was provided as to: (i) the condition of the lines to be acquired or over which trackage rights are to be granted; (ii) route mileage and track mileage; (iii) locations of new connections required to implement P&LE's plan; (iv) cost to construct required new connections; (v) signal systems; (vi) locations and conditions of yards to be acquired by P&LE; (vii) cost to rehabilitate lines and existing connections; and (viii) annual normalized track maintenance cost. No cost data were supplied as to the PWV. There is no significant discussion of structures, buildings, shops, communications facilities, condition of signal systems and any costs (rehabilitation or maintenance) associated with them.

The most comprehensive description of these facilities to be acquired by P&LE and the associated costs of maintenance, upgrading and construction is provided by CR Witness W.F. Wulfhorst in a series of tabulations in his testimony in the ICC Staff Study.[1] The cost information in these tabulations is said to have been developed by skilled engineering personnel after undertaking field inspections.[2] The more limited data supplied by P&LE and NS provide some useful comparative information. Because CR data are so comprehensive compared to data submitted by P&LE or NS, they are the basis for much of the present analysis. A summary of Mr. Wulfhorst's maintenance, rehabilitation and construction cost estimates is presented in Table 24.

Normalized Maintenance Estimates

CR estimated annual maintenance costs of the P&LE expansion lines at two levels: Level A, 11 to 15 million gross ton miles per mile annually (MGTM) and Level B, 0 to 5 MGTM.[3]

These categories appear to be adequate for the purpose of establishing a range of potential annual maintenance expense levels, representative of operating approximately three to five trains daily in each direction (Level A) or one train (or less) daily in each direction (Level B).

Conrail provided no work papers which indicate the method used to develop its maintenance estimates; the CR estimates appear to be consistent with industry average based on the relevant FRA track class. Annualized CR unit costs for all lines which P&LE will acquire are displayed below:

Level A:
Dollars per route mile $9,649
Dollars per main track mile 9,527
Level B:
Dollars per route mile 8,649
Dollars per main track mile 8,539

P&LA has not supplied any data which could be used as a basis of comparison.

Required Rehabilitation Estimates

CR specifies two levels of rehabilitation cost in its testimony in the ICC Staff Study. Those levels are defined as "new", meaning that all new materials would be utilized, and "fit", meaning that, to the extent possible, second-hand materials would be used. CR states, however, that "[i]t is highly unlikely the vast amount of fit material required would be available".[4] This CR statement appears to be generally true for rail, given the limited amounts of fit rail currently available in the second-hand market. While CR (nor any other party) provides any data with respect to the rail component of total rehabilitation costs, it appears that an average of the "fit" and "new" costs would be appropriate in this analysis. Use of an average comprehends a mix of new and suitable used rail at an average cost in assessing the propriety of using CR's estimates as a surrogate for P&LE rail rehabilitation costs.

The documents examined contain no details with respect to such proposed work elements as rehabilitation work (ties, rail, bridges, signals, etc.). Some information has been provided regarding the condition of rail lines which indicates necessary rehabilitation. However, the data are not sufficiently detailed to yield a definitive estimate.

As shown in Table 24, line rehabilitation costs total $31,743,556 for new material or $23,051,146 for fit materials; the average rehabilitation cost is $27,397,351. Yard rehabilitation is treated below.

Investment Requirements

The following estimates of connection and yard rehabilitation cost estimates are from both CR and P&LE sources. Where CR supplies both "fit" and "new" estimates, the average is shown:

Engineering judgments

Normalized maintenance

P&LE did not supply any estimates of normalized maintenance cost. In their absence, CR estimates (which reasonably compare with industry averages) were employed. The lines which P&LE will acquire will carry relatively light traffic density and infrequent train service; therefore, CR "Level B" estimates were used. For the lines which P&LE will acquire, the estimate reported in Table 24 is $4,093,537.

CR also supplied estimates of the annualized maintenance cost on the NSCR lines over which P&LE will operate under trackage rights. The P&LE/NS trackage right agreements supplied by NS to DOJ provide that NSCR will be responsible for track maintenance; P&LE's share of maintenance expense is an implicit part of its 17 cents per car-mile payment to NSCR.[5] Therefore CR's estimate is inappropriate.

Maintenance expense estimates related to facilities other than track (e.g., signals or structures) have not been provided by P&LE (or CR). It can only be assumed that these items have been included in the line maintenance cost estimates supplied to DOJ by CR and P&LE.

Rehabilitation and new construction

P&LE submitted an estimate of $3,683,807 for upgrading the line between Falls Junction and North Canton a portion of the segment between Cleveland and Harmon.[6] CR's estimate for the entire Cleveland-Harmon segment was $2,007,305.[7] P&LE also supplied an estimate of $2,231,705 to upgrade the PC&Y; CR does ot indicate whether any upgrading is required. The CR estimates for line rehabilitation are $31,743,556 for new material and $23,051,146 for "fit" material (Table 24). As noted above, the average of $27,397,351 is appropriate. In view of the absence of substantiation and the incompleteness of the P&LE estimates, it appears prudent to employ the CR total estimate amount of $27,397,351 for line rehabilitation.

P&LE provided estimates of the cost of new and rehabilitated connections; CR also provided its estimate of those costs. For a somewhat different group of connections, P&LE total estimate is approximately $4,280,000, exclusive of two optional connections costing less than $1,500,000. Conrail's total estimate (for a different group of connections) is either $2,496,665 for Alternative A or $2,354,500 for Alternative B. In view of the uncertainty with respect to which connections P&LE will construct, none of these estimates are regarded as firm.

Operating Plan Review

In examining P&LE's operating plan, the same fundamental questions referred to in the discussion of GTI's operating plan have been considered, i.e., consistency of the plan with the physical capabilities of the routes involved, treatment of yard and terminal issues, service capabilities of the routes, and labor-related issues.

PROPOSED OPERATING PLAN

The P&LE operating plan is extremely sketchy in terms of both its publicly-disclosed level of detail and the supporting documentation furnished DOJ. The primary public source of information on this plan is the Opening Verified Statement of Dr. D.E. Matzzie submitted May 24, 1985, in the ICC Staff Study. This document lists the endpoints between which P&LE would operate train service train service on acquired lines, points at which yard service would be provided, and the locations at which employees in various crafts would be retained to support transportation operations (but not the numbers of employees required). Exhibits 2, 3 and 4 of Dr. Matzzie's statment, which may fairly be said to represent the sum and substance of P&LE's operating plan as now available, are reproduced herein as pp. 1, 2 and 3 of Appendix B, respectively.

Assumptions underlying operating plan

The available data are insufficient to understand or assess the P&LE operating plan's underlying assumptions. The textual description of the plan consists of less than 2 pages in Dr. Matzzie's Opening Verified Statement. This test recapitulates the information contained in his Exhibits 2, 3 and 4. Information furnished DOJ and reviewed subsequent to that date does not cure this deficiency. P&LE provided a functional description of the various lines to be acquired (PL 000039-42), a description of the anticipated changes in its current operations (PL 000044), a service comparison (current N&W versus proposed P&LE, PL 000050-1) and related materials (PL 000052-6 and 000060), but these data are so general as to preclude an understanding of the operating plan itself or its key assumptions. P&LE states the speed limits are on these lines to be acquired (PL 000052-3), but does not state P&LE's transit time assumptions with respect to trains that it would operate over these lines. Similarly, the capacities of various yards to be acquired are provided by P&LE's (PL 000060); the numbers of cars which P&LE assumes would be or could be switched at these facilities are not supplied. In short, the P&LE's operating assumptions have not been spelled out in sufficient detail to render an assessment of their validity.

Imputed operating costs

In order to evaluate costs associated with a carrier's operating plan, the following data would be required at a minimum:

(1) frequency of train service on each route in the system;

(2) projected numbers of empty and loaded cars to be carried by each train;

(3) projected numbers of locomotive units required on each train, including helper locomotives where needed;

(4) numbers of cars to be switched at each yard;

(5) number of yard crews to be employed at each yard;

(6) numbers of cars to be originated, terminated or interchanged at each station;

(7) a blocking strategy specifying classifications of cars to be made at each yard;

(8) numbers of train and engine (T&E) service personnel required on each train and yard crew;

(9) numbers of supervisory, clerical and other support personnel required; and

(10) the unit cost of each resource required to carry out the proposed operation.

Data submitted to DOJ by P&LE do not satisfy these requirements. While there is reference in Exhibit 2 of Dr. Matzzie's Opening Verified Statement to daily train service on certain of the lines P&LE will acquire, this is insufficient by itself to render an estimate of the cost of providing service. Other train services are described as being provided "as required"; this could mean multiple trips daily or just a few trips each year. In short, P&LE itself presented no information as to the cost associated with its operating plan, nor has it furnished sufficient data from which such costs might be constructed.

Feasibility of operating plan

Since P&LE's operating assumptions and anticipated operating costs have not been disclosed, a judgment as to the plan's feasibility cannot be made. For example, train schedules have not been furnished; therefore, it is not known whether they reflect the physical capabilities of the lines to be acquired or whether they will be competitive with other carriers. Because only lists of yard facilities are available, with qualitative references to their proposed utilization, it cannot be determined whether they will be adequate to support the proposed operation. Further, because the labor requirements of the expanded system have not been provided, no conclusion is possible as to the feasibility of prospective changes in labor arrangements. This lack of information simply precludes an assessment of the P&LE operating plan's feasibility.

Circuitry

Given the paucity of available materials, the principal analysis that can be made of the P&LE operating plan relates to the relative circuitry of its routes between major traffic generators and interchange points and those of its competing carriers. While the character of P&LE's proposed traffic and operations apparently would be different from GTI's in that the P&LE will not participate in the movement of time-sensitive automotive or intermodal traffic,[1] the fact remains that P&LE would be in competition with NSCR throughout its expanded service territory, as it is with CR today on its existing lines.

Table 25 compares the relative mileage of P&LE's acquired lines with those operated by CR today, which would be the principal routes retained by NSCR in P&LE's expanded service area, between: (1) Toledo and Cleveland; and (2) Youngstown, Pittsburgh, Canton and Steubenville. As can be seen, in six of these eight cases, P&LE would have the shorter route; only in the Youngstown-Toledo and Cleveland-Pittsburgh rail corridors would NSCR have the advantage. However, this is not to say that P&LE's service would likely be superior to NSCR's. If NSCR has sufficient traffic to justify more than one train daily on these routes, and if its blocking strategy keeps cars out of intermediate yards, it could offer faster service than P&LE despite the relative circuitry of its routes. Absent P&LE's train schedules and blocking plan (which have not been provided) such a comparison cannot be made.

Trackage rights issues

Under its agreement with NS, P&LE would be granted overhead trackage rights on NSCR lines:

(1) Toledo and Yeomans (Bellevue), OH (approximately 51 miles);

(2) Youngstown and Kent, OH (40 miles);

(3) in the vicinity of Mingo Jct, OH (5 miles); and

(4) between McKees Rocks and Carnegie, PA (10 miles), over a route owned in part by the Pittsburgh, Chartiers and Youghiogheny Railway Company (PC&Y), a joint subsidiary of P&LE and CR.[2]

These trackage rights would: (1) provide P&LE with access to connecting lines to Toledo; (2) provide a connection between P&LE's current Youngstown facilities and its newly acquired Cleveland-Brewster line at Kent; (3) facilitate P&LE's access to industries in the Steubenville area; and (4) link P&LE's current yard at McKees Rocks with the line which it will acquire between Carnegie to Bridgeville, PA, which will in turn provide a link to its newly acquired Connellsville-Pittsburgh Jct. route.[3]

In addition, P&LE will grant NSCR trackage rights over P&LE lines (either existing or newly acquired) between:

(1) Warrenton and Brilliant, OH (7 miles);

(2) Knob and Belt Line Jct. (Cleveland), OH (5 miles);

(3) Pittsburgh Jct. and Bowerston, OH (15 miles);

(4) Either Brownsville or Homestead and Monessen, PA; and

(5) Carnegie and Bridgeville, PA (4 miles).[4] The first, fourth and fifth sets of trackage rights in this list are described as providing NSCR with access to on-line industry (with the limitation that Brownsville- or Homestead-Monessen rights would be solely for access by NSCR to Monessen itself). The second represents a reservation by NSCR of existing CR trackage rights on an NS line. The third is designed to link otherwise-isolated NSCR lines.[5]

Absent a description (not provided in the available documentation) of precisely how these various trackage rights segments would be used by the owner and tenant, respectively, no firm conclusions can be reached with respect to the operating difficulties or costs that may be associated with them. However, the various agreements supplied by NS with respect to these trackage rights (Appendices A-1 and A-2 to Schedules B and D of the NS-P&LE Agreement, NS 000095-171) have been reviewed. These documents appear to follow the conventional format of such interrailroad agreements in terms of their description of the rights and responsibilities of owner and tenant, respectively. They provide for a payment to the owner by the user of 17 cents per car-mile for each car moved over the segments covered by the agreements. This figure is within the range specified by other known trackage rights agreements.

The inherent risk of any trackage rights arrangement to the tenant is, of course, that it lacks the same degree of control over the operation of the line that it has over proprietary trackage. Train movements and track maintenance are controlled by the owner, and there is a risk that the tenant's trains may be given low priority or that the owner may not maintain the line to an acceptable standard. While the NS-P&LE agreements do not contain ironclad guarantees on these issues, neither do most other such intercarrier agreements. In the event of a dispute over such a matter, settlement would be by arbitration, as is typical of trackage rights agreements. The only concern with respect to the NS-P&LE agreements is the possibility of dispute over assignment or transfer of the trackage rights in the event of a partial sale of the "underlying rail properties" referred to in the "Exclusive Benefit" section of each agreement (see, e.g., NS 000108-9). This is the most common subject of controversy involving such agreements.

While trackage rights arrangements thus do pose some risk, the fact is that they are an efficient and widely-used mechanism of providing access by two or more rail carriers to a single location. Every major railroad in the United States is involved in a trackage rights arrangement of one sort or another, and with rare exceptions they have proven workable.

MARKET REVIEW

The preceding discussion of the GTI Marketing Plan sets out the criteria to which the Market Review must adhere. That review is, of course, contingent upon each divestee submitting a marketing plan which contains sufficient detail to permit a review of the assumptions supporting the traffic and revenue claimed in the marketing plan. As of September 13, 1985, DOJ has not requested and P&LE has not submitted a marketing plan; the only marketing information which P&LE has supplied appears in that carrier's evidence submitted for the ICC Staff Study. Those data do not provide the level of detail necessary for any meaningful analysis of P&LE's marketing assumptions which underlie the traffic and revenue claimed from the divestiture.

Proposed marketing plan

Since P&LE has not supplied a formal marketing plan for the expanded P&LE system giving effect to (i) current financial restructuring and (ii) inclusion of the lines which P&LE will acquire from NS, review has been limited to the testimony of P&LE witnesses who filed verified statements for the ICC Staff Study. That plan is best summarized in the Opening Verified Statement of P&LE witness G.E. Neuenschwander, P&LE's Executive Vice President and Chief Financial Officer. According to Mr. Neuenschwander, the lines which P&LE will acquire will permit the P&LE to reclaim its former position as a strong regional carrier and will provide its shippers with a viable, competitive alternative to an enlarged NS system.*

The purpose of P&LE's line acquisitions is summarized by Mr. Neuenschwander as follows:

"Although the properties to be divested by NS and acquired by the P&LE will not provide a perfect competitive solution, they will provide the basis for a viable profitable and competitive regional railroad to serve the shippers in this expanded market."

"The lines over which the P&LE will operate under the terms of the agreement with NS will allow P&LE to serve shippers directly as far west as Toledo, Ohio, where it will gain a vital link with the Grand Trunk Western Railway for traffic to and from Michigan and lower Canadian markets, as well as Chicago.

"The lines to be acquired by the P&LE also will provide a possible opening to the Southeast via Connellsville, Pennsylvania [duplicating P&LE's present access at that interchange], as well as Cleveland, Ohio, on the north. The expanded GTI system will restore P&LE's friendly connection to eastern markets and western gateways [eliminated by previous Conrail through route/rate cancellations which P&LE is presently litigating]." [1]

As Mr. Neuenschwander observes, the purpose of the divestitures which P&LE has negotiated with NS is to "provide the P&LE with the expanded market access on a competitive opportunity which it has long sought." [2] The end result of the P&LE acquisition of lines from NSCR will be to increase P&LE traffic and revenue, permit P&LE to realize economies of scale and increase efficiency from its operations, which together "will once again make [P&LE] a vigorous, competitive regional railroad." [3]

It should be noted that Mr. Neuenschwander's observations stress the restoration of the P&LE as a vigorous, competitive regional railroad through expansion of its present system which has suffered severe traffic and revenue losses with the decline of its traditional traffic base, products of the steel industry facilities served by P&LE in the Pittsburgh area at Aliquippa, PA and Youngstown, OH. Expansion has been a goal aggressively prosecuted by P&LE beginning with the eastern railroad restructuring in the formation of Conrail in 1976; the present NSCR consolidation has presented P&LE with another opportunity to pursue its goal by extending its system. The new business which P&LE hopes to gain will be concentrated in the steel and related industry markets. As Mr. Neuenschwander testified:

"Many of P&LE's current customers have plants and facilities on the lines [P&LE] will acquire. P&LE's marketing expertise and equipment fleet [are] ideally matched to the needs of shippers on the new lines." [4]

Underlying marketing assumption

Supporting assumptions appear in the testimony of Mr. S.N. Wendelin, F&LE's Director-Strategic Planning. At page 2 of his Opening Verified Statement, Mr. Wendelin briefly describes the P&LE marketing plan as follows:

"The marketing plan is part of the overall business plan which P&LE is developing to integrate the lines [to be] acquired from NS into our existing system . . . [T]he new system will build on the existing P&LE and expand its operations in Ohio and Pennsylvania. This expansion will allow P&LE to provide service to Canton, Cleveland, Wheeling, Steubenville, Zanesville and Toledo, as well as to shippers at intermediate points. The acquisition will enable P&LE to increase its traffic levels and promote a more competitive railroad market in its service area. The expanded markets and increased traffic levels resulting from this acquisition will also allow P&LE to increase the utilization of its large car fleet.

The lines which comprise the divestitures from NS were carefully analyzed and selected by P&LE to accomplish specific market objectives." (emphasis supplied) [5]

Four of the locations cited by Mr. Wendelin where P&LE would provide service are located in Ohio counties which DOJ identified in its January 29, and March 26, 1985 letters to Secretary Dole, i.e., Cuyahoga County (Cleveland); Jefferson County (Steubenville); Lucas County (Toledo) and Stark County (Canton). The other two locations, Wheeling (Ohio County), WV and Zanesville (Muskingum County), OH, were not identified by DOJ as requiring divestiture to provide for maintenance of rail competition. Zanesville is a logical addition, however, because it on the NS Coshocton Branch which serves Coshocton County, OH and Maresville. Coshocton was one of the counties identified in the DOJ March 26, 1985 letter to Secretary Dole.

Mr. Wendelin states the purpose upon which P&LE selection of the lines to be acquired was based at pages 3 and 4 of his Opening Verified Statement:

"P&LE must have access to new markets and friendly connections if it is to offer competitive rates and routes which are not controlled by its direct competitors. The access provided by connections with the new GTI lines to Chicago and St. Louis, as well as the connection with the GTW at Toledo will improve P&LE's competitive market position as an originating and terminating carrier.

"The increased market access provided by the expanded system will also reestablish P&LE as a major rail competitor in the steel industry which has shifted much of its remaining production capacity closer to the Great Lakes. P&LE's large fleet of gondolas, coil cars, open top hoppers and other specialized equipment is especially suited to serve the steel and other industrial facilities in Cleveland, Massillon, Toledo [OH] and Mingo Junction [WV], as well as those in the Pittsburgh and Youngstown area."

P&LE's goal of extending its system reach in order to obtain additional line haul revenue from traffic it has traditionally transported is evident in the material quoted above. Testimony filed June 7, 1985 by Mr. Neuenschwander in his Reply Verified Statement in the ICC Staff Study confirms this goal. At page 2 of his Reply Verified Statement, Mr. Neuenschwander states:

"P&LE simply seels to improve its competitive market posture by expanding its service into new markets that will enhance its economic viability. At the same time, this expansion will enable P&LE to provide these new markets with competitive rail service which would otherwise be reduced or eliminated as a result of the NSCR acquisition."

Mr. Wendelin identified other P&LE marketing plan assumptions in his Opening Verified Statement. At page 4, he states:

"P&LE's expanded system will enable P&LE to extend [its] line haul for a portion of its traffic . . . currently interchanged to connections at Youngstown or Ashtabula. This traffic will be carried by P&LE to Toledo with resulting increase in line haul revenues . . . [W]ith friendly connections, P&LE will also be able to utilize new routes to compete more effectively for traffic to the heavy industrial, agricultural and manufacturing areas of Michigan, northwestern Indiana and northeastern Illinois.

"Similar opportunities are presented for increasing revenues on important segments of P&LE coal traffic to utilities in Ohio and the Michigan [lower?] peninsula. These opportunities will interface with the P&LE coal origins at Colona Dock on the Ohio River, at Glassport on the Monongahela River and at mines accessible to P&LE via subsidiary railroads."

Mr. Wendelin concludes his description of the P&LE marketing plan by supplying an exhibit of the total traffic and revenue gains which P&LE projects as a result of its acquisition of lines to be divested by NSCR. That exhibit which appears at page 7 of Mr. Wendelin's Opening Verified Statement, is reproduced below:

PROJECTED P&LE ANNUAL TRAFFIC AND REVENUE ESTIMATES FOR 1986

	Cars	Gross freight revenues [1]
Current P&LE	117,826	44,445
Added Traffic	98,351	[2] 48,938
Total expanded system	216,177	93,383

[2] Includes revenue from traffic on newly acquired lines and incremental revenues from extended hauls on current P&LE traffic.

It is assumed that the gross freight revenues reported in Mr. Wendelin's exhibit are expressed in thousands of dollars.

In order to develop estimates at the level of precision reported in this exhibit, P&LE must have conducted an extensive traffic study or market analysis. No detailed exhibits in support of these aggregate numbers, the methodology or the sources used to develop these data are supplied by Mr. Wendelin.

In his Opening Verified Statement at page 5, P&LE witness Wendelin identified three "conservative" assumptions which P&LE relied upon in its traffic studies. Those assumptions appear to be optimistic, rather than conservative.[6]

In addition to listing the assumptions upon which P&LE's traffic and revenue projections were based, Mr. Wendelin identified three sources of data which P&LE and its consultant used in P&LE's marketing analysis; i.e.,

(i) proprietary NS traffic data for the NS routes involved;

(ii) proprietary P&LE traffic data for its existing system; and

(iii) aggregated one percent way bill data for certain areas which were analyzed and the results provided to P&LE by its consultant.

Wendelin stresses the fact "actual traffic and revenue" data were examined and "subjected to a conservative market probability analysis" to predict results for the expanded P&LE system.[7] Note that the period which the data cover is not identified. No supporting documentation has been provided by P&LE in either of Mr. Wendelin's three verified statements filed with the ICC.[8]

Criticism by other parties to the ICC Staff Study of Mr. Wendelin's somewhat ambiguous language in his Opening Verified Statement resulted in clarification of P&LE's marketing plan assumptions in Mr. Wendelin's subsequent testimony. For example, at page 1 of his Reply Verified Statement, Mr. Wendelin states that: P&LE [marketing] projections are based on 1984 100% waybill information for P&LE traffic and NS traffic on the divested lines . . . P&LE's diversion [new business?] analysis was developed from intentionally conservative assumptions provided to [P&LE's consultant] Dr. Matzzie by P&LE marketing officials based upon P&LE's experience with its existing traffic, car fleet, customer relationships and operational plans.

Further, at page 1 of his Summary Verified Statement, Mr. Wendelin offers the following "clarification" of the three "conservative" assumptions:

P&LE did not assume it would retain its existing traffic base, it only assumes that it will maintain its proportionate share of traffic on current P&LE lines.

P&LE did not assume capture of all traffic on the acquired lines, it only assumed that P&LE would have an opportunity to compete for that traffic via its new lines.

Finally, P&LE's third assumption reflects a determination that given assumptions 1 and 2, P&LE will be able to establish a competitive presence in P&LE's expanded service area . . . [T]hese assumptions have been confirmed by the detailed traffic data which P&LE has analyzed. (emphasis in original)

In addition, at page 4 of his Summary Verified Statement, commenting on the FRA Class and maximum authorized train speed on the lines which P&LE will acquire, Mr. Wendelin states that P&LE will not compete with NSCR for TOFC or "just in time" traffic. Mr. Wendelin also states that P&LE's projections do not include any traffic which is not presently moving by rail.

No documentation in support of P&LE's conclusions or the consistency and accuracy of its traffic and marketing analyses have been supplied.

Trackage rights and reciprocal switching

Use of trackage rights. In the Divestiture and Acquisition Agreement (Agreement) between NS and P&LE dated April 19, 1985, Article II grants P&LE trackage rights (and car haulage rights) over certain lines of the NSCR system which are described in detail in Schedules B and E of the Agreement, respectively. Article IV grants NSCR trackage rights (and car haulage rights) over certain of the lines to be acquired by P&LE which are described in detail in Schedules D and E of the Agreement.

The testimony of Messrs. Neuenschwander and Wendelin does not disclose whether any consideration was given to the impact (both positive and negative) on P&LE's traffic and revenue projections of the grants the trackage rights (or car haulage rights) of P&LE and NS, respectively, in the development of P&LE's marketing and traffic projections.

Use of reciprocal switching. Article V of the Agreement provides that both P&LE and NSCR will have access to certain industries through reciprocal switching agreements which were in effect on January 29, 1985. From the P&LE's perspective, this provides access to industries at Toledo, OH, as provided by Article V, Section 5.02. All other industries on the lines which P&LE will acquire will be served by P&LE and some will be served by NSCR through reciprocal switching as provided in Section 5.01 of the Agreement. The testimony of Messrs. Neuenschwander and Wendelin does not refer to the impact of Article V on P&LE's traffic and revenue projections.

[6] Mr. Wendelin's "conservative" assumptions are that:
(i) P&LE will be able to maintain existing market share with customers on its present system;
(ii) All NS business on acquired lines will be available to P&LE; and
(iii) P&LE will attain a competitive market position in the expanded P&LE service area.

[8] Opening Verified Statement filed May 24, 1985; Reply Verified Statement filed June 7, 1985; Summary Verified Statement filed June 19, 1985.

Service comparisons

As noted above, Mr. Wendelin states that P&LE will not compete for TOFC and "just in time" traffic. With respect to the traffic for which P&LE will compete, the level of service which P&LE will perform is described in the testimony of P&LE witness D.E. Matzzie.[9] At page 1 of his Summary Verified Statement, filed June 19, 1985, in the ICC Staff Study proceeding, Dr. Matzzie states that "train speeds, service times and the maintenance levels they reflect depend upon specific transportation requirements for particular commodity movements between various origins and destinations."

At page 3 of that testimony, Dr. Matzzie states that his operating plan "was the product of detailed and continuing analysis" which he is "coordinating." However, Dr. Matzzie has provided none of those detailed analyses. Therefore it is not possible to compare P&LE services with either the type or quality of services which P&LE's railroad competitors will offer.

Capability of P&LE to attract interline traffic

Absent data on the type or level of service which P&LE will perform on its extended system, no assessment of P&LE's ability to attract new business, both in terms of extending P&LE's haul on interchange traffic and through diversion of interline traffic from its railroad competitors is possible. P&LE must make available its traffic and marketing studies in order for such an assessment to be undertaken.

Potential diversion of traffic from P&LE by NSCR

At page 3 of his Summary of Verified Statement filed June 19, 1985 in ICC Staff Study proceeding, Mr. Wendelin states that the effect of NSCR diversion of "P&LE's current traffic levels is de minimus." The original estimate of traffic which P&LE would lose to the combined NSCR system was $12.6 million. Mr. Wendelin states that such diversions "have been largely negated by the Justice Department's conditions."[10] In the absence of the detailed traffic and marketing studies and the P&LE assumptions upon which those studies are based, the amount of traffic and revenue which the combined NSCR system could divert from the expanded P&LE system cannot be determined.

Comparison of P&LE and GTI marketing plans

With the exception of the GTI estimate of traffic and revenue attributable to connections with the P&LE, reported in Exhibit 3 of the GTI Business Plan as 4,000 cars with GTI revenues of $3.036 million, there appears to be no traffic which is claimed by both of the proposed divestees. The only inconsistency between the two marketing plans is GTI's assertion that it will interchange traffic with P&LE at Wellington, Cleveland or Ashtabula, OH, while P&LE asserts that it will interchange traffic with GTI at Toledo, OH. Further, documents PL 000047-49 provide schematic diagrams of traffic density on the lines which P&LE will acquire for each of the years 1986 through 1988. Those diagrams show Wellington as a traffic generating node which indicates that traffic will be originated and terminated at that location, a station which P&LE (not GTI) will serve on a line which P&LE will acquire. The Wellington interchange is not provided for in either the P&LE/NS Agreement or the STI/NS Agreement and no schedules or services described in either divestee's operating plan provide for the use of Wellington as an interchange point.

FINANCIAL REVIEW

The pro forma financial statements of P&LE were examined for the following:

1. The adequacy of data presented,
2. Their consistency with accepted accounting methods,
3. Their consistency with marketing and operating plans, and
4. The realism of the results, also in light of marketing and operating plans.

The purpose of the analyses is to assist DOJ in determining whether P&LE is financially capable of operating rail service over the divestiture properties. The conclusion reached is, in short, that inadequate data has been provided with which to make a positive assessment of the carrier's long term viability, and that the data provided has not been shown to be indicative of reasonable expectations or internally consistent. Therefore, substantial additional analyses based on more complete information would have to be performed in Phase II of DOJ's examination in order to remedy, if possible, the defects described below.

DESCRIPTION OF PRO FORMAS

Financial statements provided by P&LE include the following:

a. Historical and projected financial data entitled "Summary Financial Results" and "Projected Income and Operating Results for Current Pittsburgh and Lake Erie Railroad Company FY's 1985-89" contained in a document entitled "Background Information" and with an apparent date of April 26, 1985.[1]

This document provides actual financial results and projected results for P&LE from 1979 through fiscal year 1989, with projections based upon the current system. The six line items reported are operating revenue, operating expenses, operating income, pre-tax income, net income and operating ratio.

b. Exhibits 2 and 3 to G.E. Nuenschwander's Verified Statement included in the opening statement of P&LE in the Conrail Study, dated May 24, 1985.

Exhibit 2, dated May 22, 1985, is a balance sheet, displaying actual April 30, 1985 and a post-debt restructuring pro forma as of the same date.[3] The left-handed stub titles are identical to those of the "constant dollar" pro forma balance sheets described below, although redeemable preference shares are treated explicitly as shareholder's equity in Exhibit 2 but not in the "constant dollar" balance sheet. Given the redemption schedule on these shares, either a debt or an equity classification may be appropriate. Of course, classifying it as an equity improves the appearance if not the substance of the balance sheet.

Exhibit 3, dated May 23, 1985, is an income statement showing revenue, expense and income, projected for 1986. An apparent reassessment of likely traffic after the preparation of this Exhibit resulted in a decrease in anticipated freight revenues in the pro formas discussed below. One of the manifestations of this change is that net income on this earlier statement is somewhat greater than that shown for year 1 on later statements.

c. Projected five year income statement and cash flow statement, dated July 13, 1985.[4]

The income statement contains revenues, expenses, and income estimates for five projected years. No documentation of accounting procedures is included other than what is indicated on the first page of the document. That page includes five assumptions underlying the projections, most involving the level of inflation for revenues and expenses. There is no consistency evident between the use of inflated, or nominal dollars, for certain line items and constant dollars for others. No indication is provided as to the source of the dollar figures, although presumably they are derived from a combination of undisclosed operating and marketing plans, and the debt restructuring plan.

Revenue is subdivided into freight, equipment rent, and a category encompassing miscellaneous sources of revenues. Operating expenses are found in six categories, including engineering, lease of facilities, mechanical, transportation, general and administrative, and equipment rent expense. These expenses subtracted from total revenue yields "total operating income." Income before tax, which is identical to net income because no tax liability is assumed, is derived by subtracting interest expense from operating income, and adding miscellaneous income and gain from sale of equipment. The cash flow statement continues from the bottom line, "net income," of the income statement. To obtain cash flow from operations, depreciation and a line apparently meant to be equal to interest expense is added back,[5] and the proceeds from the sale of assets and net income from partially owned subsidiaries deducted. Sources of non-operating income, including proceeds from the sale of assets and dividends from partially owned subsidiaries are added back, and capital expenses associated with equipment and rights of way and debt service is then deducted to produce net cash flow. Cash flow is calculated as $4.2 million in year 1, and zero thereafter.

Following the cash flow statement, data on projected carloadings, freight revenue per carload, and operating ratio are provided.

d. Projected five year income and cash flow statement, and balance sheet, dated August 1 and 2, 1985.[6]

These constant dollars financial statements, are the subject of most of this analysis. The income and cash flow statements are apparently updated versions of the July 13 pro formas, although they are inconsistent in several material respects, presumably reflecting changed assumptions generated in the intervening fortnight. Given the more recent origin of these statements, it is assumed that they reflect more current thinking at P&LE, and therefore are more appropriate subjects of detailed examination.

[3] The Master Agreement restructuring P&LE's debt is found at PL 000309-510. An executive summary has also been provided, PL 000297-305. The agreement includes the restructuring of secured debt and equipment lease obligations into "Certificates of Interest" and cumulative preferred stock. Payments averaging $27.5 million per year from 1986 to 1989 are required, and any excess of cash short term investments above $5 million at the end of each quarter must be paid to the creditor's trustee. The divested lines would be acquired by a third party and leased back to P&LE for an expected ten to fifteen years at an estimated $3.5 million in 1985 and $4 million for each of the next four forecast years.

In addition to the income and cash flow statements, a balance sheet is appended to this sequence of pro formas. The balance sheet shows assets as the cumulation of current assets (cash, receivables, materials and supplies, and others) net total properties, and "other assets." Liabilities are disaggregated into four categories of current liabilities (current maturities of long-term debt and lease obligations, accounts payable and accrued expenses, accrued interest and other current liabilities), and four categories of non-current liabilities (long term debt and lease obligations, deferred taxes, notes payable to affiliates, and other liabilities.) Lines for redeemable preferred stock, capital stock, additional paid in capital and retained earnings complete the "right hand side" of the balance sheet.

Adequacy and realism of pro formas

Materials submitted from P&LE are sparse; an initial judgement can be made that the supporting information made available is inadequate to determine the quality or accuracy of the projections. Underlying documentation is absent; due to their unavailability, correlation with marketing and business plans is impossible to determine. Therefore, this analysis is based principally on observations as to the internal consistency of the financial statements and the reasonableness of results virtually in vacuo.

a. Historical and projectioned financial data entitled "Summary Financial Results" and "Projected Income and Operating Results for Current Pittsburgh and Lake Erie Railroad Company fiscal year's 1985-89" contained in a document entitled "Background Information" with an apparent date of April 26, 1985.

The financial results displayed in this document are not comparable with the five-year projections discussed below, for one set of projections involves an expanded system whereas the other does not. Both sets indicate increasing profitability for P&LE over time, whether or not expansion takes place. However, higher net income is projected for the expanded system. Noteworthy is that the April 26 document projects $7.9 million in net income for the second half of 1985; the trade press reports that P&LE expects to have a net loss of $7.82 million over the same period.[7] The explanation for this discrepancy is not readily apparent from available materials.

b. Exhibits 2 and 3 to G.E. Nuenschwander's Verified Statement included in the opening statement of P&LE in the Conrail Study, dated May 24, 1985.

Results shown on these financial statements have been modified in several respects in the later pro formas, so detailed examination of their contents does not appear warranted. Under any circumstance, the Exhibit 2 balance sheet indicates that even after financial restructuring, the P&LE's debt/equity ratio is extremely unfavorable, despite increasing equity from $1.035 million to $33.4 million (mostly new redeemable preferred). Total liabilities of the current system restructured (without provision for additional debt required to finance expansion) equal $124.885 million according to this document, resulting in a debt/equity ratio of 0.79, a figure usually considered above financially sound levels.

c. Projected five year income statement and cash flow statement, dated July 13, 1985.

These projections indicate a sixfold increase in net income from year 1 to year 5, and approximately a 45 percent increase in revenue. Discounted for assumed inflation at three percent, (which is itself open to question) this represents about 30 percent real growth. Carloadings would increase by almost 28 percent. This substantial and consistent increase in business volume has not been experienced by rail carriers for several decades, except in isolated circumstances. The conditions under which such expansion has occurred, moreover, have been either rapid economic growth in the service territory or a surge in demand for a major rail transported commodity, such as coal. It does not appear that these conditions would be found in P&LE's service territory over the forecast period.

The projected growth in carloadings and real gross revenues therefore would have to be contingent upon the diversion of significant traffic from NSCR. These diversions, moreover, could not be the product of rate reductions, for the indicated revenue per carload increases both in nominal terms, as shown in the "inflated dollar" statements and in real terms, as displayed in the "constant dollar" statements. Further, any implementation of rate reductions would have a strong adverse effect on net income, which is shown in the pro formas to rise dramatically.

A not unreasonable assumption is that carloadings may be expected to increase as a result of reopening joint routes previously closed by CR. If so, P&LE has failed to document how much traffic would be regained from the reopenings or why the recapture of business would occur over several years on a continuing basis. This long-term aspect of traffic growth suggests an assumption of consistently improving competitive advantage over NSCR. The likelihood of this occurring is questionable; NS would not be expected to acquire CR if it believed that its increased size would lead to its becoming relatively inefficient when compared with other carriers.

Projected increases in net income, as opposed to growth in gross revenues, is largely traceable to expectations of greater efficiency, i.e., cost reduction. A number of expenses decline in either nominal or real terms. Interest expense would be reduced by half, lease payments are flat in nominal terms, and other expenses increase at only the assumed rate of inflation, despite projected real business growth. No support is provided for this assumed continuing increase in efficiency, although expectations related to economies of scale are an obvious partial explanation.

The ability to interpret these statements is hampered by wholesale mixing of constant and nominal dollars. For example, in the income statement, the figures for Equipment Rent Revenue, Lease of Facilities Expense, Gain/Loss on Sale of Equipment and Other Miscellaneous—Net are listed on the "inflated dollars" statement in apparent constant dollar terms. In the cash flow statement, Gain/Loss Sale of Assets, Net Income—Partly Owned Subsidiary, Sale of Assets and Dividends-Partly Owned Subsidiary are treated similarly. This results in cumulations which are meaningless, when dollars of different value are summed. As this mishandled accounting flows through the statements, the magnitude of the discrepancy between stated results and those that would be achieved with consistent usage of either constant or nominal dollars increases.

d. Projected five year income and cash flow statement, and balance sheet, dated August 1 and 2, 1985.

These pro forma statements comprehend the most complete and most recent financial projections provided by P&LE. While they indicate reasonable financial health by the end of the forecast period, the data shown are not supported, apparent assumptions appear unrealistic, and accounting methods are at times deficient.

Greater consistency in accounting technique is to be found in the "constant" dollar as opposed to "inflated" dollar pro formas. A number of questions regarding accounting treatment still pertain, and some dollar figures (e.g., depreciation, which remains uniform instead of increasing with inflation) likely are stated in nominal dollars. Other figures, such as zero cash flow for years 2 through 5 in conjunction with an unchanging cash balance in constant dollar terms contributes to further confusion as to what dollar levels are being used for any given line item.[8] If cash flow is zero, the one number which would be identical whether nominal or constant dollars are being used, cash balance in constant dollar terms would be expected to decline, which it does not.

In an effort to determine the underlying expectations of P&LE in developing its projections, Tables 26 through 29 have been developed to highlight annual changes in income statement line items both on a gross and per carload basis. Table 26 is, for all intents and purposes, a reproduction of the pro forma constant dollar income statements. (Some totals may vary because of rounding; extraneous lines have been omitted, since no income taxes are contemplated to be paid, income before tax and net income have been consolidated in the line "Income.") Table 27 displays the year to year and year 1 to year 5 percentage changes in each line item. Table 28, in identical format to Table 26, shows income statement data on a per carload basis. Table 29 depicts the percentage changes in Table 28.

As indicated in Table 27, freight revenues are projected to increase, in real terms, 29.24 percent from years 1 to 5. This revenue increase parallels the 27.72 percent increase expected in carloadings, as seen in Table 29. Total revenue rises slightly more rapidly, by 29.26 percent, despite the stagnancy of the line item "demurrage, switching, passenger and other revenue." This is because equipment rent revenues are projected to increase 32.14 percent, an even greater improvement than expected for freight revenues. A bulge is apparent in the data, with almost half of the equipment rent revenue increase expected to come between years 3 and 4 (13.41 percent), despite the fact that this same period is expected to yield the smallest increase in carloadings

[8] Projected zero cash flow is a consequence of the restructuring agreement provision which requires that any cumulations of cash and short term investments in excess of $5 million be paid to the creditor's trustee (PL 000352). The cash balance of $8 million displayed in the cash flow statement reflects P&LF's expectations of raising the allowable cash balance after acquisition of the divested lines. Evidently, therefore, the "cash balance" line is intended to be in nominal dollars despite the statement heading indicating constant dollars.

(3.84 percent). This anomaly cannot be explained by the data provided.

The increase in equipment rent revenues is suspect, for even if projected traffic growth were to materialize, the opportunity to earn proportionate revenue from car hire is likely to be small. The ICC currently is reviewing car hire rules and is likely to provide new rules which may substantially reduce per diem rates.[9] The AAR and virtually all major railroads are pressuring the ICC to lower equipment hire charges in an effort to eliminate excessive equipment acquisitions and empty car-miles. In this environment, expectations of rapidly rising equipment rent receipts is unrealistic.

Equipment rent expense also is expected to rise sharply, although at a lower rate than car hire receipts. While this partially offsets probable overoptimism with respect to revenues, car hire expense is projected to be only about half car hire revenues. The magnitude of this particular item is significant; by year 5, car hire revenue is expected to be approximately $15 million more than expense. If, for example, this figure is 50 percent too high, income would be $5 million lower than forecast.

Table 27, showing percentage changes in gross revenue and expense categories, raises further questions about P&LE's assumptions. Engineering expenses are expected to dip 1.07 percent from years 2 to 3, rise 6.33 percent the following year, and then drop again, by 4.08 percent between years 4 and 5. Without any further documentation, this level of detail in a projection (as opposed to merely increasing or decreasing items at a specified rate for a number of years) raises the question of whether projections were arrived at with the bottom line determined first, or whether the bottom line was the end product of individual and independent revenue and cost analyses. Other individual line items display similar gyrations, including some of which appear to be internally inconsistent. The rate of increase in equipment rent revenues shows tendencies opposing freight revenues and carloadings (as shown in Table 29), gross transportation expense shows its greatest percentage increase from years 3 to 4, the same period which has the smallest increase in freight revenues and carloadings, and the reverse is also true: transportation cost rises most slowly from years 1 to 2, when freight gains are greatest in percentage terms. Chart One graphically depicts the anomalously inversely-related trends of freight and equipment rent revenues, and of freight revenues with transportation expense. (Chart not reproducible in the RECORD.)

Table 29 examines financial data on a per carload basis revealing other suspect assumptions inherent in the P&LE pro formas. In particular, decreases in per carload expense categories are evident for all expense items, with some decreases being quite substantial. Engineering, for example, shows an overall 20.93 percent per carload decrease, with the greatest decrease occurring in the final forecast year. The greatest decrease for mechanical expense also is in the last period, well after most efficiencies to be derived from the new lines would have been expected to be experienced. Revenue per carload increases slightly in real terms, which would appear inconsistent with the large traffic growth upon which per carload expense reductions are presumably contingent.

These questionable assumptions drive the overall 143.45 percent increase in real operating income and 975.40 percent increase in real net income as shown in Table 27. These amounts appear to be unrealistic. Without significant supporting data, little credence should be given to these pro forma financial statements.

Consistency of pro formas with operating and marketing plans and with accounting methods

Consistency with Marketing and operating plans: A major difficulty in establishing the reasonableness of the P&LE pro forma financial projections is the unavailability of marketing and operating plans which could provide insight into the rationales underlying the financial assumptions. Without meaningful information as to expected levels of business and descriptions of operations necessary to serve prospective shippers, the financial statements cannot be rigorously examined.

Detail must be supplied on many levels; the operating plan should reveal why transportation expense per carload is anticipated to decline in real terms; general and administrative expense cannot be verified as reasonable without some indication of the number of personnel required, and explanations as to how, as projected, expanding business can be accommodated with no growth in this expense. A thorough examination of equipment rent expense and revenue should be based on indications of cars required on-line, off-line destinations of system cars, and reasonable assumptions as to the per diem levels that system cars may be expected to earn. In the absence of this and similar information, bottom line results are not credible.

Consistency with accepted accounting methods

Materials have not been made available which would allow determination of whether transaction amounts have been applied in proper accounting categories. Despite this defect, the financial statements are organized in a rational, coherent manner which could, but do not entirely, conform with accepted accounting principles.[10]

Three major problems are evident which lead to the conclusion that the statements as presented do not follow internal rules of consistency. It appears, however, that remedying these problems would not be a major task. First, the mixing of constant and nominal dollars, discussed above, leads to the juxtaposition of incomparable values. Second, there is an apparent difficulty in reconciling balance sheets with income statements. For example, the treatment of interest and principal payments is elusive; in the constant dollar pro formas, the cash flow statement adds back to cash flow the interest expense as shown in the income statement ($13.850 million year 1). It then deducts from cash $24.097 million (again, year 2) as debt service. Presumably, principal reduction would be the $10.247 million excess of debt service over interest expense. However, the balance sheet indicates a reduction in long-term debt and lease obligations of $13.417 million ($124.840 million year 1 minus $111.423 year 2). Even adding in the surplus of debt service over interest expense for year 1 would not account for the full reduction in long-term debt and lease obligations. The destination of the missing $3 million in expense is obscure; it cannot be traced through the pro forma statements. (No rectification is possible through resort to "inflated dollars" statements.) Finally, P&LE's financial statements in all cases make no provision for income taxes. That is, P&LE assumes Net Income Before Taxes is the same as Net Income After Taxes. P&LE does not provide data explaining this assumption which is questionable, based on its projected total Net Income of $68.0 million over the next five years. A possible explanation for zero taxes is that tax credits (unused tax loss carryforwards and investment tax) from past years have not been used up by P&LE's parent corporation in filing a consolidated income tax return. Because of the significance of this item further explanation is warranted.

[10] Accepted accounting methods is understood to comprehend a rational, consistent, non-obfuscating reporting technique. This is not necessarily equivalent to the term "Generally Accepted Accounting Principles" (GAAP) which relates to a substantive body of accounting rules promulgated by the Financial and Accounting Standards Board; the consistency of P&LE reports with GAAP is unverifiable without more extensive documentation. Under any circumstance, the sequence and interrelationship of line items in the various statements do not appear to contain meaningful financial information in accordance with GAAP.

Issue	Document(s) required
Data underlying GTI's Marketing Plan as set for in GTI's June 30, 1985 Business Plan filed with the ICC in the Staff Study of the Sale of Conrail to Norfolk Southern Corporation at a level of detail sufficient to permit DOJ's consultant to (i) test, (ii) audit, (iii) replicate and (iv) verify the accuracy and consistency of GTI's traffic, revenue, cost and net operating income projections and estimates derived in or from its marketing plan.	Commodities individually identified at the STCC level employed by GTI (or its consultant). Identity for each shipper and consignee in traffic data used by GTI (or its consultant) in constructing its marketing plan and the results summarized in Exhibit 3 of the GTI June 30, 1985 Business Plan. FSAC and SPLC with respect to each origin and destination of traffic which GTI relied upon in developing its marketing plan and Exhibit 3. The governing tariff(s) and specific item(s) which govern the application of shipper access to reciprocal switching service with respect to each commodity/traffic flow movement which GTI and NSCR (or other rail carrier) will transport as a result of the divestiture agreement. The charge to be assessed against GTI by NSCR for such reciprocal switching performed for GTI by NSCR and the location at which GTI will receive (or deliver) such traffic from (to) NSCR under reciprocal switching services. The same information with respect to reciprocal switching services which GTI will perform for NSCR (or other rail carriers). The origin (or destination) of traffic, as well as the method by which and the charges to be assessed against NSCR, for car haulage services which GTI will perform for NSCR. The same information with respect to car haulage services which NSCR will perform for GTI. With respect, separately, to traffic which GTI expects to gain through reciprocal switching and car haulage services performed by NSCR (or other rail carriers), as well as the traffic which GTI expects to lose through such services which it will perform for NSCR (or other rail carriers) provided reconciliation of the inconsistency between the diversion percentages stated in Exhibit 2 of the GTI Business Plan and the consultant work papers supplied to DOJ. Information which is supportive of assignment of a uniform diversion rate to traffic either originated or terminated at (i) "exclusively" served stations and (ii) stations open to other rail carriers through reciprocal switching on the lines which GTI will acquire from NSCR. An explanation with respect to GTI's failure to consider the fact that other rail carrier(s) will have access to certain stations on the lines to be acquired and an estimate of the traffic (specify station and shipper or consignee) which such other rail carriers will be able to divert from both GTI and NSCR. Note that the explanation offered in document GT 000389 is incorrect and irrelevant to the traffic in issue. Data which indicate the (i) size of each relevant market identified by GTI with respect to "New Business-TOFC" and "New Business-General Freight" and (ii) the percentage share of each relevant market which GTI would possess if its diversion estimate is correct. Any sensitivity criteria applied by GTI (or its consultant) with respect to timing of estimated traffic and revenue gains, as well as any impact which forecast changes in economic activity would have on GTI's traffic and revenue estimates. The extent to which NS's contractual obligation to reopen or reestablish joint rates which have been canceled by Conrail is represented in GTI's traffic and revenue estimates. All relevant documents requested by DOJ in its July 25, 1985 letter to Kirkpatrick & Lockhart with respect to Attachment 1, Question 4. Market Analysis which have not yet been provided and which are not duplicated by the request in Question 1 supra. Further, all relevant documents in response to Attachment 2 to the July 25, 1985 DOJ letter which are not duplicated by the request in Question 1 supra.

P&LE's Marketing Plan referenced in the testimony of Messrs. Neuenschwander, Wendelin and Matzzie, including, but not limited to, the supporting documentation identified below at a level of detail sufficient to permit DOJ's consultant to (i) test, (ii) audit, (iii) replicate and (iv) verify the accuracy and consistency of P&LE's traffic, revenue, cost and net operating income projections and estimates derived in or from its marketing plan.	Commodities individually identified at the STCC level used by P&LE. Identity of each shipper and consignee in the traffic data used by P&LE in constructing its marketing plan and pro forma financials. FSAC and SPLC with respect to each origin and designation of traffic (i) originating, (ii) terminating or (iii) moving overhead on each of the line segments to be acquired by P&LE (including segments over which P&LE will obtain only through trackage rights). The governing tariff(s) and specific item(s) which govern the application of shipper access to reciprocal switching service with respect to each commodity/traffic flow movement which P&LE and NSCR will transport as a result of the divestiture agreement. The charge to be assessed against P&LE by NSCR for such reciprocal switching performed for P&LE by NSCR and the location at which P&LE will receive (or deliver) such traffic from (to) NSCR under reciprocal switching services. The same information with respect to reciprocal switching services which P&LE will perform for NSCR. The origin (or destination) of traffic, as well as the method by which and the charges to be assessed against NSCR for car haulage services which P&LE will perform for NSCR. The same information with respect to car haulage services which NSCR perform for P&LE. The diversion assumption(s) used by P&LE in determining whether and to what extent individual traffic which (i) originates, (ii) terminates or (iii) moves overhead on the current P&LE system will be transported over the lines to be acquired by P&LE. The same with respect to traffic which (i) originates, (ii) terminates or (iii) moves overhead on the lines to be acquired by P&LE will be transported over the present P&LE system. The FSAC and shipper/consignee identity for each element of traffic which presently is not handled by P&LE (and which neither originates nor terminates on the lines which P&LE will acquire) which was identified by Dr. Matzzie in his analysis of ICC Waybill data. With respect to the traffic analyzed by Dr. Matzzie, the method and basis for his diversion of such traffic to the expanded (or current) P&LE system(s) including origin, destination, commodity detail, gross freight revenue, the derivation of the P&LE share of that revenue, the railroad(s) with which P&LE must compete for such traffic and the extent to which any of that traffic presently moves under contract rail rate(s) and/or service agreements. Any sensitivity criteria applied by P&LE or its consultants in their assessment of the potential divertibility of each traffic flow which P&LE has included in its marketing plan and financial pro formas. With respect to each station on the lines which P&LE will acquire, the identity and level of participation of any rail carrier other than NS or Conrail in traffic which originates or terminates at each station during the study year. The extent to which NS's contractual obligation to reopen or reestablish joint rates which have been canceled by Conrail is represented in P&LE's traffic and revenue estimates in its marketing plan and financial pro formas. The actual train schedules which P&LE relies upon in order to provide services competitive with those which the NSCR, CSX, GTI and GTW (or any other rail carrier with which P&LE must compete) will offer, showing departure time, arrival time, elapsed time between terminals, connecting service schedules and anticipated train speed over each of the lines (or segements of lines between terminals) and which P&LE will acquire.

	Forecasts of changes in traffic which reflect the impact of economic changes on the traffic which P&LE expects to attract on (i) its present system and (ii) the lines which P&LE will acquire from NSCR.
All relevant documents requested by DOJ in its May 15, 1985 request to SX.E. Neuenschwander, Appendix A, question 4. Marketing Analysis which have not yet been supplied by P&LE, especially documents relevant to subquestions 4B, 4C, 4D, and 4E, as well as subquestion 5F, at a level of detail sufficient for DOJ's consultant to (i) test, (ii) audit, (iii) replicate and (iv) verify the accuracy and consistence of P&LE's responses.	Copies of the traffic and revenue data upon which P&LE relied in developing its marketing plan identified by Mr. Wendelin in his Verified Statements filed with the ICC in the Conrail Staff Study.
Pro forma Financial Statements are insufficiently documented.	Pro formas to be restated to be consistent with the use of 1983 cost data and presentation of Financial Statements in 1985 dollars. The treatment of deferred taxes and the extent of remaining net operating losses and investment tax credits should be specified. The underlying data and assumptions which form the basis for GTI's 5 year plan excluding the acquired lines. Details as to changes that GTI is making in the BM MEC and DH vis-a-vis their historical operations that would have an effect on historical financial results.
Pro forma Financial Statements are insufficiently documented and are prepared with defective accounting techniques.	Restated pro formas in consistent nominal dollars. All pro forma statements should be reconcilable between themselves. That is, the effect of changes in income statements and cash flow statements should be clearly reflected in the balance sheets. Documentation of rationale for assumptions with respect to labor costs. The treatment of deferred taxes and the extent of remaining net operating losses and investment tax credits should be specified. The basis for determining revenue and expense levels should be documented. Specific items which require amplification are the relationship between per carload revenue levels and carloads, equipment rent revenues, the means by which reduced costs per carload are to be obtained (by expense category). Assumptions with respect to the levels of economic activity in the service territory should be identified. A separate table with explanatory test indicating anticipated payment schedules of both interest and principal for all long term debt obligations. Verification of the permissibility of an $8 million cash reserve following implementation of the restructuring agreements (which indicates that only $5 million is allowable). Itemization of miscellaneous income items and specification of how gain on sale of equipment is to be realized.

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, I submit that this document will show in some detail the underlying conclusion that the divestiture to Guilford and Pittsburgh & Lake Erie could in no way provide the kind of adequate competition as required by the Department of Justice letter of January 25, which I referred to at the outset of my comments.

Mr. President, there is a similar proposed merger involving the Santa Fe and the Southern Pacific Railroads which is now pending before the Interstate Commerce Commission. In that merger, the Department of Justice has filed objections stating that the proposed merger would violate the antitrust laws.

Mr. President, the proposed merger between the Santa Fe and the Southern Pacific Railroads is much less deleterious, much less harmful, much less violative of the antitrust laws than is the proposed combination of Norfolk Southern and Conrail. But the Department of Justice has inexplicably given preliminary approval to the Norfolk Southern transaction, while it has opposed the proposed merger of the Santa Fe and the Southern Pacific.

Mr. President, at this time I refer to a summary of an analysis of the Santa Fe-Southern Pacific merger, an analysis which was made by the law firm of Arnold and Porter, as attorneys for the CSX Corp. Albeit CSX is heartily opposed to the acquisition of Conrail by Norfolk Southern, but I reviewed this analysis with care and find it excellent—and staff has reviewed it and found it to be factually accurate. I believe this analysis is of great importance in evaluating antitrust questions on Norfolk's efforts to acquire Conrail because of the similarities in the positions.

At this point, I will refer briefly to the executive summary by Arnold & Porter which states that in a brief filed on October 21, 1985:

The United States Department of Justice has stated its opposition on antitrust grounds to the proposal pending before the Interstate Commerce Commission to merge the Santa Fe and Southern Pacific Railroads. The antitrust analysis used by the Department of Justice in the Santa Fe-Southern Pacific proceeding is directly relevant to the important competitive issues raised by the proposal to allow the Norfolk Southern Corporation to acquire the Federal Government's controlling interest in Conrail. If consistently applied in the two cases, the analysis would require DOJ to disapprove the Norfolk Southern-Conrail combination just as it has opposed the Southern Pacific-Santa Fe transaction.

By the Department of Justice's own analysis, the immediate anticompetitive impact of a Norfolk Southern-Conrail combination will be several times that of the proposed Santa Fe-Southern Pacific merger. The Department of Justice's analysis of the Santa Fe-Southern Pacific proceeding concludes that:

At a minimum 6.2 billion tons of freight, which translates roughly into $240 million of revenues, would be adversely affected. By contrast, even though DOJ's analysis of the Norfolk-Conrail proposal included a zealous screening process that eliminated from consideration some $500 million in effective revenues and corresponding tonnage, the Department of Justice nevertheless concluded that the transaction would adversely affect about 19 million tons of freight and $527 million in revenue."

Mr. President, what the Department of Justice has done in approving, even preliminarily, the Norfolk-Conrail transaction is really astounding in light of the Department of Justice's position on the Santa Fe-Southern Pacific Railroad. Even these figures, which understate the full anticompetitive impact of the Norfolk-Conrail combination do not show the true relative effects of the two proposals. The potential long-term impacts of the Norfolk-Conrail combination are far more ominous than those of the Santa Fe-Southern Pacific transaction. Norfolk-Conrail, unlike Santa Fe-Southern Pacific, will have enormous adverse effects on coal transportation, which is particularly vulnerable to the loss of rail competition.

Moreover, although the Santa Fe-Southern Pacific merger will still leave three major trunk-line railroads operating in the West, a Norfolk-Conrail combination would leave only two major railroads, Norfolk-Conrail and the CSX, with the Norfolk-Conrail in the dominant position, operating in the East. A Norfolk-Conrail combination will irreversibly destroy the present competitive balance between Norfolk-Southern and CSX.

Mr. President, at this time I ask unanimous consent that the full memorandum prepared by Arnold and Porter entitled "Memorandum Concerning Inconsistencies in the Position of the U.S. Department of Justice With Respect to the Proposed Merger of the Southern Pacific and Santa Fe Railroads and the Proposal To Allow Norfolk Southern To Acquire Conrail," be included in the RECORD as if presented in full.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

I. INTRODUCTION

In a brief filed on October 21, 1985, the U.S. Department of Justice ("DOJ") has stated its opposition, on antitrust grounds, to the proposal pending before the Interstate Commerce Commission to merge the Santa Fe ("SF") and Southern Pacific ("SP") railroads. The DOJ's brief explains that the proposed SF/SP merger would have significant anticompetitive effects, which would not be outweighed by efficiencies and for which no adequate remedy has been proposed or is even identifiable. Further, DOJ rejects the theory, which was pressed by the merger applicants, that SP is a "failing company" which should be allowed to merge with SF as a matter of survival.

The purpose of this memorandum is to explain the direct relevance of the antitrust doctrines and analysis applied by DOJ in the SF/SP proceeding to the pending proposal to allow the Norfolk Southern Corporation ("NS") to acquire the federal government's controlling interest in the Consolidated Rail Corporation ("Conrail" or "CR"). The memorandum discusses relevant differences between the SF/SP and the NS/CR proposals and shows that, in each instance, the NS/CR proposal fails antitrust standards far more obviously than the SF/SP proposal. In particular, the memorandum explains that:

Even by DOJ's own analysis, which understates the anticompetitive impact of the NS/CR proposal, the basic adverse effects of an NS/CR combination will be several times those of an SF/SP combination;

Whereas the SF/SP proposal creates some possibilities for offsetting public benefits, or efficiencies, to counterbalance in part the loss of competition, the combination of NS and CR offers little or nothing in efficiency benefits to offset its far greater adverse effects on competition;

DOJ rejected as inadequate the remedies proposed in the SF/SP proceeding, but those remedies involved the Union Pacific and several other healthy railroads and were far more plausible than the remedy being considered for the NS/CR combination, which involves one failing railroad (the Pittsburgh & Lake Erie) and one financially marginal railroad system (the Guilford Transportation System); and

DOJ rejected the SF/SP applicants' claim that a merger is necessary because SP is a "failing company." Yet SP's financial performance and its trends are weak. Conrail's financial strength, by contrast, belies any claim that it needs NS's "deep pockets" to survive.

In light of these considerations, a DOJ decision to allow an NS/CR combination is fundamentally inconsistent with the decision to oppose the SF/SP merger.

These points are explained in greater detail below:

II. THE ANTICOMPETITIVE IMPACTS OF AN NS/CR COMBINATION WILL BE FAR GREATER THAN THOSE OF THE PROPOSED SF/SP MERGER

DOJ's opposition to the SF/SP merger should not be construed as implying that the anticompetitive impact of that proposal is somehow greater than the anticompetitive impact of the proposed NS/CR combination. It is not. By DOJ's own analysis, the adverse impact of an NS/CR combination will be much greater.

DOJ's analysis in the SF/SP proceeding concluded that "[a]t a minimum, 6.2 million tons of freight, which translate roughly to 240 million dollars in revenues, would be adversely affected." (Post-Hearing Brief of the United States Department of Justice, Santa Fe Southern Pacific Corporation-Control-Southern Pacific Transportation Company, ICC F.D. No. 30400 at 4) ("DOJ SF/SP brief"). By contract, the Department's analysis of the NS/CR proposal—which was notable for a zealous "screening" process that eliminated from consideration roughly $500 million in affected revenues and corresponding tonnage—concluded that that transaction would adversely affect as much as 19.9 million tons of freight and $527.4 million in revenues. (Letter of April 17, 1985 from Charles F. Rule to Honorable John Dingell; Letter of January 29, 1985 from J. Paul McGrath to Honorable Elizabeth H. Dole at 4; Letter of March 26, 1985 from J. Paul McGrath to Honorable Elizabeth H. Dole at 1.)

In other words, by the Department's own analysis, the immediate anticompetitive impact of an NS/CR combination will be several times that of the proposed SF/SP merger.

A. Dr. Pittman's SF/SP analysis

The Department's competitive study of the SF/SP proposal was performed by its economist, Dr. Russell Pittman, who tendered his analysis to the ICC in the form of a verified statement, and who was subjected to cross-examination for three days on his work. (See Verified Statement of Dr. Russell W. Pittman, filed March 21, 1985 in ICC F.D. No. 30400, and transcript of proceedings of April 29-May 1, 1985 in the same docket.)

Dr. Pittman began his consideration of the impact of the SF/SP proposal by identifying movements of particular commodities by rail from particular origins to particular destinations. In other words, Dr. Pittman determined that a "market"—the unit as to which anticompetitive impact would be measured—would consist of the transportation of a given commodity from one point to another. This is a traditional form of analysis in rail merger cases, known as "O/D pair" analysis. See, e.g., Union Pacific-Control-Missouri Pacific, Western Pacific, 366 I.C.C. 459 (1982). Dr. Pittman decided that he would use the five-digit level of Standard Transportation Commodity Code ("STCC") to identify commodities, and Business Economic Areas ("BEA") to identify origins and destinations.

Dr. Pittman then applied the department's so-called "50/10" test. In his universe of commodity-O/D pairs markets, he identified those in which SF and SP together carry at least 50 percent of the rail tonnage, and in which each railroad carries at least 10 percent of the tonnage. (Verified Statement of Dr. Russell W. Pittman at 16.) These are the markets as to which a combination of the two carriers, absent countervailing considerations, would create significant anticompetitive risks.

After applying the 50/10 test, Dr. Pittman considered whether markets identified by the test might, nonetheless, be protected from anticompetitive consequences. To do this, he applied two screens: an intermodal competitive screen and a source competition screen. Thus, if his evidence—in particular, modal share and shipper information—indicated that truck transportation (or any other form of transportation) was a viable alternative to rail transportation in a particular market, he concluded that the merger would not create competitive problems in that market. (Id. at 16-18.) Also, he considered whether a shipper's ability to purchase a commodity from different origins, or send it to alternate destinations—so-called "source competition"—might be an effective counterbalance, in particular cases, for the elimination of rail competition. (Id. at 19.) The source competition screen included consideration of whether international market forces could effectively restrain rates for rail traffic at Gulf and ocean ports. (Id. at 20.)

Dr. Pittman summarized his analysis as one that involved only three basic steps:

"In this testimony I have attempted to examine in some detail the most important of the likely competitive implications of the proposed ATSF-SP merger. I have used essentially a three-step methodology. First, I have identified those rail movements where the merger would, in my opinion, have the worst consequences in terms of curtailing the rail options enjoyed by shippers and customers [the 50/10 test]. Second, for the more prominent of these movements, I have examined whether intermodal competition for the same haul is likely to act as a competitive constraint on the market power of a more concentrated group of railroads [the intermodal screen]. Third, I have examined whether the customers' opinions of purchasing the same product from different sources or the shippers' option of shipping the same product to different constraint on the railroads [the source competition screen]." (Id. at 70.)

Based on Dr. Pittman's analysis, DOJ reached the following conclusion concerning the scope of the anticompetitive consequences of an SF/SP merger:

"The competitive problems identified by the Department are real, direct, and nonspeculative. In all of the O/D pair problem markets, the number of rail competitors (including potential rail competitors) would be reduced by the merger from three to two or from two to one. Motor and water carriers are not viable alternatives for rail shippers in these markets, nor are other sources or outlets for their commodities. Accordingly, these are markets in which the merged carrier would either be the only firm providing viable service—a monopolist—or one of two firms providing service—a duopolist. Since entry by another railroad that would constrain the merged carrier's ability to raise rates is virtually impossible, the merger would give the merged carrier the ability to engage in monopoly pricing or enhance substantially its ability to collude. The merged carrier would possess this power in markets throughout its geographic network. These markets, at a minimum, involve transportation of about 6.2 million tons of freight, representing approximately 240 million dollars in commerce." (DOJ SF/SP Brief at 25 (footnotes omitted).) [1]

B. DOJ's NS/CR Screening Process

DOJ's analysis of the proposed NS/CR combination differs considerably from its SF/SP analysis. The NS/CR analysis has not been presented in the form of a verified statement, or even in any single, comprehensive document. Instead, following DOJ's initial statement of its conclusions in January 1985, the specifics of the analysis have been exposed, bit by bit, over time, principally in response to inquiries from legislators.[2] There is no single economist at DOJ, like Dr. Pittman in the SF/SP case, who has come forward to vouch for the integrity of the NS/CR analysis or withstand crossexamination on the subject.

Although many questions remain, DOJ's revelations to date provide the following basic information about its approach to the NS/CR proposal.

Instead of beginning with the "O/D pair" approach, as Dr. Pittman did, DOJ in NS/CR decided to analyze origin markets and destination markets separately. This approach appears to ignore the economic reality that a shipper or receiver will want to move its traffic not merely from one location or to one location, but from one location to another. Nonetheless, although it has declined to perfrom an O/D pair analysis of the NS/CR merger, DOJ asserts that the results of such an analysis would not differ significantly from the results obtained by the origin and destination market approach.[3]

[1] The Department computed the figure of $240 million by multiplying the 6.2 million tons of affected traffic identified by Dr. Pittman by $38 per ton, a per ton revenue estimate used by the applicants' expert witness, Dr. Paul MacAvoy. (See DOJ SF/SP Brief at 25 n.23.)

[2] See, e.g., Letter of January 29, 1985 from J. Paul McGrath to Honorable Elizabeth H. Dole; Letter of March 26, 1985 from J. Paul McGrath to Honorable Elizabeth H. Dole; Letter of April 15, 1985 from Charles F. Rule to Honorable John D. Dingell; Letter of April 17, 1985 from Charles F. Rule to Honorable John D. Dingell; Letter of April 26, 1985 from Charles F. Rule to Honorable James J. Florio; Letter of July 24, 1985 from Charles F. Rule to Honorable Richard G. Lugar; Letter of August 30, 1985 from Charles F. Rule to Honorable Larry Pressler; Letter of September 25, 1985 from Douglas H. Ginsburg to Honorable Elizabeth H. Dole; Letter of October 22, 1985 from Douglas H. Ginsburg to Honorable John D. Dingell.

These documents are referred to in subsequent parts of this memorandum by recipient and date, e.g., Dole January 29 Letter; Pressler August 30 Letter.

[3] In response to a request from Senator Larry Pressler for an analysis of the NS/CR combination using the SF/SP methodology, DOJ proffered a description of the two methodologies but said:

"We have not, however, replicated the NS/Conrail analysis along precisely the lines employed in Santa Fe/SP as you have requested, because to do so would requie an undertaking of several months' work by the same Department staff members who are now heavily engaged in evaluating the viability of the proposed divestiture by NS to Guilford Transportation Industries and the Pittsburgh & Lake Erie Railroad. Given the insignificant differences in methodology and the overwhelming likelihood that the same conclusions and recommendations would result under either appraoch, there is no reason to believe that redoing our analysis of the NS/Conrail merger would yield useful results." (Pressler August 30 Letter at 2.)

Like Dr. Pittman, DOJ, in its NS/CR analysis, used the 5-digit STCC as the commodity unit but, unlike Dr. Pittman, it chose the smaller county (or sub county), rather than the larger BEA, as the geographical unit.

In January 1985, when DOJ first announced its conclusions concerning the anticompetitive impact of an NS/CR combination, it said that it had identified "more than one hundred markets located in 39 counties in 21 states in which it appeared that a merger between Conrail and Norfolk Southern could have a significant anticompetitive impact" and that, in these markets, NS and CR "participated in movements involving $516.1 million in rail revenues in 1983." (Dole January 29 Letter at 4.) Subsequent letters explained that an additional $11.3 million in problem revenues had been identified—for a revenue total of $527.4 million—and that the corresponding impacted tonnage amount for 1983 was 19.9 million tons. (Dole March 26 Letter at 1; Dingell April 17 Letter.)[4]

The Department also stated in January that, in arriving at its impact conclusions, it had employed the 50/10 test as well as "a number of" different screens. The full extent of the screening process that had occurred did not come to public light until much later.

In August 1985, in a letter to Senator Larry Pressler, DOJ revealed the genuinely massive amount of screening performed to bring the identified impact down to the level of as much as 19.9 million tons, 100 or so markets and $527.4 million in revenue. In an attempt to defend its origin and destination market approach, the Department explained to Senator Pressler that:

"The origin and destination market analysis that we used in our initial NS/Conrail analysis identified—based solely on a 50/10 screen (i.e., prior to any further analysis of competition in these markets)—nearly 700 separate markets in hundreds of countries with potential post-merger competitive problems. These markets involved total annual revenues on NS or Conrail movements of more than $1 billion." (Pressler August 30 Letter at 6.)

Precisely how the Department was able to screen the number of impacted markets down from nearly 700 to about 100, the impacted counties from "hundreds" to 39 and the revenues at issue from "more than $1 billion" to $527.4 million, remains unclear. Many of the screens used, however, have now been acknowledged, and are discussed briefly below.

1. The Department employed what it termed the "monopoly leg" screen to eliminate $104.9 million in revenues. The Department has explained the theory of this screen as follows:

"For each movement between any given origin and destination, there is a single monopoly price that will maximize the profits of the carrier or carriers that participate in the move. Competition among railroads along one leg of a given move will not reduce the total cost to shippers below this monopoly price if, along another leg essential to the move, there is a monopoly carrier that is free to charge as much as it pleases. Thus, maintaining competition along one leg provides no material benefit to shippers if they still must rely on a monopolist along some other significant leg to deliver or originate their products." (Pressler August 30 Letter at 2-3.)

The monopoly leg screen is subject to considerable question both practically and analytically. From a practical standpoint, numerous shippers have repudiated the theory in testimony relating to the Conrail sale. These consumers of rail service—who are obviously in the best position to evaluate the real world implications of such economic propositions—provide persuasive evidence of the benefits derived from competition regardless of a monopoly position that may exist for some portion of a rail movement.[5] Beyond this, Dr. Pittman himself took exception to the monopoly leg concept on analytical grounds:

"Q. [Counsel] With respect to the screen we have just been discussing, that is, the monopoly railroad leg, if you want to call it that, I think Mr. McGrath indicated in his discussion of methodology that that had been employed, and the department expands upon it in the answers provided to Congressman Dingell.

Since we now agree that that kind of an analysis was conducted there and not in your testimony, let me ask you very simply, do you find that screen to be wrong or incorrect for employment in a rail merger analysis?

A. [Dr. Pittman] Yes, I think it is incorrect to assume that a monopoly screen would always mean that a merger would not cause competitive problems." (Tr. 12, 738-39.)

Moreover, specifically confronted with the Department's explanation of why it employed the monopoly leg screen in NS/CR, Dr. Pittman unequivocally stated that he disagreed with the rationale:

"I am not using a screen which was used here [in NS/CR] because I don't believe that screen is correct. I am doing my own analysis." (Tr. 12, 740.)

Taken as a whole, the Department's dismissal in NS/CR of nearly $105 million in problem revenues is premised on a dubious economic theory—one which it clearly rejected in its contemporaneous analysis of SF/SP.

2. DOJ employed a "small revenue" screen to eliminate $97 million in revenues. The Department's explanation of this screen, in effect, is that there is no need to be concerned about commodity movements to or from particular counties in which the rail revenues are small (less than $2 million each)—even though, cumulatively, the sums involved may be enormous. Once again, it is significant to note that in his analysis of the SF/SP merger, Dr. Pittman did not employ a small revenue screen.

3. DOJ employed an "automobile and truck destination" screen to eliminate $42.3 million in revenues. The theory of this screen, DOJ has said, was that the presence of foreign-built automobiles and trucks imported by ship somehow will hold down transportation costs for American vehicles. (Pressler August 30 Letter at 8.) This would be so, DOJ evidently believes, no matter where the American vehicles are being shipped (Los Angeles or Wichita) and no matter what kind of American vehicles are involved (Chevettes, Cadillacs or even Corvettes); and also without regard to the "umbrella" effect that inflated domestic transportation costs can have on prices charged for imported vehicles. Again, as DOJ concedes: "Dr. Pittman did not specifically focus on automobile and truck destinations as important distinct markets and therefore did not consider the effects of imported autos and trucks on the markets involved in the SF/SP merger." (Pressler August 30 Letter at 8.)

4. DOJ employed a case-by-case "export screen" to eliminate an amount of revenues which it has not revealed. The theory of this screen was that "if the price of a commodity is determined by competition from foreign producers of a commodity, a railroad ordinarily cannot successfully charge monopoly rates for transporting the commodity to a particular port for export." (Pressler August 30 Letter at 5.) The precise application and scope of this screen, and the commodity movements deleted from the analysis because of it, in the NS/CR analysis remain unclear. DOJ has said only that "shipments of export commodities were not systematically excluded on this ground, but commodities such as coal and grain were excluded based on the facts of specific cases." (Pressler August 30 Letter at 5.)

5. DOJ employed a so-called "major shipper" screen to eliminate another amount of revenues which it has not publicly quantified. Again, although the precise technique employed by DOJ for implementing this screen remains unclear, the Department has indicated that it eliminated from consideration all counties "in which the major shipper in the market supported the merger." (Dole January 29 Letter at 4.) There is, quite simply, no basis in law or policy for a

[4] The figure of 19.9 million tons may be too low. According to DOJ, this is tonnage for the markets listed in DOJ's January 29 letter. Evidently, the figure does not include tonnage for the additional markets identified in DOJ's March 26 letter. DOJ's letter releasing the tonnage information does not explain whether the tonnage is only NS and CR tonnage or whether tonnage on other lines may be included as well. No breakdown of tonnage by railroad is provided. (See Dingell April 15 letter.)

[5] "The Department's analysis does not comport with economic realities. For example, the Department did not discuss the effects of monopoly extension and foreclosure of alternative, interline service . . . . Monopoly extension occurs when a shipper is served by one railroad but ships to destinations outside the area of monopoly through interconnection with other railroads. If the merger of Norfolk Southern and Conrail is approved, CSX would be effectively cut out of business it now competes for with Norfolk Southern for shipments outside of the monopoly area. The merger would also eliminate source competition which could create or extend a monopoly on rail service." (Statement of Earl W. Mallick, Vice President-Public Affairs, United States Steel Corporation and Chairman, Shippers for an Independent Conrail, Before the Committee on the Judiciary, Subcommittee on Monopolies and Commercial Law, U.S. House of Representatives, September 18, 1985.)

"Another specific commodity example may be illustrative of one aspect of the market impact—both direct and indirect—of a sale to Norfolk Southern. Currently, the trend in the Northeastern utility coal market is toward the use of low-sulfur coal, which is not available from most Conrail origins but is mined from locations served by CSX and Norfolk Southern (one of the areas where these two systems still compete). As delivering carrier, Conrail today will connect with and serve shippers originating traffic on either, with delivered prices determined on the basis of market demand and competition. Should Conrail be acquired by Norfolk Southern, however, the situation can be expected to change dramatically. CSX doubtless would lose its 'friendly' delivery connection to the Northeast utilities, precluding producers on its lines from competing with Norfolk Southern coal for sales. At the same time, the utility consumers would lose their choice of sources; coal effectively would be available exclusively from sources served by Norfolk Southern. Both the supply and the consuming markets would suffer a serious reduction in competition, with attendant economic consequences." (Testimony of Kelvin J. Dowd, on Behalf of the Eastern Coal Transportation Conference, Before the Subcommittee on Monopolies and Commercial Law, United States House of Representatives, September 18, 1985.)

major shipper screen. Dr. Pittman did not employ a major shipper screen in his SF/SP analysis (Tr. 12, 745), nor has DOJ identified any other instance in which such a screen has been used. The fact is that even if a "major shipper"—however such a shipper might be defined or identified—might have countervailing economic bargaining power in dealing with railroad rates and services, this provides no comfort or protection to the hundreds of smaller shippers who lack such leverage. To give a major shipper, as DOJ did, the effective power to immunize a rail merger from antitrust scrutiny by supporting it, is to turn traditional antitrust, and public interest, analysis on its head.

6. DOJ employed an intermodal competition screen to eliminate an amount of revenues which it has not identified. According to the Department: "Using 1977 Census of Transportation data, supplemented by surveys and interviews with over 200 shippers concerning approximately 700 facilities, we then eliminated those markets where non-rail competition appeared to be significant." (Dole January 29 Letter at 4.) Although this screen may be assumed to be one of the most significant, its application was apparently subjective in the extreme, based as it was upon an assessment of whether non-rail competition "appeared to be significant."

* * * * *

The following Table 1 summarizes the publicly available information concerning the screening process employed by DOJ in its NS/CR analysis. While the full details remain unknown, it is apparent from these data that—at a minimum—nearly half of the problem traffic initially identified by DOJ has been dismissed through the use of its various screening devices.

Table 1.—NS/CR revenue screens—DOJ analysis

C. SF/SP v. NS/CR—Short- and long-term competitive impacts

In sum, there is ample reason to believe that DOJ has understated the full anticompetitive impact of the proposed NS/CR combination. But even on DOJ's own figures, it is clear that that immediate adverse impact, by any calculation, will be far greater than the adverse impact of the proposed SF/SP merger, which DOJ has opposed. DOJ's own estimate of $527.4 million of problem revenues in the NS/CR case is more than double the $240 million impact identified in the SF/SP case, and the 19.9 million tons identified in NS/CR is more than triple the 6.2 million tons identified in SF/SP.

As subsequent parts of this memorandum will indicate, these immediate impact numbers do not begin to tell the full story. The potential long-term impacts of an NS/CR combination are far more ominous than those of the SF/SP transaction. Unlike SF and SP, CR and NS derive huge amounts of their revenue from the transportation of coal. They are the second and fourth largest transporters of coal in the nation. (NS advertises that $42 out of every $100 of its revenue comes from coal transportation.) Coal is one of the commodities that is most vulnerable to the loss of rail competition. As many witnesses have testified, the potential long-term impacts of the foreclosure of competition on coal traffic are enormous.[6]

Moreover, DOJ's position in SF/SP looks to the continuation of rail service for California and much of the West Coast by three major railroads—SF, SP and Union Pacific—while also preserving competitive options created in the West by the Burlington Northern and other healthy western carriers. In the eastern part of the country, however, an NS/CR combination would leave only two major railroads—NS/CR and CSX, with NS/CR in a dominant position—and a fringe of small and, in some cases, failing railroads. An NS/CR combination would irreversibly destroy any possibility of preserving, in the East, the healthy competitive balance that now characterizes the operations of NS, CR and CSX.

III. IN CONTRAST TO THE SF/SP MERGER, AN NS/CR COMBINATION HAS NOTHING TO OFFER BY WAY OF OFFSETTING BENEFITS

In analyzing the overall impact of a merger that will foreclose competition, the courts, in some cases, have allowed consideration of offsetting procompetitive benefits or efficiencies from the merger. See, e.g., United States v. United States Gypsum Co., 438 U.S. 422, 441 n.16 (1978); FTC v. Procter & Gamble Co., 386 U.S. 568, 597-98 (1967) (Harlan, J., concurring). The ICC considers claims of offsetting benefits in railroad merger cases. See, e.g., Union Pacific—Control—Missouri Pacific, Western Pacific, above.

It is said, however, that to override anticompetitive impacts, benefits or efficiencies must be clearly established; they must be ones that cannot be achieved by any means other than a merger; and they must be of a magnitude to compensate for the harm from loss of competition. As stressed by DOJ in its SF/SP brief, "where, as here, the elimination of competition by a merger would be very significant, the merger should be disapproved unless there is clear and convincing evidence of significant efficiencies that cannot be achieved in the absence of the merger and that offset its competitive harm." (DOJ SF/SP Brief at 46 (citing DOJ Merger Guidelines).)

This offsetting benefits doctrine was relevant in the SF/SP proceeding and it is relevant to a correct competitive analysis of the NS/CR proposal. Again, however, the case for antitrust approval of the SF/SP merger—which the Department refused to extend—is much stronger than the case for approval of an NS/CR combination. Here, as elsewhere, there is no plausible case for the proposed NS/CR combination.

A. A colorable case for benefits in SF/SP

In justifying their merger application, SF and SP stated that their consolidation would produce significant benefits. According to SF/SP, the merger would produce annual benefits of $287.4 million from, among other things, internal rerouting; improved yard and local switching; engineering and mechanical coordinations; better equipment utilization; and new informations systems. (Appendix B, Exhibit SFSP-50.) In addition, it was estimated that SF and SP could save an additional $126.8 million in avoided net capital expenditures in the first three years following the consummation of their merger. On an annual basis, therefore, the total near-term benefits claimed by SF/SP amount to almost $330 million. DOJ even acknowledged, based on the evidence, that ". . . it is true that the merger would result in significant efficiencies and, in some cases, would be the least costly way to achieve them." (DOJ SF/SP Brief at 56.)

DOJ nonetheless rejected a public benefit, or efficiency, justification for the merger. It said that the claimed benefits had not been demonstrated with sufficient clarity, and that many of the claimed efficiencies were spurious and might ignore corresponding increased costs or loss of service to shippers. (DOJ SF/SP Brief at 48-50.) In addition, the Department stressed, many of the efficiencies could be achieved without a merger, as by operating on trackage rights agreements. Moreover, if factors precluded realizing certain efficiencies without a merger, the applicants had not presented clear and convincing evidence to that effect. (Id. at 50-56.)

B. No case for benefits in NS/CR

In contrast to SF/SP, there are hardly any plausible public benefits, or efficiencies, to be obtained by an NS/CR combination. Indeed, in the many months that NS's proposal has been under consideration, NS has never even attempted to make any significant quantified public case for the efficiencies of an NS/CR combination.

This is not surprising. The Department of Justice has revealed that NS's total estimate of efficiency gains—presumably the highest figure that NS could come up with, and details of which have been asserted to be confidential—was only $139.9.

Norfolk Southern claimed that, as a result of its merger with Conrail, there will be a total average annual savings of $139.9 million. This estimate is composed of the following factors: $30.8 million in engineering department savings; $26.6 million in mechanical department savings, $7 million in train savings, $25.7 million in yard savings, $25 million in other transportation savings, and $24.8 million in administrative savings. (Dingell April 15 Letter at 34.)

DOJ already has rejected the preponderance of NS's claimed efficiencies. Former Assistant Attorney General McGrath indicated in his January 29 letter to Secretary Dole that DOJ had reviewed NS's efficiency claims and had found that "some of these claims are overstated, while others, such as abandonment of unprofitable track, would probably occur even in the absence of a merger." (Dole January 29 Letter at 6.)

[6] See, e.g., Testimony of James V. Scahill, Pennsylvania Coal Mining Association, Before the Senate Committee on the Judiciary, April 2, 1985; Statement of Dr. Mark N. Cooper, Director of Energy, Consumer Federation of America, Before the Subcommittee on Commerce, Transportation and Tourism of the Energy and Commerce Committee, U.S. House of Representatives, July 10, 1985; Testimony of Kelvin J. Dowd, on Behalf of the Eastern Coal Transportation Conference, Before the Subcommittee on Monopolies and Commercial Law, United States House of Representatives, September 18, 1985.

Moreover, even if NS's claims had not been substantially rejected, they still would represent benefits of much smaller magnitude than those in SF/SP, even though the anticompetitive impact of the NS/CR combination would be much greater. Table 4 below compares the claimed benefits with DOJ's anticompetitive impact assessment for both cases.

[NOTE.—Table 4 not reproducible in the RECORD.]

Nor is there any possible basis for arguing that an NS/CR merger is needed to improve CR's or NS's operating efficiency (a theory that was, again, plausible in the case of SF and SP). On their own, CR and NS today are two of the more efficient railroads in the nation. Measured by their respective operating ratios (operating expenses divided by operating revenues) a standard index of carrier efficiency (see Part V, below) the performance of both of these roads is superior to the industry norm. As shown in Table 5 below, compared to an overall national average in 1984 of 87.50, CR's operating ratio of 86.47 was more than one point lower, while NS's was eight points lower at 79.57. CR's present efficiency represents a substantial improvment—in both relative and absolute terms—upon that of only four years ago. Between 1980 and 1984, as Table 5 also indicates, all Class I railroads as a group recorded efficiency gains of more then five and a half points. Over the same timeframe, CR slashed its operating ratio by almost 23 points—four times as much.

The only efficiency claim of NS to which DOJ has given any substantial credence is the claim that shippers would benefit from increased NS/CR single-line service. Increased singled-line service is properly considered as a benefit, or efficency, in many rail merger cases. But the rationale hardly can apply in Conrail's case. By force of circumstance, when Conrail was created it was given a government-sanctioned rail transportation monopoly in large segments of the Northeast. Because of Conrail's position in many important Northeast markets, a merged NS/CR system will be able to force shippers routing rail traffic to or from that territory to ship via the combined NS/CR system wherever service by that system is available. NS/CR can accomplish this in various ways. But the result, however accomplished, will be that, although single-line service will be provided, it will not be provided on a competitive basis.

This kind of single-line service does not produce a public benefit. To the contrary, under these circumstances, single-line service merely becomes a means for NS to extend CR's existing monopoly and to dominate whatever may be left of rail competition.

IV. THE REMEDIES PROPOSED IN THE SF/SP PROCEEDING WERE PLAUSIBLE, BUT THE REMEDIES PROPOSED FOR AN NS/CR COMBINATION ARE NOT

Assuming that a merger is anticompetitive, DOJ nonetheless can support it if the adverse consequences can be remedied, whether by restructuring the transaction or by other means that will preserve competition. The question of appropriate remedies was considered by DOJ in the SF/SP proceeding, and it is currently under consideration by DOJ in the case of NS/CR. The difference is that whereas the remedies proposed—but rejected by DOJ—in the SF/SP proceeding were, at least on their face, plausible, the remedies under consideration in NS/CR are hopelessly inadequate to counterbalance the massive, and long-term, foreclosure of competition that would occur.

A. Plausible Remedies in SF/SP

The parties in the SF/SP proceeding proposed a wide range of remedies for the problems that that merger would create. The Union Pacific proposed that it be given trackage rights over hundreds of miles of SF/SP lines through the so-called "southern corridor," [7] as well as in the San Joaquin Valley and in northern California. The Kansas City Southern proposed trackage rights arrangements on four SF/Sp line segments in Texas and the Gulf area. The Denver and Rio Grande Western proposed line purchases, as well as trackage rights, in Utah, Oregon and California. The Missouri-Kansas-Texas Railroad and the Texas-Mexican Railway also proposed trackage rights in Texas to allow them to compete with the combined SF/SP. (See DOJ SF/SP Brief at 69.)

At the same time, KCS also proposed what it called "independent rate-making authority"—an authority that would allow it to solicit traffic and quote rates for traffic that would be handled by SF/SP as KCS' agent. (Id.) SF and SP proposed a "pricing constraint condition" under which the merged SF/SP would be obligated not to increase any rate applicable to a "protected flow" by more than 5 percent a year plus an adjustment for inflation; and a "rail service condition" whereby SF/SP would commit itself to continue to provide an appropriate level and quantity of rail service for (1) all traffic identified as potential competitive problem traffic, and (2) all traffic moving via interline rail routes. (Id. at 72.)

These were potentially far-reaching remedies, involving healthy, or relatively healthy, carriers. Union Pacific, in particular, is a carrier with the apparent ability to compete with SF/SP over time. As UP explained in its brief:

"Union Pacific has the necessary commitment, financial strength and familiarity with the affected markets to provide effective competition. Following the merger, SFSP will be an extremely large and powerful carrier. However, as the following data indicate, Union Pacific, though smaller, will be of sufficient size to mount a meaningful competitive challenge to SFSP in the affected markets:

[7] The southern corridor consists of portions of southern California, Arizona, New Mexico and Texas. SF and SP provide the only rail competition throughout the corridor.

[Dollars in billions]

	Union Pacific	SF/SP
Route miles	23,130	25,590
Operating revenues	$3.7	$4.8

"Union Pacific is committed to providing fully competitive service to all points that it will be entitled to serve on the trackage rights lines, and the Union Pacific operating plan . . . provides for regular local or through train service to such points." (Opening Brief of Union Pacific Railroad Company and Missouri Pacific Railroad Company, ICC F.D. No. 30400 at 123–24.) (Footnote omitted.)

Although there was disagreement by the railroad parties to the SF/SP proceeding over exactly which proposed remedies were most appropriate, there was a seeming consensus that some sort of remedial scheme could be feasible. And there was certainly no obvious lack of credibility in ideas such as the one explained by UP.

Nonetheless, DOJ rejected all the proposed remedies in SF/SP. It concluded that, even in the aggregate, these proposals would not be adequate to compensate for the loss of competition. As DOJ explained: "this merger presents pervasive competitive problems throughout the networks of the two railroads, and the conditions that have been proposed, either independently or in combination, are insufficient to remedy the problems." (DOJ SF/SP Brief at 70.) DOJ rejected the "independent rate making," "pricing constraint" and "rail service" conditions as unworkable, and it observed, in more general terms:

"Only if the Commission were to (1) grant KCS (as well as UP) trackage rights over the entire southern corridor, (2) grant DRGW purchase and trackage rights over the central corridor, and (3) grant MKT's proposals to remedy origin and destination problems in the Midwest, would conditions have even a remote possibility of remedying the competitive problems created by this merger. Such conditions, however, would by no means eliminate all of the competitive problems." (DOJ SF/SP Brief at 71.)

Thus, in SF/SP, DOJ set forth a strict standard for determining whether the remedies proposed could comprehensively address the problems identified.

B. Implausible Remedies in NS/CR

Even though it almost certainly underestimated the impact of an NS-Conrail combination, DOJ nonetheless found that without "appropriate divestitures" the combination would violate both the antitrust laws and related Interstate Commerce Act merger review standards. As a condition to approval, the Department required "appropriate divestitures" in the Buffalo-Pittsburgh, Chicago-St. Louis corridor, which it had identified as adversely affected. It said that the divestitures should provide "long-term, viable, and competitive rail service to locations along the corridor." (Dole January 29 Letter at 1.)

But even as compared with the proposed remedies in SF/SP, which DOJ rejected, the remedy under consideration in NS/CR is hopelessly weak. It involves carriers that hold out no genuine prospect of long-term, competitive viability as against the combined NS/CR.

Rejection of the Initial Divestiture Plan.—What is proposed as the remedy in NS/CR is the conveyance by NS/CR of certain lines and line fragments (with associated agreements for trackage, switching and other arrangements) to Guilford Transportation Industries ("GTI") and Pittsburgh & Lake Erie Railroad ("P&LE").

The precise terms of the GTI/P&LE proposals have changed over time. Initially, NS proposed to provide P&LE with track or trackage rights from Pittsburgh to Cleveland and Toledo; to provide GTI with track and trackage rights from Bufflao to points in Ohio, including Toledo; and to sell GTI the CR line to Chicago and the old "Nickel Plate" line to St. Louis.

Over a period of several months, beginning in May 1985, the ICC staff conducted a study and received voluminous evidence on the question of the viability of GTI and P&LE under NS's initial proposal.[8] Evidence was received from numerous participants including Conrail, Grand Trunk Western, NS, CSX—and, most importantly, from GTI and P&LE themselves. The materials submitted for review ran to thousands of pages, and covered every aspect of the potential post-divestiture operations of Guilford and P&LE—including track condition and rehabilitation, equipment needs, operating schedules, marketing, cash flow, and financing.

The results of the ICC staff study were issued on August 30, 1985. The conclusions were unequivocal. As to Guilford, the ICC staff found:

"Because [Guilford's] assumptions generally are without merit, Guilford's proposal will not result in a viable post-divestiture operation . . . . In the long run it does not appear that Guilford will be a financially viable carrier." (Study of the Viability of Guilford Transportation Industries, Inc. and Pittsburgh and Lake Erie Railroad Company Before and After the Line Divestitures Suggested by the Department of Justice as a Condition to the Acquisition of the Consolidated Rail Corporation by Norfolk Southern Corporation at 7 & 9) ("ICC Staff Study").

The conclusion as to P&LE was essentially the same:

"In conclusion, PLE is not now a financially viable carrier and its acquisition of the new lines will not enable it to reverse its already precarious financial position." (Id. at 10.)

During roughly the same time period, a separate and independent study of Guilford and P&LE was conducted by R.L. Banks & Associates, a railroad consulting firm retained for the purpose by DOJ. The bottom line conclusions of the Banks organization, not surprisingly, paralleled those of the ICC staff. As to Guilford, the Banks organization noted that "heroic assumptions" had been made in GTI's proposed business plan; and also that "the analyses suggested that GTI's viability would be dependent heavily upon the realization of several optimistic assumptions, and that even under the most favorable circumstances GTI's continued existence would be parlous." (R.L. Banks & Associates, Inc., Conrail Sale Divestiture Study, A Preliminary Report to Antitrust Division, U.S. Department of Justice, September 13, 1985 at 13.) As to P&LE, Banks said:

"This review of available information identified numerous problem areas which are detailed in the text. Significant among these is a three-fold difference between P&LE's diversion estimates and those of NS's. Most significant, however, is the review of available financial data for the P&LE which raises serious concern as to whether a Business Plan and financing agreement can be developed that would allow an affirmative finding with respect to the likely long-term viability of the P&LE." (Id. at 20.)

On September 25, 1985, Assistant Attorney General Douglas Ginsburg reported to Secretary Dole on the Status of DOJ's review of the GTI and P&LE divestiture plan. Mr. Ginsburg advised Secretary Dole that—

"Based on the information we have obtained to date, including but not limited to the recent Preliminary Report of the Department's independent consultant, R.L. Banks & Associates, it does not appear that the proposed divestiture will establish a rail carrier in the designated corridor capable of providing long-term, viable competitive service." (Dole September 25 Letter at 2.)

On the next day, NS changed its proposal. Although there was no change as to P&LE, NS announced that, instead of selling GTI the old Nickel Plate line to St. Louis, it would provide GTI with trackage rights over the CR main line to St. Louis and would make certain other relatively minor "refinements" in the prior proposal. (Letter of September 26, 1985 from Robert B. Claytor to Honorable Elizabeth H. Dole.)

The refined NS proposal has not yet been the subject of any publicly disclosed viability, or other, analysis by any government agency, although interested parties have noted its very fundamental flaws.

Weakness of GTI and P&LE.—But the basic problem with the divestiture idea in NS/CR is not solely in the terms, or the particular structuring, of the divestiture plan. While it is noteworthy that GTI and P&LE are not to be provided meaningful competitive access to all markets identified by DOJ and other parties, the fatal flaw involves GTI and P&LE themselves and their obvious inability—individually or jointly—to provide a long-term remedy for the loss of competition that would occur. In contrast to SE/SP, where several of the railroads proposing remedies have the physical and financial resources to provide shippers with a competitive alternative to the huge merged entity, in the case of NS/CR there is no reasonable prospect that either GTI or P&LE can offer rail users such long-run competitive options.

GTI and P&LE are both tiny, weak carriers. To illustrate, of the 21 Class I railroad systems ranked in terms of the key financial measure of net income, GTI and P&LE in 1984 placed nineteenth and twentieth, respectively (only the bankrupt Milwaukee reported lower earnings). By contrast, NS ranked second in this compilation, immediately ahead of third place CR. Combined, NS/CR would be number one, outpacing the current front-runner, Burlington Northern, by more than $400 million. The divestiture plan thus falsely envisions that the marginal GTI and P&LE can successfully compete head-to-head with what would be the largest railroad in the United States.

Comprised of three lines—the Boston & Maine, the Maine Central, and the Delaware & Hudson—the Guilford system clearly does not have the economic muscle to compete with a consolidated NS/CR. Only recently reorganized, the Boston & Maine and the Delaware & Hudson have been financially distressed for years, and the Maine Central, which is now a smaller Class II railroad, has been only modestly profitable. Consolidated data for Guilford's Rail Division, reported in Table 6 below, reveal that in 1984 net income amounted to about $5.2 million, or only one-half of one percent of the combined net income of $957 million received by NS and CR. Meager as this is, the $5.2 million earned by GTI in 1984 represents a 40-percent decline from the comparable $8.6 million in net income reported by GTI for 1983.

GTI, in short, will be overwhelmed by the proposed NS/CR combination, both physically and financially. NS and CR have more than 10 times as much track as GTI, and a fleet of freight cars on the order of 40 times the size of the GTI fleet. In 1984, the combined operating revenues of NS and CR were 27 times those of the GTI system, and the combined NS/CR revenue ton-mile figure was 25 times larger than that reported for GTI's Class I rail operations.

The relationship between a combined NS/CR and P&LE is even more disproportionate. The P&LE is one of the smallest Class I railroads, with a single main line of track running from Connellsville, Pennsylvania through Pittsburgh to Youngstown, and existing trackage rights over a Conrail line into Ashtabula, Ohio. From 1982 to 1984, P&LE has net losses of over $50 million, representing close to 36 percent of its operating revenues for those years. It is all but insolvent.

Table 7 below sets forth basic P&LE financial data for the years 1983 and 1984.

Net income (loss)	(23,462)	(11,598)

Like GTI, P&LE will be overwhelmed by NS/CR. In 1984, for example, NS and CR—which operate nearly 61 times as much track as P&LE—had combined operating revenues 136 times larger than those of P&LE and combined revenue ton-miles 168 times larger than P&LE's.

Moreover, even if they had the wherewithal, GTI's and P&LE's ability to survive over time, and to compete, will be limited by the fact that it is not proposed to allow them to purchase, and own, the lines for all of their proposed new operations. Instead, significant portions of their new operations will only be trackage rights operations; and their ability to compete will be subject as well to reciprocal switching, car haul, lease and other sharing arrangements with NS/CR. The long-term viability of such arrangements depends, at a minimum, on there being some element of balance, or equality, between the parties involved. As between GTI and P&LE, and NS/CR, there will be no element of balance or equality.

In sum, given the scope of the competitive problems that would be created by an NS/CR combination, the remedy, if any remedy is possible, would have to be massive and drastic in character. No such remedy is readily identifiable. Certainly the modest GTI/P&LE divestiture proposals—involving not only weak railroads but a hard to operate "patchwork" of partial line transfers; trackage rights; and switching, car haul, lease and other arrangements—do not constitute such a remedy. As every study of the matter has concluded, GTI and P&LE will be unlikely to survive in the face of a combined NS/CR; much less will they provide the kind of strong, long-term competitive antidote that would be required if NS and CR were to be allowed to combine.

V. THE "FAILING COMPANY" DOCTRINE WAS REJECTED FOR SOUTHERN PACIFIC—YET CONRAIL'S HEALTH, AND TRENDS, ARE FAR BETTER THAN THOSE OF SOUTHERN PACIFIC

Proponents of the sale of Conrail to NS have argued that the sale is necessary because Conrail's future health is uncertain and only NS's "deep pockets" can insure that Conrail will not again fail and become a property of the federal government. The argument is flawed not only because NS has not made, and could not make, a commitment to support a failing Conrail over time but also, and even more importantly, because there is no evidence whatever that Conrail is failing. To the contrary, Conrail's health is excellent.

In the SF/SP proceeding, the DOJ confronted a similar argument, cast not in terms of "deep pockets" but in terms of the "failing company" doctrine—a judicially fashioned doctrine that provides that an otherwise anticompetitive merger may be lawful if one of the merging firms is failing. The theory underlying the doctrine is that it is a "'lesser of two evils' approach, in which the possible threat to competition resulting from an acquisition is deemed preferable to the adverse impact on competition and other losses if the company goes out of business." United States v. General Dynamics Corp., 415 U.S. 486, 507 (1974).[9] As summarized in DOJ's 1984 Merger Guidelines:

In SF/SP, it was argued by the applicants that the merger should be approved because SP is a "failing company." DOJ rejected the argument, finding that SP, in fact, was not failing. Significantly, a comparison of the financial indicators analyzed by DOJ with respect to SP with the same indicators for CR shows that CR's financial health is not only substantially better than that of SP but also, in objective terms, is very good indeed.

A. SP's Financial Trends Have Not Elicited DOJ's Support for a "Failing Company" Theory

The applicants in the SF/SP proceeding argued that despite the possible anticompetitive nature of the transaction, the merger should be approved because of the poor financial condition of SP and, to a lesser extent, of SF as well.

The evidence presented to support this argument was extensive. The applicants noted that "not a single party or witness argued that SPT [Southern Pacific Transportation Company] is in satisfactory financial condition." (Initial Brief of Primary Applicants (Part Two), Santa Fe Southern Pacific Corporation-Central-Southern Pacific Transportation Company, ICC F.D. No. 30400 at 104.) The applicants introduced evidence that SP's indices of performance in almost every important category have declined dramatically for the past decade (Id. at 99.) SP's operating ratio "soared from a respectable 90 percent in 1973 to a deplorable 106 percent in 1984," and is now one of the highest operating ratios in the industry. (Id.) SP's fixed-charge coverage "plunged from 3.64 times in 1973 to .88 times in 1983 and 1984; and SPT's margin of safety [i.e., the percentage of net income, before federal income taxes, to gross revenue] shrank from 8.13 percent in 1973 to a negative 3.44 percent in 1984." (Id. at 101.) SP's income from operations declined from $137 million in 1973 to a $160 million loss in 1984. (Id. at 99.) During the period from 1981 through the first quarter of 1985, SP's rail operations suffered a total loss of $381.6 million. (Id. at 102.) Finally, SP's total debt outstanding increased from $916.5 million in 1983 to $936.4 million in 1985. (Id.)

Nonetheless, DOJ rejected the failing company argument. DOJ based its conclusion that SP could not be deemed to be a "failing firm" on various financial indicators it grouped into four categories: debt structure, activity, profitability and liquidity.

To evaluate SP's debt structure DOJ used the fixed charge coverage measure or, as denominated by DOJ, the "times interest earned" ratio. (DOJ SF/SP Brief at 60.) This ratio measures the coverage of fixed charges by income available for that purpose and is equal to income before deducting fixed charges, divided by fixed charges plus contingent interest. The higher the ratio, the greater the company's ability to pay its fixed charges due that year. The ICC has "looked for a fixed charge coverage of at least 2.00 and preferably 3.00 or higher" as evidence of an adequate railroad revenue level. Ex Parte No. 353, Adequacy of Railroad Revenue (1978 Determination), 362 I.C.C. 199, 296 (1979). DOJ found that SP's fixed charge coverage ratio was adequate because SP had greatly increased the ratio over the past three years. (DOJ SF/SP Brief at 60.)

Activity ratios, according to DOJ, "generally show the ability of a company to generate earnings from company resources." (Id.) The indicator used by DOJ for this evaluation is the ratio of operating revenues[10] to total assets, or turnover ratio. This ratio measures "a company's sales volume relative to total company assets or resources. Too low a turnover might indicate a company's need to eliminate non-productive assets or increase sales." (Id. at 61.) Again, DOJ noted that this ratio for SP had improved from 1983 to 1984.

DOJ used four indicators to measure profitability: operating ratio, net margin, return on equity and return on assets. The operating ratio compares a company's operating expenses to its operating revenues. A higher ratio is evidence of a less profitable company, and a ratio greater than 1.0 indicates an operating loss. The net margin ratio compares net income to total sales. The return on equity ratio compares net income to net year-end stockholders' equity. The return on assets ratio compares net income to total assets. In contrast to the operating ratio, higher ratios in these three areas indicate better profitability. DOJ found that "SPT's profitability ratios, which measure a company's ability to generate profits, have also shown recent improvement." (DOJ SF/SP Brief at 61.)

Finally, DOJ considered liquidity and, as to this, it noted that "[a]lthough SPT's liquidity has not improved and SPT has in the past sold real estate assets to meet ongoing obligations, there is reason to believe that this solution could change." (Id. at 59-60.)

In sum, on the "failing company" issue, DOJ concluded: "There is virtually no support . . . for the contention that ATSF may in the foreseeable future become a 'failing firm.' Further, from the evidence in the record, SPT does not satisfy the criteria of the failing firm defense. The evidence suggests that SPT could either improve its performance, successfully reorganize or find an alternative purchaser or purchasers for at least parts of its system." (DOJ SF/SP Brief at 56.)

B. Conrail's Trends Are Strong and Its Financial Health Is Excellent

A comparison of the financial condition of SP with that of Conrail—using the same indicators employed by DOJ—confirms not only that Conrail is in far better health than SP but, even more importantly, that Conrail, through efforts in recent years, has become a financially strong railroad that does not need a protective "deep pockets" takeover, even if that were what NS was really proposing.

The following Table 8 compares CR and SP debt structure. CR's coverage ratio has shown significant improvement and is now substantially higher than that of SP. As of 1984, it was three times as great as SP's ratio, a margin that has grown even more during the first nine months of 1985.

[9] The doctrine was first announced by the Supreme Court in International Shoe Co. v. FTC, 280 U.S. 291 (1930), where the Court upheld a merger on the ground, inter alia, that one of the merging firms was a "corporation in failing circumstances." Id. at 301. The Court concluded:

"In the light of the case thus disclosed of a corporation with resources so depleted and the prospect of rehabilitation so remote that it faced the grave probability of a business failure with resulting loss to its stockholders and injury to the communities where its plants were operated, we hold that the purchase of its capital stock by a competitor (there being no other prospective purchaser), not with a purpose to lessen competition, but to facilitate the accumulated business of the purchaser and with the effect of mitigating seriously injurious consequences otherwise probable, is not in contemplation of law prejudicial to the public and does not substantially lessen competition or restrain commerce within the intent of the Clayton Act." Id. at 302-03.

"The Department is unlikely to challenge an anticompetitive merger in which one of the merging firms is allegedly failing when: (1) The allegedly failing firm probably would be unable to meet its financial obligations in the near future; (2) it probably would not be able to reorganize successfully under Chapter 11 of the Bankruptcy Act; and (3) it has made unsuccessful good faith efforts to elicit reasonable alternative offers of acquisition of the failing firm that would both keep it in the market and pose a less severe danger to competition than does the proposed merger." (Footnote omitted.) Merger Guidelines § 5.1, 49 Fed. Reg. 26,824 (1984), reprinted in 2 Trade Reg. Rep. (CCH) § 4490 (1984) ("Merger Guidelines").

The following Table 10 compares SP and CR profitability measures. As the table indicates, CR's operating ratio, which compares a company's operating expenses to operating revenues, consistently has been lower than that of SP. Further, CR's figures for net margin, return on equity, and return on assets are now clearly superior to those of SP.

The following Table 11 compares CR and SP liquidity measures. Again, by any measure, CR's liquidity is superior to that of SP. CR's current ratio, which measures a company's ability to pay its bills as they become due and which is equal to the ratio of current assets to current liabilities, is more than double that of SP. Further, for the last five years CR's net working capital has been positive and steadily improving, whereas SP's net working capital has been increasingly negative.

In addition to the foregoing measures, other current ICC data continue to show that CF is far better off financially than SP. For the full year 1984, for example, CR's net revenue from operations amounted to $449.5 million, compared to only $15.6 million for SP. Moreover, through the first nine months of 1985, CR's net revenue from operations was equal to just under $290 million, while for the same period SP reported a loss of $7.2 million.

Comparisons with SP do not provide the only evidence of CR's health and future prospects.

In its July 29, 1985 staff report, the United States Railway Associations found that "all available evidence supports a finding that Conrail can generate positive cash flow for the foreseeable future. Traffic shortfalls compared to the forecast should not threaten Conrail's survival as long as the rail regulatory framework allows service to be shaped to meet the demands of the marketplace." (Conrail Sale Studies, Part I, A Staff Report of the United States Railway Association, July 29, 1985 at pp. 1-6.)

A leading railroad analyst takes an even more "bullish" view. In a recent article published in Forbes Magazine, Isabel Benham, President of New York's Paintor, Kane research consulting firm, explained Conrail's new competitive strength:

"For the first six months of 1985 Conrail's revenues were off 6%, but net income, adjusted for the payment of state taxes and the reinstatement of wages at the national level, was up from $205 million to $209.5 million, or about 2%. And that isn't all. In 1984 they were one of the strongest railroads in the industry. Their cash flow was equal to 77% of the total debt outstanding, their fixed-charge coverage as 5.4%, nearly twice that of CSX, and even more important, their debt-to-equity ratio was only 16%, the most conservative of any major railroad. This suggests that Conrail paper would qualify for AA rating, and that would assure Conrail access to the capital markets" (Who Gets Conrail? interview by James Cook, Forbes, August 20, 1985 at 55.)

Ms. Benham also responded to the "deep pockets" arguments:

"The government's main argument for selling Conrail to Norfolk Southern is that NS has deep pockets, that it will be protective and protect Conrail in times of adversity. But when you're hard pressed, you don't necessarily help the weaker sister. In any case, Conrail has already demonstrated it has the ability to survive recession. Despite the recession in the 1981-83 period, Conrails' earnings improved every year between 1980 and 1984, rising from a $240 million loss to a $500 million profit last year." (Id.)

As summarized by Conrail's Chief Executive:

"The critical issue in the current debate over Conrail's future is whether Conrail can be financially viable as an independent railroad. The answer is undeniable: Conrail is one of three large, profitable railroads in the eastern half of the nation today and can continue to be profitable, independently, for the long-term." (Leave Conrail Alone, by L. Stanley Crane in the Boston Globe, August 20, 1985).

VI. CONCLUSION

In its brief in SF/SP, DOJ states that differences between its analyses in SF/SP and NS/CR are attributable to availability of data and to "differences in the two mergers (e.g., ATSF/SPT in the West, NS/Conrail in the East." (DOJ SF/SP Brief at 20 n.15.) Consideration of the facts shows, however, that the differences in the mergers are that NS/CR is far more anticompetitive than SF/SP while, at the same time, NS/CR is not even plausibly supportable on the basis of public benefits or the "failing company" doctrine, and the remedies proposed in NS/CR are hopelessly inadequate to address the problems that would be created. If antitrust standards are consistently applied, as they obviously should be, the conclusion that SF/SP, even with remedies, should not be approved necessarily requires the same conclusion as to NS/CR.

One of the considerations that influenced DOJ to oppose the SF/SP merger was its recognition that there were other, less anticompetitive alternatives. In NS/CR, there are also other alternatives. The most obvious, and fully developed, of these is the pending proposal for a public offering of Conrail's stock. This alternative, moreover, is not merely less anticompetitive at all. If implemented, a public offering would obviate all of the competitive issues that an NS/CR combination raises.

Mr. HEINZ. Mr. President, I rise today in opposition to the motion to proceed to Calendar Order 215, S. 638, legislation which would allow the sale of Conrail to the Norfolk-Southern Railroad Corp. The sale of Conrail is an issue that has been under discussion and scrutiny for many months by various congressional committees, by executive departments, and by numerous independent Government agencies and private firms. This attention is well deserved, I believe, because at stake in the sale of Conrail is the economic security of the Northeast and the transportation system of the entire United States. The selection of a purchaser will have profound consequences for our Nation's freight transportation system and the hundreds of thousands of people whose livelihoods depend on it. The sale is of particular importance to the Northeastern region of the country, which is Conrail's primary service area.

Before I discuss the serious reservations I have about S. 638, I will outline the reasons why we should not consider the bill at this time. First, there are three Federal bodies charged with oversight and regulatory responsibilities over railroad mergers—the Justice Department, the Interstate Commerce Commission [ICC], and the United States Railway Association [USRA]. None of these has delivered a final word on S. 638. Let's take a look at why they have not.

The Justice Department has long expressed serious reservations about the antitrust implications of a sale to Norfolk-Southern. Nearly a year ago it ruled that Norfolk-Southern must divest a significant portion of rail lines to other railroads in order to resolve these concerns. Since then, the Department has on two occasions rejected Norfolk-Southern proposals to divest lines on the grounds that they were insufficient to resolve antitrust problems.

The USRA, in a letter to Congressman JAMES FLORIO, indicated that it could not analyze Norfolk-Southern's third divestiture plan as neither of the acquiring railroads—Guilford Transportation Industries and the Pittsburgh & Lake Erie Railroad—had submitted operating plans or financial statements regarding their acquisitions.

The Justice Department, meanwhile, has not even selected an independent consultant to review the antitrust implications of Norfolk-Southern's third divestiture plan. Perhaps this is because they were unhappy with the negative but objective judgments of the consulting firm they retained for the first two divestiture plans.

With respect to the ICC, a still murkier picture exists. Although the agency has heretofore always been accorded an oversight role in rail industry mergers, S. 638 provides no such statutory authority. The ICC has thus far only commented on the Norfolk-Southern proposal at the request of the House Energy and Commerce Committee, which asked that the ICC produce a report on an earlier divestiture plan. This report was highly critical of the feasibility of the divestitures, noting that the acquiring railroads might well not be able to finance, much less operate profitably, the rail lines they would acquire.

It is clear to me that this absence of evidence is sufficient grounds to delay Senate consideration. But because the reservations expressed by the Department of Justice, Interstate Commerce Commission, and United States Railway Association seem not to have deterred the plan's proponents from moving ahead with this legislation, I feel compelled to outline my reservations to such a sale.

A Conrail/Norfolk-Southern merger would result in a dramatic reduction of rail competition in the Northeast. The merger would create a duopoly in the East between Norfolk-Southern and the CSX rail network. Together, Norfolk-Southern and CSX would control nearly all of the rail originations and terminations in eastern cities. This duopoly could breed tacit or direct collusion between these giant rail systems, resulting in the creation of a de facto monopoly. It is this concern which has prompted the Department of Justice to raise antitrust questions about the sale, despite proposals by Norfolk-Southern to divest some of its lines to other rail companies.

Although I could go on, I will focus my opening remarks on the ways in which this proposal differs from the stated objectives of the Department of Transportation in its efforts to return Conrail to the private sector. First, let me say that I wholeheartedly agree that the U.S. Government should return Conrail to private ownership and get out of the railroad business once and for all. I also share Secretary DOLE's concern that we sell Conrail in a manner which insures its long-term financial viability, preserves existing freight service patterns, and achieves the maximum possible return to the taxpayers of this country.

Let us take a look at how a sale to Norfolk-Southern measures up to these criteria. First, with regard to Conrail's financial viability, it should be noted that by the end of 1985, Conrail had a net cash balance of $910 million, capping a 5-year period in which its income has improved steadily. A study by the United States Railway Association has indicated that Conrail is fully capable of remaining profitable as an independent entity. Just last week, Conrail announced yearend profits for 1985 of $440 million—not bad during a year widely judged to have been recessionary for the railroad industry. This evidence indicates to me that a sale to Norfolk-Southern is hardly essential to ensure Conrail's financial viability.

The Department of Transportation's second criteria is that Conrail should be sold to a purchaser which would best retain current service patterns. A sale to Norfolk-Southern would deprive numerous communities, both in the Northeast and across the Nation, of competitive rail service. Consequently, Norfolk-Southern has had to spend many months negotiating with other railroads and with the Departments of Transportation and Justice in an effort to ensure sufficient competition for shippers under the merger. Its latest proposal, however, does not even address competitive problems in 15 of the 30 counties that the Justice Department deemed most serious in response to earlier proposals.

Secretary DOLE's third criteria is to return Conrail to the private sector in a manner which maximizes the financial return to the taxpayers. This laudable objective is met least of all by the proposal to sell Conrail to Norfolk-Southern. Selling Conrail to Norfolk-Southern clears the way for a raid on the Treasury. The sale of Conrail will confer on Norfolk-Southern tax advantages which have been amply documented by the Congressional Budget Office and the Joint Committee on Taxation, costing the United States approximately $400 million in lost revenues—out of a total purchase price of $1.2 billion. Moreover, based in large part on Conrail's 1985 performance, the Morgan-Stanley Corp. has recently increased their offer to purchase Conrail to $1.4 billion, fully $200 million more than Norfolk-Southern's offer.

In addition to not meeting the three objectives sought by Secretary DOLE, a sale to Norfolk-Southern would have a negative impact on employment and on the economy of the Northeast. It is vital to ensure the long-term competitiveness of rail service which shippers need to make business decisions. If we sell Conrail to Norfolk-Southern, we are clearly lessening competition in the long term, by reducing the number of large rail systems in the Northeast from three to two. I am concerned that we would also hurt the business climate in the Northeast, by increasing significantly the number of communities not served by competitive rail service, thereby removing an important incentive for businesses to remain or locate in these areas. We cannot afford to weaken the economy of the industrial Northeast, which is already under siege by foreign competition and outmigration of manufacturing industries to other areas of the United States.

A Conrail/Norfolk-Southern merger would also result in major employment reductions. Although Norfolk-Southern chairman Robert B. Claytor has predicted that job eliminations on the combined system are not likely to exceed 2,300, independent industry analysts have estimated job losses to be as high as 10,000 over the next 5 years. Given these statistics, it is no wonder that nearly all major transportation unions oppose the sale of Norfolk-Southern. Furthermore, direct reductions represent only part of the employment losses. For every person employed by the railroad, six people are employed by companies who depend on the railroads to ship their goods to market. Vast numbers of people employed by adversely affected shippers could lose their jobs as a result of a Conrail/Norfolk-Southern merger.

For these reasons, I believe that the merger is not necessary to ensure Conrail's future viability, and, moreover, threatens to endanger the rail network and economic future of the Northeast.

Mr. President, my other great concern is that selling Conrail to Norfolk-Southern would devastate the economy of Pennsylvania. Many of the job losses resulting from this merger would occur in Pennsylvania, where approximately 15,000 Conrail employees live—the most of any State. There are major repair plants in Altoona, Hollidaysburg, and Juniata, and Conrail's corporate headquarters is in Philadelphia. The merger would reduce rail competition for numerous shippers in Pennsylvania and increase their costs, and would result in the loss of thousands of tons of cargo currently shipped through the Port of Philadelphia. This traffic diversion is of particular concern as Conrail and the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania have invested millions of dollars in a major coal export terminal at the Philadelphia Port and in other facilities to increase the economic efficiency of traffic movements through the port.

Mr. President, I am hard pressed to find any positive aspects of a Conrail/Norfolk-Southern merger. It would severely reduce competition in the railroad industry. It would eliminate thousands of jobs in an area of the country where unemployment is still a serious problem. It would produce a negligible return to the U.S. taxpayers, and it would not enhance the viability of an already viable railroad. I have joined with eight of my colleagues in introducing legislation, S. 1361, a bill to provide for a public sale of Conrail. I would encourage my colleagues to study this proposal and its clear advantages over a sale to Norfolk-Southern.

Finally, I would remind my colleagues of our intentions when we passed the Northeast Rail Services Act of 1981, which provides the means by which to return Conrail to the private sector. The law stipulates that we should sell Conrail as a separate entity if it is viable, and that we should break it up and sell off its assets to other companies if it is not viable. The intent of this law as I perceive it is to reap the competitive benefits of a viable Conrail by selling it off whole. Creating the largest rail merger in our history is clearly not the purpose of the law.

In closing, I would like to point out that we will have ample time to discuss the Norfolk-Southern proposal in its various aspects. I will just say at this point that S. 638 is fundamentally flawed because it would not accomplish the important objectives sought by the Department of Transportation to preserve competition, to ensure Conrail's future viability, and to provide maximum return to the taxpayers.

Furthermore, there are as yet significant unanswered questions regarding the public policy implications of a sale of Conrail to Norfolk-Southern. I would certainly feel more comfortable about considering this bill if the three principal Federal agencies which have jurisdiction over railroad matters—the ICC, the Justice Department, and the USRA—had indicated their support for this sale or were even finished analyzing Norfolk-Southern's latest divestiture plan. Until that happens it is irresponsible for the Senate to consider S. 638. If we are forced to consider this bill now despite the incomplete of the record, then I would urge my colleagues to oppose this legislation.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Will the Senator yield to the Senator from Ohio without losing his right to the floor?

Mr. SPECTER. I am willing to yield to the Senator from Ohio with the understanding, for which I ask unanimous consent, that whatever the Senator from Ohio proposes to do the Senator from Pennsylvania will not lose his right to the floor but may continue when the Senator from Ohio has completed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, I move that the Senate move to the consideration of S. 638, the Conrail bill, and I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. DANFORTH. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second? There is not a sufficient second.

Mr. DANFORTH. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania has the floor. The Senator from Pennsylvania yielded to the Senator from Ohio.

The Senator from Pennsylvania has the floor.

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, proceeding with the reasons as to why I believe that these matters on outstanding questions are of such tremendous importance, and require extensive consideration by this body, and authoritative answers before this body is called upon to make a judgment on S. 638, I would like to refer at this time to an analysis of the antitrust considerations, again made by Arnold and Porter, which summarizes the history and the factual circumstances of the matters at issue.

The point is made very cogently, at page 5, that the Department of Justice and its Antitrust Division have been acting really as legal counsel to the Department of Transportation since the January 1985 letter. As Arnold and Porter notes, the Division's role as advocate may be found in the Division's widespread assertion of the "work product" privilege in resisting disclosure of documents in a Freedom of Information lawsuit brought by CSX against the Department of Justice, and currently pending in the U.S. District Court for the District of Columbia.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent at this time that the full text of this letter of January 8, 1986, from Arnold and Porter to Senator THURMOND and Senator BIDEN be included in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the memorandum was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ARNOLD & PORTER,
Washington, DC, January 8, 1986.

Re Norfolk Southern-Conrail.

Hon. STROM THURMOND,
Chairman, Senate Committee on the Judiciary, Dirksen Office Building, U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

Hon. JOSEPH R. BIDEN, Jr.,
Senate Committee on the Judiciary, Dirksen Office Building, U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATORS: We are writing on behalf of CSX Corporation ("CSX") to set forth our views concerning the inadequacy of the process that has culminated in the Antitrust Division's preliminary approval of the latest divestiture plan put forward by Norfolk Southern Corporation ("Norfolk Southern"). That plan, advanced in aid of Norfolk Southern's proposed acquisition of the government's stock interest in Consolidated Rail Corporation ("Conrail"), would involve divestitures of line segments and other rail assets to Guilford Transportation Industries, Inc. ("Guilford" or "GTI") and Pittsburgh & Lake Erie Railroad ("P&LE").

SUMMARY OF CSX'S POSITION

The Antitrust Division's preliminary approval of the latest Norfolk Southern divestiture plan is fundamentally flawed for the following reasons, among others:

The Division refused to consider the views of interested and affected parties, and instead permitted Norfolk Southern to withhold from the public any information about its latest divestiture proposal until after the Division gave its preliminary approval;

The Division lacked both the information and the in-house expertise necessary to make an informed, meaningful judgment concerning the latest divestiture proposal;

On its face, the latest divestiture plan is as inadequate as the earlier versions, because of the manifest incapacity of Guilford and P&LE to provide viable, long-term competitive rail transportation in the Conrail service area.

INADEQUATE DISCLOSURE OF MEANINGFUL INFORMATION

From late September 1985, when Norfolk Southern earlier proposed and the Antitrust Division speedily rejected a previous Norfolk Southern divestiture plan, to and including November 19 and 21, 1985, when the Antitrust Division gave its preliminary assent to the latest version, Norfolk Southern and the Division conducted their business behind a veil of secrecy. By the admission of Assistant Attorney General Ginsburg before members of the Senate Judiciary Committee on November 21, 1985, representatives of Norfolk Southern and the Division engaged in nearly continuous negotiations commencing in late September.

On or about November 11, 1985, Norfolk Southern, together with Guilford and P&LE, submitted to the Division a "Joint Memorandum" that recited certain particulars of a further revised divestiture package. The Joint Memorandum was unaccompanied by meaningful evidentiary support, or by evidence of revised or amended contracts between Norfolk Southern on the one hand and Guilford and P&LE on the other. Thereafter, according to Mr. Ginsburg, the Division and Norforlk Southern engaged in further negotiations, again of an unspecified character.

During those negotiations, according to later reports, Mr. Ginsburg wrung additional concessions from Norfolk Southern. The particulars of those concessions have not yet been made public.

On November 19, 1985, the Antitrust Division stated in a press release that it "appeared" Norfolk Southern now had advanced a satisfactory divestiture package. Again, only the sketchiest of information was announced.

Throughout this "process" of developing Norfolk Southern's third divestiture plan, the many interested parties who are vitally concerned about the preservation of competition in rail transportation in the eastern United States vainly sought to be heard before the Division. In conversations with the Staff and in letters to Mr. Ginsburg, they pointed out that past Norfolk Southern divestiture proposals had proved inadequate upon public examination; that the Staff had benefitted from the ventilation of those proposals, and their subjection to public scrutiny as proposals, before the Division gave any indication, however preliminary, of its approval or disapproval. Those arguments were made without avail.

On November 21, 1985, two days after the Division's press release, the proponents of the Norfolk Southern transaction appeared before members of the Senate Judiciary Committee. Secretary Dole and Mr. Ginsburg were heard at length. Again, critics of the transaction sought but were denied an opportunity to be heard before the Committee. The Committee's session was called at such an inappropriate time under the Senate's rules that the Committee Chairman was obliged to declare the session not a hearing, but only a "meeting," of which no official transcript was even maintained.

To this day, the particulars of the latest Norfolk Southern divestiture program are unknown to the public. Perhaps they are unknown to Guilford and P&LE; presumably they are unknown as well to the Antitrust Division. So far as is publicly known, the agreements have yet to be reduced to writing. Nobody has publicly specified what industries will be served by Guilford along substantial segments of the rail lines at issue in the latest plan. The candidates for divestiture have not made public updated financial projections or pro formas. Updated operating plans have not been forthcoming from either Norfolk Southern or from Guilford or P&LE.

THE ANTITRUST DIVISION NECESSARILY LACKS THE DATA NEEDED TO MAKE AN INFORMED FINAL JUDGMENT

The Antitrust Division says it has exacted meaningful concessions from Norfolk Southern and has obtained every element needed to establish viable, long-term, effective competition in rail transportation in the geographic area to be dominated by the combined Norfolk Southern-Conrail. That position is insupportable. Proof of this may be found in a partial listing of the indispensable information that the Antitrust Division admittedly did not have when it signaled its preliminary approval of the Norfolk Southern divestiture plan and that, so far as can be ascertained, the Division still does not have:

The written agreements between Norfolk Southern on the one hand, and Guilford and P&LE on the other, setting forth the terms and conditions of the latest divestiture plan (including such fundamental matters as the total price to be paid by P&LE for the lines to be acquired by it);

Marketing and operating plans for Guilford and P&LE, including projected train schedules and supporting data for revenue and cost projections;

Financial projections for Guilford and P&LE, including sources of funding for the payments to be made to Norfolk Southern in respect of line acquisitions, equipment purchases, leasehold arrangements, and track and yard rehabilitation; pro forma financials showing anticipated revenues and expenditures in the first full year of operations following divestiture; and balance sheets for the pro forma year;

Density projections showing the likely volume of traffic to be handled over the rail lines and trackage rights to be acquired by Guilford and P&LE, together with projections of commodity "mix" sufficient to form a reasonable basis for projections of anticipated revenues.

The Antitrust Division's failure to have even the most rudimentary information available to it before intimating its preliminary acceptance of the latest Norfolk Southern plan demonstrates that the Division cannot have analyzed the Norfolk Southern proposal with the care warranted by a matter of such importance. If this were a proceeding before the Interstate Commerce Commission (the "ICC"), the materials released to date by the proponents of the Norfolk Southern-Conrail combination and ancillary divestiture would fail to satisfy the basic requirements of the administrative agency for an opening filing. Instead, Norfolk Southern has accomplished a de facto reversal of the burden of coming forward with evidence to support its proposals—it, and its proposed candidates for divestiture, keep their information close to the vest, while commentators and critics are obliged to scramble for relevant data and to speculate concerning the details of the contemplated transaction.

In one sense, the Antitrust Division's latest response to Norfolk Southern comes as no surprise. The Division does not function in this matter as the neutral arbiter of a merger proposed by two private parties. Rather, the Division is acting as legal counsel to the Department of Transportation, which since January 1985 has been pressing for the sale of the government's stock interest in Conrail to Norfolk Southern. Proof of the Division's role as advocate, rather than as disinterested administrator, may be found in the Division's widespread assertion of the "work product" privilege in resisting disclosure of documents in a Freedom of Information Act lawsuit brought by CSX against the Department of Justice and currently pending before Judge Jackson in the United States District Court for the District of Columbia. As advocate for the cause of its client, rather than an impartial administrator passing upon the merger plans of two unaffiliated parties, the Division has put the best face it can on its client's determined course of action—without meaningful review of the facts before the Division undertook to express a preliminary opinion of approval. In effect, the Antitrust Division by its actions of November 19 and 21 has disqualified itself as the watchdog of the public interest so far as the Conrail issue is concerned.

THE PRESENT DIVESTITURE PLAN REMAINS WOEFULLY DEFICIENT

It merits emphasis that this is the latest in a series of occasions on which Norfolk Southern, together with Guilford and P&LE, has announced a "definitive" plan of divestiture, which supposedly provides a complete answer to the Antitrust Division's requirements for approval of the Norfolk Southern-Conrail combination. The first such plan featured as its centerpiece the sale to Guilford of the old Nickel Plate line from Crestline, Ohio to East St. Louis, Illinois—a line of track in such disrepair that it is now generally known as the "Streak of Rust." When the proposal initially advanced by Norfolk Southern was universally condemned, Norfolk, after having previously tacked on some inconsequential trackage-rights arrangements for Guilford in the East (to Croxton Yard, New Jersey, and Lurgan, Pennsylvania), substituted for the Nickel Plate a "trackage rights" arrangement over Conrail's parallel line from Ridgeway, Ohio to East St. Louis. That arrangement may have improved the quality of track involved in the transaction, but it lessened the number and volume of shippers to be served directly by Guilford, because the "trackage rights" arrangement was "overhead" only—it carried no right to serve customers en route.

Now that its second proposal has been rejected, Norfolk Southern has come up with a third plan, and a fourth public declaration that at last it has resolved all outstanding anticompetitive issues. There is no reason to suppose that Norfolk Southern's latest proposal is any more acceptable than the earlier versions. Each of these proposals in turn has been discredited in the public eye after interested (and disinterested) parties have had an opportunity to examine the details and to comment upon them.

On its face, the latest plan fails to accomplish more than marginal adjustments to the earlier variations. P&LE is accorded the right to purchase an additional line of track, from Toledo to Fort Wayne—which is said to be akin to the old Nickel Plate in terms of its parlous condition, and which may well be nicknamed "Son of Streak of Rust." Guilford obtains the nominal opportunity to provide rail transportation service to Detroit (but not to Ann Arbor), but only on an arrangement that, according to Conrail, will enable Guilford to serve fewer than one-quarter of the shippers and receivers in the Detroit metropolitan area. Also, Guilford obtains the theoretical right to provide outbound rail transportation service for some (but not all) of the automotive plants in Wayne County, but only if Guilford can obtain the highly specialized, expensive automotive transportation equipment that the auto manufacturers insist their rail carriers furnish—equipment that currently is in short supply in the marketplace, and that Norfolk Southern has given no indication it will make available to Guilford.

Guilford's own sketchy figures, released as part of the November 11, 1985 Joint Memorandum, disclose that under the now-pending plan of divestiture, Guilford's basic plan of business is essentially unaltered. Guilford will not provide comprehensive rail transportation service in the area deemed by the Antitrust Division to be adversely affected by the Norfolk Southern-Conrail combination. Rather, Guilford stands by its original intention to concentrate on providing TOFC service from Boston and New York in the East to Chicago and St. Louis in the West—through the impacted area as defined by the Division, but not in it. That service will be confined for the most part to one through train in each direction each day. If the congressional testimony of Guilford's principal shareholder is to be believed, GTI's service on this time-sensitive traffic is to be provided on trains that will operate at 40 or 50 miles per hour, in contrast to Norfolk Southern-Conrail's 60 to 70 mile per hour service.

THE NORFOLK SOUTHERN-CONRAIL COMBINATION PORTENDS A MASSIVE VIOLATION OF THE ANTITRUST LAWS

No observer of the situation seriously disputes that a combination of Norfolk Southern and Conrail, standing alone, would violate the federal antitrust laws. The Antitrust Division has said so. In his letter of January 29, 1985 to Secretary Dole, then Assistant Attorney General McGrath wrote: "[W]e have concluded that, without appropriate divestitures, the proposed merger would violate both Clayton Act and Interstate Commerce Act merger review standards. The merger would have a significant adverse effect on competition for the transport of commodities to and from a number of locations in several states, with the greatest adverse effect occurring at locations along an east-west rail corridor running between Buffalo and Pittsburgh in the east and St. Louis and Chicago in the west" (McGrath Jan. 29, 1985 letter, p. 1).

To be sure, many observers, including two former heads of the Antitrust Division, have questioned the thoroughness of the Division's analysis leading even to the foregoing conclusion. First, the Division neglected the "monopoly extension" aspects of the Norfolk Southern-Conrail combination, arising from Conrail's rail transportation monopoly throughout the vital tri-State region encompassed by eastern Pennsylvania, New York, and New Jersey. Second, the Division employed a series of "screens"—many of them unprecedented—to narrow its projection of the adverse effects of the transaction. Third, the Division ignored the issue of "resourcing" basic commodity movements, such as coal and grain, that will arise once a dominant Norfolk Southern-Conrail combination alters transportation patterns throughout the present Conrail service territory and beyond. Finally, the Division departed from methodologies customarily used by it in rail merger cases (including most prominently in the Santa Fe-Southern Pacific proceeding, currently before the ICC).

In effect, the Antitrust Division treated the antitrust issues presented by the proposed Norfolk Southern-Conrail combination as a static picture, taken at the hypothesized instant of combination, while disregarding the dynamic consequences that would flow from the transaction after it is consummated. As a result of these idiosyncracies in its antitrust analysis, the Division cast in doubt both the process and the conclusion of its study of the proposed Norfolk Southern-Conrail combination.

But even on its own terms, the Division's assessment of the anticompetitive impact of the propose combination should have revealed the inadequacies of the divestiture plan put forward by Norfolk Southern and now provisionally accepted by Assistant Attorney General Ginsburg.

THE DIVESTITURE REQUIRED TO SATISFY THE CONCERNS OF THE ANTITRUST DIVISION MUST BE MEANINGFUL

From its first expression of views, the Antitrust Division has insisted that on the basis of its own investigation, the only remedy for the massive antitrust violation inherent in the Norfolk Southern-Conrail combination, even as narrowly defined by the Division, would be a significant divestiture of rail lines and assets: "to one or more independent acquirers, other than CSX or any entity owned or controlled by CSX, that would provide long-term, viable, and competitive rail service to locations along the corridor [described above]" (Jan. 29, 1985 letter, p. 1) (emphasis supplied).

Underscoring the foregoing views, then Assistant Attorney General McGrath advised Secretary Dole: "To ensure competitive service, the divestiture must satisfy [a number of] conditions. . . . [T]he acquirer or acquirers . . . must demonstrate to the satisfaction of the Attorney General that it possesses the managerial, operational, and financial capability necessary to compete effectively, and to remain a viable entity providing long-term rail service along the designated corridor" (id., p. 7).

Again, in an April 15, 1985 letter to Congressman Dingell, then Acting Assistant Attorney General Rule said: "Our divestiture plan requires a divestiture to one or more long-term viable competitors. To meet these criteria, the ultimate operator(s) of the divested lines will have to be more than a marginal competitor or one capable of being made so by its purchaser" (Rule Apr. 15, 1985 letter, p. 43) (emphasis supplied).

GUILFORD AND P&LE ARE INHERENTLY INADEQUATE AS CANDIDATES FOR THE REQUIRED DIVESTITURE

From the outset, analysis of Norfolk Southern's divestiture proposals has focused on the question posed by the Antitrust Division since last spring—whether Norfolk Southern's favored candidates for divestiture, Guilford and P&LE, either singly or in combination, possess "the managerial, operational, and financial capability necessary to compete effectively, and to remain a viable entity providing long-term rail service . . ." The answer to that question, from all objective sources, has been a resounding "No."

On August 30, 1985, in a report submitted to a subcommittee of the House Commerce Committee chaired by Congressman Florio, the Staff of the ICC concluded unambiguously that neither Guilford nor P&LE could survive as long-term, viable entities in a rail transportation market dominated by a combined Norfolk Southern-Conrail. Said the ICC Staff concerning Guilford: "Because (Guilford's) assumptions [concerning the condition of lines to be acquired, its ability to provide time-competitive service on TOFC traffic, its likely additional gross revenues, and the unlikelihood of substantial diversions from its lines to those of the combined Norfolk Southern-Conrail] generally are without merit, Guilford's proposal will not result in a viable post-divestiture operation" (ICC Staff Study, p. 7) (emphasis supplied).

As for P&LE, the ICC Staff said: "P&LE's financial forecasts are far more open to question. It must be noted that, even if all of P&LE's [operating and marketing] projections are accepted, P&LE admits that it cannot service all of its substantial debt using revenues from rail operations. Substantial income from the sale of, and use of, non-rail assets is needed to cover debt payments.

"P&LE is not now a financially viable carrier and its acquisition of the new lines will not enable it to reverse its already precarious financial position" (id., pp. 9, 10) (emphasis supplied).

The Antitrust Division candidly advised Congress in April 1985 that it "does not have in-house expertise to evaluate technical and operational aspects of any proposed divestitures" (Rule April 15, 1985 letter to Congressman Dingell, p. 45). Accordingly, after publishing a solicitation for bids, the Division retained R.L. Banks & Associates, a consulting firm, to assist it in evaluating Norfolk Southern's then-pending divestiture plan. Less than a month after publication of the ICC Staff report, discussed above, the Banks organization came to the same conclusion as had the ICC Staff. With respect to Guilford's financials, the Banks organization said, in pertinent part:

"GTI's viability would be dependent heavily upon the realization of several optimistic assumptions, and . . . even under the most favorable circumstances GTI's continued existence would be parlous.

* * * * *

"Doubts about the realism of the marketing and operating plans apply equally to the financial statements; the very real possibility that GTI would fail to realize projected gains in revenues and efficiency leads to the conclusion that survival of an expanded GTI system is yet to be proven" (Banks Report, pp. 13, 14) (emphasis supplied).

As for P&LE, Banks' assessment was even gloomier:

"Although the data provided by P&LE are incomplete and inadequate to support a positive assessment of P&LE's longterm viability, there is adequate evidence to support the view that seriously unrealistic assumptions have been factored into P&LE's planning. . . .

"P&LE's pro forma balance sheet shows that even after financial restructuring, its debt/equity ratio is extremely unfavorable reaching a level usually considered above financially sound levels.

* * * * *

"[T]he review of available financial data for the P&LE . . . raises serious concern as to whether a Business Plan and financing agreement can be developed that would allow an affirmative finding with respect to the likely long-term viability of the P&LE" (id., pp. 19, 20) (emphasis supplied).

In a 16-page appendix, the Banks study listed numerous issues and documents requiring further study before a favorable opinion concerning the viability of Guilford and P&LE could be expressed. To date, so far as we are aware, none of those issues has been determined; none of the documents produced. So far as appears, the Antitrust Division has not begun, let alone completed, the process by which the resolution of the issues identified by Banks could be accomplished.

* * * * *

From the day that Norfolk Southern first proposed Guilford and P&LE as its candidates for divestiture to the present, no spokesman for any point of view, other than Norfolk Southern itself and Guilford and P&LE as the beneficiaries of the proposed divestitures, has intimated that Guilford and P&LE could qualify as satisfactory candidates for divestiture under the standards announced by the Antitrust Division.

THE ANTITRUST DIVISION'S OWN PRIOR CRITICISM SHOWS THAT GUILFORD AND P&LE ARE UNACCEPTABLE AS DIVESTITURE CANDIDATES

Until last November, no commentator had been more forthright in his criticism of Guilford and P&LE as proposed candidates for divestiture than the present Assistant Attorney General himself. In a letter to Secretary Dole dated September 25, 1985, Mr. Ginsburg condemned the Norfolk Southern divestiture plan then pending before the Antitrust Division on a number of grounds, including the following:

First, Mr. Ginsburg deplored the absence of a financial commitment to Guilford or P&LE sufficient to support either carrier's burden of acquiring rail lines and assets from Norfolk Southern, providing for necessary rehabilitation of lines and terminal facilities, and acquiring necessary locomotives and rolling stock. Said Mr. Ginsburg:

"[O]ur review indicates that GTI has underestimated the amount of capital required to rehabilitate the lines it would acquire and that GTI has not yet obtained a firm commitment for the financing necessary in order to acquire and rehabilitate the divested lines. This raises serious questions as to GTI's financial viability" (Sept. 25, 1985, letter, p. 2).

In contrast to the firm commitment required by Mr. Ginsburg, GTI at the time had "obtained only a letter from an investment bank stating its opinion that GTI could obtain certain financing, conditioned upon unspecified covenants yet to be negotiated" (id. n. 2).

The same was true as to P&LE. Said Mr. Ginsburg: "It appears even less likely that P&LE could obtain the financing necessary to acquire and operate the assets necessary in order to provide truly competitive service" (id. n. 3).

We ask: What has changed with respect to either Guilford or P&LE's financing since Mr. Ginsburg's letter of September 25?

The answer is: Nothing. Guilford still projects that it needs to raise $55 million in order to complete the acquisition and to make related rehabilitation and other investments. Some $35 million of those funds must come from sources other than Guilford's principal shareholder. To date, there is no indication that Guilford has obtained any firm commitment for the advance of such sums.

The situation for P&LE is even worse. Under the latest divestiture plan, that carrier is required to undertake the purchase of even more track than was the case at the time of Mr. Ginsburg's September 25 letter. As in the case of Guilford, there is no indication that P&LE has obtained the financing necessary to make the required acquisitions.

Second, Mr. Ginsburg in his September 25, 1985 letter said: "Also of great concern is the fact that GTI's operating plan provides no assurance that GTI will provide the sort of competition with the merged NS/Conrail that would be necessary in order to eliminate the problems created by the sale of Conrail to NS" (Sept. 25, 1985 letter, p. 2).

Again, we ask: What has changed in this respect since September 25?

Again, the answer is: For all practical purposes, nothing. Under the latest divestiture plan, Guilford will have the nominal opportunity to reach various points in the Midwest. That does not mean that Guilford actually will provide service to those points, or that it is capable of doing so. It does not even mean that Guilford will be legally obliged, or contractually committed, to provide service to and from these points. Aside from Guilford's own unsubstantiated numbers, there is no evidence to support the notion that Guilford can provide meaningful, competitive rail transportation service to any point in its system as expanded under the latest Norfolk Southern plan of divestiture. That the commodity-location markets identified by the Antitrust Division as in need of competitive relief will become theoretically accessible to Guilford after divestitures does not mean that those markets will become "contestable" in fact. They will not be contestable if Guilford lacks the wherewithal to contest them.

As for P&LE, that hapless carrier's situation is even worse. So far as the public record discloses, P&LE has not yet submitted any numbers to the Antitrust Division to support the theory that it somehow will provide meaningful, competitive rail transportation service in the territories it now will reach under the latest plan of divestiture. Absent P&LE's own numbers, how can the Antitrust Division have concluded, even preliminarily, that that carrier will be in position to provide the meaningful competitive service that the Division previously has insisted upon as a prerequisite to approval of the Norfolk Southern acquisition?

Third, Mr. Ginsburg in his September 25, 1985 letter complained that: "GTI's current operating plan shows that GTI has no intention of providing a competitive alternative to shippers in Wayne and Washtenaw Counties in Michigan [respectively, Detroit and Ann Arbor]. Yet those two counties were identified in the January 29 letter as counties (a) that must be served by an independent carrier and (b) that generate a very large portion of the problem revenues identified in that letter" (Sept. 25, 1985 letter, p. 3).

Again, we ask: What has changed since September 25?

The answer is: Not much. To be sure, under the latest plan of divestiture, Norfolk Southern will allow Guilford to reach Detroit from Toledo and Fort Wayne. In and out of Detroit, Guilford's own sketchy "operating plan" apparently proposes to offer not more than one train per day in each direction to and from East St. Louis, Chicago, and New York/Boston. That one train apparently will be expected to handle both TOFC traffic (which by definition is time-sensitive) and so-called manifest or "general freight" traffic, which, again by definition, is local in nature. It is impossible to have a rail transport service that indiscriminately handles both TOFC and general freight traffic on the same train and to provide meaningful competition to the combined NS-CR. The TOFC traffic will be so seriously delayed by the local movements of the train that the carrier will cease to provide competitive TOFC service. Loss of TOFC traffic, in turn, will jeopardize Guilford's ability, even on its own figures, to attain the level of financial performance, with cash flow from operations, that is indispensable to competitive survival in the rail transportation industry.

Guilford's projected one-train-per-day service between Detroit and other points on its system contrasts dramatically with the numerous trains per day currently operated in and out of Detroit by Conrail—a number that hardly can be expected to decline once Conrail is absorbed in the Norfolk Southern system.

THE DIVESTITURE PLAN FAILS TO PROVIDE COMPETITIVE SERVICE TO ANN ARBOR

As recently as October 22, 1985, Mr. Ginsburg assured Congressman Dingell that "we will not recommend that the Attorney General approve a divestiture unless it provides a competitive rail alternative for the major motor vehicle facilities located in Wayne and Washtenaw Counties." (Oct. 22, 1985 letter, p. 9) (emphasis supplied). Yet, it is apparent on the face of the latest divestiture proposal that Washtenaw County, Michigan (Ann Arbor) is left without divestiture relief. Neither Guilford nor P&LE will acquire any right of access to that county, whether by conveyance of rail lines in fee or lease, or by the grant of trackage rights of whatever character.

Instead, under the latest Norfolk Southern plan, Guilford will provide so-called "indirect" service to and from Ann Arbor via a connection with the Ann Arbor Railroad at Milan, Michigan. The first problem with this proposal is that it lacks the concurrence of the Ann Arbor. That railroad currently reaches Toledo on its own lines. There is no reason that it will do Norfolk Southern the favor of agreeing to interchange traffic with Guilford at Milan, which lies just outside Ann Arbor on the way to Toledo. Interchange at Milan would short-haul the Ann Arbor, thereby depriving that regional railroad of its present long-haul and associated revenue.

Earlier, the Antitrust Division tacitly conceded that "indirect" service, such as that now envisioned for Washtenaw County, would be unacceptable. In late September, the Antitrust Division condemned the arrangement whereby Guilford theoretically would have provided "indirect" service to Detroit and Ann Arbor via a connection with the Grand Trunk Western at Toledo. Grand Trunk had protested that it would refuse to shorthaul itself over Toledo for the benefit of Guilford. The situation is parallel in all respects with Ann Arbor at Milan. Just as the earlier proposed "solution" to the Detroit-Ann Arbor problem at Toledo proved unworkable, so is the present proposed arrangement to "solve" the Washtenaw County problem at Milan.

Even the long-haul connection of the Ann Arbor with Guilford at Toledo is no answer to the Washtenaw County problem. Even before Norfolk Southern's latest divestiture plan, the arrangement whereby Guilford would reach Toledo provided a theoretical long-haul connection for the carrier with the Ann Arbor. The Antitrust Division's earlier rejection of the Toledo "solution" necessarily reflected its dissatisfaction with the notion that Guilford's interchange of traffic with the Ann Arbor at that city somehow could alleviate the anticompetitive problems in Washtenaw County presented by a Norfolk Southern-Conrail combination.

NORFOLK SOUTHERN HAS NOT SHOWN THAT ITS CANDIDATES FOR DIVESTITURE WILL ATTRACT SUFFICIENT TRAFFIC TO BE VIABLE

A key component of rail carrier viability is the volume, along with the "mix," of traffic to be handled by the proposed candidates for divestiture. The Antitrust Division recognized this principle at least as early as April of this year, when, in a letter to Congressman Dingell, then Acting Assistant Attorney General Rule advised:

"The Department's major concern regarding the divestiture is that the entity or entities purchasing the divested assets be, to the maximum extent possible, strong, independent competitors in the affected markets.

This means that the purchaser or purchasers must be financially sound, well-managed, and that, following the divestiture, the new entity or entities operating in the region must have access to a volume of traffic sufficient to enable it (or them) to achieve the economies required to be a long term, viable, competitive force in the markets affected by Norfolk Southern's acquisition of Conrail" (Apr. 15, 1985 letter p. 47) (emphasis supplied).

As noted above, both the ICC Staff and the Banks organization have shown that neither GTI nor P&LE qualifies as a "financially sound" rail carrier. Noteworthy here is the Division's insistence upon the divestiture candidates' access to traffic in volumes sufficient to sustain operations in the long run. The ICC Staff and the Banks organization have expressed negative views on this point as well.

So far as the public record discloses, P&LE has offered nothing to support the notion that it will attain the requisite volume of traffic to achieve viable competitive status. To the contrary, now that Guilford and P&LE will compete with one another to a certain extent, based upon their parallel trackage between Detroit and Fort Wayne, P&LE may well lose traffic as a result of the latest divestiture plan.

Guilford has made self-serving, unsubstantiated claims that it will attract higher volumes of traffic to its lines, but has yet to submit credible proof to that effect. Its prior projections of this type, after study, invariably have been rejected as unrealistic. Notwithstanding those earlier rejections, coming from expert, disinterested observers such as the ICC Staff and the Banks organization, Guilford has done nothing to meet their criticisms. Rather, it has tacked on new unsubstantiated numbers (reflecting the claimed adjustments from the modifications in the divestiture scheme) to its old unsubstantiated numbers. It has proceeded as though not one word of adverse commentary had been sounded in respect of its prior projections.

Moreover, Guilford has nowhere addressed the point that it will operate under a special handicap wherever it reaches customers only by means of the reciprocal switching service to be afforded it by Norfolk Southern—which, so far as can be determined, appears to encompass the greater part of the volume of the new traffic that Guilford anticipates it will handle on its expanded lines following divestiture. For each such switch, Guilford will have to pay Norfolk Southern up to $250—a payment that must come "off the top" of the gross revenues received by Guilford for the long-haul movement. Where Guilford is dependent upon Norfolk Southern for reciprocal switching service at both ends of a given movement (which is likely to occur throughout the expanded territory to be reached by Guilford after divestiture), GTI will be required to pay Norfolk Southern up to $500, again "off the top." Saddled with such operating expenses, Guilford will find it difficult, if not impossible, to provide competitive pricing for its transportation service and simultaneously to carry a significant share of revenues to the bottom line.

Under such circumstances, it strains credulity to say that it "appears" the Norfolk Southern solution can satisfy the Division's requirements.

THE DIVESTEES' SERVICE OPPORTUNITIES WILL BE SEVERELY CIRCUMSCRIBED UNDER THEIR AGREEMENTS WITH NORFOLK SOUTHERN

A major component of the Norfolk Southern divestiture package is the grant of "trackage rights," primarily to Guilford. A hefty majority of the line "access" to be accorded Guilford by Norfolk Southern will consist of trackage rights—some 1,080 miles in trackage rights, according to the November 11, 1985 Joint Memorandum, in contrast to a mere 460 miles to be conveyed to Guilford in fee.

A commercially significant portion of the trackage rights to be accorded Guilford, as well as those to be accorded P&LE, will consist of "overhead" rights only—that is, solely the right to haul traffic along the length of the line in question, from one terminus to the other, without providing local service to customers en route, and without interchanging traffic with connecting rail carriers at junctions along the way. Yet, on March 28, 1985, in a letter to Norfolk Southern, a senior Staff member of the Division said:

"[U]nder paragraph 3 of the Attachment [to the February 8, 1985 Memorandum of Intent between Norfolk Southern and the Department of Transportation], it is anticipated that the new entity [to be formed by divestiture] will provide rail service 'along the rail corridor(s) and to, from and between the counties enumerated.' . . . It would be clearly inconsistent with this language to deny the new firm the opportunity to serve the shippers along the corridors where the divestiture will occur" (Weiss March 28, 1985 letter, p. 2) (emphasis in last lines supplied).

By contrast, Mr. Ginsburg's preliminary approval of Norfolk Southern's latest divestiture plan does not give recognition to the patent inconsistency between the continued "overhead" trackage arrangement accorded Guilford and P&LE, on the one hand, and the requirements imposed by the Division in its January 29 and March 28 letters, on the other.

Even where Norfolk Southern recently has expanded its grant of trackage rights to embrace the opportunity for direct local service (which continues not to include Detroit), as well as interchange with connecting carriers, none of the proponents of the transaction has quantified the extent to which those grants are meaningful. An assessment must be made concerning the specific industries to be served by Guilford and P&LE along the lines over which they will operate on trackage rights. Until that assessment is offered by the proponents of the plan, it is hardly incumbent on the commentators to seek to evaluate the latest divestiture plan, much less to determine whether it accomplishes the objectives previously expressed by the Division.

THE DIVISION HAS ACCEPTED NORFOLK SOUTHERN'S PROPOSAL WITHOUT THE BENEFIT OF EXPERT ANALYSIS AND ADVICE

Last spring, the Antitrust Division told Congress that it would have to look to outside experts to evaluate the significance of any given divestiture proposal. Said then Acting Assistant Attorney General Rule to Congressman Dingell:

"The Department of Justice does not have in-house expertise to evaluate technical and operational aspects of any proposed divestitures. Accordingly, when such proposals are advanced, we intend to rely on information we receive from the departments of transportation in the various states affected by the merger, the U.S. Department of Transportation, local shippers and such experts as we may retain to advise us with respect to these matters" (Rule Apr. 15, 1985 letter, p. 45).

Thereafter, in evaluating Norfolk Southern's initial divestiture plan, the Antitrust Division turned to persons outside the Department to assist in its evaluation. It consulted with representatives of the departments of transportation in affected States; and, as noted, it retained R.L. Banks & Associates, a transportation consultant, as an expert to advise with respect to the Norfolk Southern proposal. As we have pointed out above, the Banks organization reported its conclusion in September 1985—that the Norfolk Southern divestiture proposal was inadequate on its face, and that the evidence failed to show that either Guilford or P&LE could provide the meaningful competitive alternative demanded by the Division.

In his September 25, 1985 letter to Secretary Dole, adverted to above, Mr. Ginsburg plainly relied upon the Banks report in advising the Secretary of his conclusion that Norfolk Southern's initial divestiture plan failed to satisfy the requirements imposed by the Division in its January 29, 1985 letter.

Immediately upon disclosure of the Banks report, Norfolk Southern modified its divestiture proposal in certain respects. As noted above, it deleted the requirement that Guilford purchase the former Nickel Plate line from Crestline, Ohio to East St. Louis, Illinois (the so-called "Streak of Rust"); and it substituted a grant of trackage rights—"overhead" only—along the Conrail main line from Ridgeway, Ohio to East St. Louis. That proposal, which would have decreased the volume of traffic handled by Guilford to and from affected localities, promptly was rejected by Mr. Ginsburg, who pronounced it no more satisfactory than its predecessor.

Now, without benefit of any consultation either with the Banks organization or, so far as we can determine, with any other outside consultant, with any State transportation department, or with any expert of independent standing, the Antitrust Division has declared that the third Norfolk Southern proposal "appears" to satisfy the Division's divestiture requirements. There is not the slightest factual basis to suppose that the Division, in the limited time since Mr. Rule's April 15, 1985 letter to Congressman Dingell, has acquired the in-house know-how sufficient to enable it to perform the evaluation that only a few short months ago it confessed it could not do. Nor is there any factual basis to suppose that the Division, either internally or by recourse to outside experts, has assessed the significance of the Norfolk Southern divestiture proposal in the limited time that elapsed between November 11, 1985, when Norfolk Southern submitted its plan, and November 19, 1985, when the Division provisionally accepted it.

To be sure, Mr. Ginsburg told members of the Senate Judiciary Committee in his appearance on November 21, 1985 that the Division will look to the views of an outside expert in this matter. But that look, and those views, may be meager. Said Mr. Ginsburg:

"The expert who is hired will be asked to look at all aspects of the plan, both operational and financial, in detail in order to confirm the accuracy of the representations upon which we have based our conclusion" (Statement of Douglas H. Ginsburg, dated November 21, 1985, p. 7) (emphasis supplied).

In other words, the expert to be retained by the Division will be asked to "verify" the "facts" advanced by Norfolk Southern in its November 11, 1985 Joint Memorandum and follow-up submissions to the Division. We wonder whether this means that the expert will be asked to confirm, among other things:

That P&LE has no financing to acquire the lines to be sold to it, and has developed no marketing, operating, financial, or other plans in respect to the latest divestiture proposal;

That Guilford has submitted a so-called marketing and operating plan that consists exclusively of self-serving, unsubstantiated figures that make no allowance for criticisms of its earlier projections, while confessing that between virtually all major points to be served in Norfolk Southern-Conrail territory, Guilford will operate no more than one train per day in each direction;

That Norfolk Southern, Guilford, and P&LE have yet to negotiate contracts reflecting the latest proposed arrangements, and (so far as is known) have reduced none of those arrangements to writing;

That neither Guilford nor P&LE has submitted financials, pro forma statements, balance sheets, or any other materials sufficient to enable the Justice Department to opine whether the two proposed candidates for divestiture can function in a viable, long-term manner from a financial standpoint.

Confirmation of the foregoing "facts" would be easy; but it scarcely would demonstrate that the divestitures would meet the important public interest goals that the Division's January 29, 1985 letter set out for them.

It was, of course, on the basis of highly detailed presentations in the foregoing subject areas that the Banks organization previously was able to conclude that the initial Norfolk Southern plan of divestiture was inadequate. That conclusion was corroborated by the Staff of the ICC and, as we have noted, by every other commentator on the proposed plan of divestiture other than the parties most keenly interested in its approval.

Now, it appears that the Antitrust Division's outside expert may be unencumbered with the need to undertake such detailed presentations. He may be called upon only to "verify" such information as that there is, indeed, a line of rail track belonging to Conrail that extends from Toledo to Detroit; a line of rail tracking belonging to Norfolk & Western extending from Detroit to Fort Wayne; and the like. As the Secretary of Transportation put it, perhaps seriously, at the November 21 session of the Senate Judiciary Committee, the task of the outside expert is to determine "if the tracks are where they [Norfolk Southern] say they are . . ."

It must be remembered that Guilford and P&LE earnestly represented to the Antitrust Division (albeit before they learned they were to be the beneficiaries of Norfolk Southern's divestiture program and determined to make common cause with Norfolk Southern) that a combination of Norfolk Southern and Conrail would drive them to the wall and might well put the finish to their corporate existence. P&LE told the Justice Department that the Norfolk Southern-Conrail combination would cost it approximately $12.6 million in lost gross freight revenues per year, at a time that P&LE already was operating heavily in the red (Rule Apr. 15, 1985 letter to Congressman Dingell, p. 30). Guilford told the Justice Department in writing that "the acquisition of Conrail by NS and the resulting loss of revenue by D&H [the Delaware & Hudson, a railroad subsidiary of Guilford] could . . . prove to be fatal for D&H and threatening for the entire Guilford system"; also, that the Norfok Southern-Conrail combination would cost Guilford up to $22 million in lost gross freight revenues annually (Guilford Submission to Antitrust Division, undated, at pp. 7, 10, annexed to Rule Apr. 15, 1985 letter to Congressman Dingell).

At stake in this battle are economic matters of transcendent importance to thousands of shippers and receivers throughout the eastern half of the United States, and to the rail carriers that connect and compete with Norfok Southern and Conrail. The combined Norfolk Southern-Conrail would dominate rail transportation in the East. It would destroy competition in rail transportation service throughout Conrail's present territory, and beyond; it would distort competition in rail transportation service elsewhere in the eastern half of the United States; it might well obliterate rail competition among the regional carriers of the Midwest by destroying them; it undoubtedly would affect rail competition throughout the rest of the country.

Guilford and P&LE will no more be able to provide effective rail competition against the combined Norfolk Southern-Conrail than could a mom-and-pop two-seater airline against a combined United and American. Guilford and P&LE are a joke, and a bad one at that—the one is on the brink of failure and the other already is well over the edge. Guilford and P&LE will survive in a post-divestiture environment, if at all, only at the sufferance of the gigantic NS-CR.

For political reasons, Norfolk Southern may choose to keep its tiny "competitors" afloat through a regime of "administered pricing." NS-CR easily could establish an "umbrella" pricing policy that would ensure a temporary margin of profit to Guilford and P&LE while amassing a monopoly return to NS-CR. Such a regime would impose bloated rail transportation costs and degraded service upon shippers and receivers dependent on rail transportation throughout Conrail's present service territory and beyond. Perhaps Norfolk Southern would continue such an arrangement for five years—when its vaunted "convenants" with the Department of Transportation, and many of its key contractual commitments to Guilford and P&LE, all expire.

Thereafter, Norfolk could pull the plug. A concerted program of selective price-slashing, route closings, and other such tactics would put a speedy end to the nominal "competition" afforded by Guilford and P&LE (as well as by connecting Midwest regional rail carriers). The rail transportation markets for which Mr. Ginsburg now thinks he has obtained "contestability" will be at Norfolk Southern's mercy. The competitive "contest" will be at an end.

Nor will any party be able to mount a legal challenge to the Norfolk Southern-Conrail collossus—ever. The legislation urged by the Administration would provide complete antitrust immunity not only to the NS-CR merger itself, but to its "implementation" under the Secretary's plan. Neither the ICC, nor any other independent administrative agency, nor any court will ever have a say in the NS-CR operations as they relate to the combination.

Why all the secrecy? Why the rush to judgment? Why the extraordinary exemptions from the antitrust and commerce laws (to name just two of the many) that have served the Nation so well in the past? The reason, we are told, is to "rescue" Conrail. But Conrail does not need to be rescued. It is healthy, and viable; it is earning solid profits. Its indices of performance, as measured by traditional ICC standards, are strong. We ask: If Conrail is so sick as to require salvation through these extraordinary means, in what condition are Guilford and P&LE? When the time comes, who will rescue them?

Respectfully submitted.

ARNOLD & PORTER.

(By Leonard H. Becker, Dennis G. Lyons, Charles H. Cochran, Rebecca E. Swenson.)

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, the text of that letter sets forth in eloquent sequence the real absurdity of having the Department of Justice and its Antitrust Division grant a preliminary antitrust approval in the context of the factual record of this case. The reason becomes apparent when it is viewed in terms of the Department of Justice being counsel to the Department of Transportation. The U.S. Senate ought not to be asked to give authorization now, conditioned upon whatever it is that the Department of Justice may find at some time in the future. The Department of Justice does not have the status of a disinterested arbiter to sort out the pleading claims and the immediate factual assertions. Rather, the Department of Justice has really taken sides in this matter. That is apparent from a reading of the analysis by Arnold and Porter, which I propose to get into at great length when the time is ripe for consideration.

Full consideration by this body, I would submit, Mr. President, requires that we not be foreclosed by cloture. This matter is of great importance to this Nation, and the Senate ought to be able to consider this issue at length without having our deliberations abbreviated by cloture.

Mr. President, there is pending at the present time a request for a hearing before the Committee on the Judiciary of the U.S. Senate. The Judiciary Committee held two prior hearings on the antitrust implications, but was to have been convened again for the purpose of hearing from Secretary of Transportation Dole and Assistant Attorney General Ginsburg. That session was set before the Judiciary Committee on November 21. However, that hearing could not proceed because it was scheduled in the afternoon and there was the absence of appropriate notice. In sum total, Senator THURMOND announced that there would simply be an inquiry, but it would not be an official Judiciary Committee proceeding.

Mr. President, it is my view that the Judiciary Committee must hold that hearing and must conclude its findings on these very vital antitrust issues before this matter is ripe for consideration by the full U.S. Senate.

Following the November proceeding before the Judiciary Committee, which was not, as I say, an official proceeding and which was not made a matter of record, I wrote to Attorney General Ginsburg on December 19, raising questions about where the Department of Justice stood. At that time, I said:

I remain extremely concerned about the unanswered questions surrounding the "preliminary approval" which the Department of Justice's Antitrust Division has given to the latest divestiture plan proposed by Norfolk Southern, Guilford Transportation Industries, and the Pittsburgh & Lake Erie Railroad.

I previously expressed this concern to you when you appeared before an "informal gathering" of the Senate Committee on the Judiciary regarding the sale of Conrail last month. At that time, you stated that the latest divestiture plan "appeared" to resolve Justice's concerns of anticompetitive effects resulting from the proposed merger of the Conrail and Norfolk Southern systems. You admitted during that meeting, however, that extensive documentation, including financial plans, revenue estimates, balance sheets, and operating schedules, would have to be submitted by the parties, and evaluated and verified by the Antitrust Division, as well as by an outside consultant, before any final approval could be given.

I would like to know whether the outside consultant has been chosen and whether any of the necessary documentation has been provided to you or your staff. Specifically what, if any, further action has been taken thus far by Justice with regard to analysis of this divestiture proposal? I would also appreciate it if you would provide me with a list of any remaining documents which must be supplied to you, when such documents are expected, and when you would reasonably expect review of the documents to be completed by both Justice and its outside consultant.

Thank you for your prompt attention to this very important matter.

When I received no reply to that letter after we adjourned on December 20, and after the majority leader announced that Conrail would be the first item of business on the Senate Calendar when we returned on January 21—that is, today—I was compelled to write to the Attorney General on January 9, I referred to my letter of December 19 to Assistant Attorney General Ginsburg, advised that I had received no reply, and stated that in order to be prepared on the subject when the Senate returned on January 21, 1986, it was indispensable in my view that we have a prompt response to the questions raised in the letter to Mr. Ginsburg. I asked the Attorney General for his assistance.

Mr. President, while I was seated on the floor of the U.S. Senate less than an hour ago, a messenger brought to me finally a letter from Mr. Ginsburg responding to the questions which I had raised on December 19—questions which had been outstanding for 1 full year, questions which were the subject of extensive discussion at the proceeding before the Judiciary Committee on November 21 of 1985. Mr. Ginsburg replies as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
ANTITRUST DIVISION,
Washington, DC, January 21, 1986.

Hon. ARLEN SPECTER,
U.S. Senate,
Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR SPECTER: This letter responds to your letters of December 19, 1985 and January 9, 1986, concerning the proposed sale of Consolidated Rail Corporation ("Conrail") to Norfolk Southern Corporation ("NS"). You have asked what further action the Department of Justice has taken, since the informal meeting that Secretary Dole and I had with you and several other Senators on November 21, 1985, to analyze the divestiture proposal made in NS. Guilford Transportation Industries, Inc. ("GTI"), and the Pittsburgh & Lake Erie Railroad ("P&LE") in mid-November 1985. In particular, you have requested information concerning both the outside consultant that we will retain to assist us in our analysis and the documentation that we will receive from the parties to the proposed divestiture.

The Department has made significant progress in our preparations to review the divestiture proposal. First, we have given copies of the new divestiture proposal to transportation officials from all the States in the divestiture corridor, including Pennsylvania, and to several railroads and other interested parties, in order that we might obtain their views on the proposal at an early date. Second, the Department has nearly completed the process of selecting an outside consultant; we expect that the consultant will be selected, retained, and ready to begin work by January 31.

Third, the Department recently sent detailed information requests to GTI and P&LE; copies of the requests are enclosed. Similar requests will be sent next week to NS and Conrail. As the GTI and P&LE information requests state, we may find it necessary to seek additional information at a later date, as our analysis of the divestiture proposal progresses. In order to facilitate meaningful public comment about the divestiture proposal, we have advised GTI and P&LE that they should "disclose publicly all information that you provide to us about your plans and ability to operate the divested rail properties, except when the information is particularly sensitive. . . ."

If the parties meet the various deadlines contained in our information request letters, we should begin to receive specific information concerning the proposed divestiture from GTI and P&LE within the next two weeks and from NS and Conrail soon thereafter. We and our consultant will review that information and conduct a field investigation as quickly as possible. We hope to complete the process and make a recommendation to the Attorney General by late March or early April about whether the new divestiture proposal will do in fact what it appears to do on its face—provide long-term, viable, and competitive rail service to the areas identified in our January 29 and March 26, 1985, letters to Secretary Dole.

I trust that this letter has been responsive to your concerns about our analysis of the new divestiture proposal. I would be happy to discuss this issue with you in person if you wish.

Sincerely,

DOUGLAS H. GINSBURG,
Assistant Attorney General.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
Washington, DC, January 8, 1986.

JOE SIMS, ESQ.,
Jones, Day, Reavis & Pogue, Metropolitan Square, 655 Fifteenth Street, N.W., Washington, DC.

DEAR JOE: As you know, the Department of Justice has announced that it will proceed with the second phase of its analysis of the divestitures proposed in connection with the planned sale of Conrail to the Norfolk Southern Corporation. In this regard, we have reviewed the November 11 and November 19, 1985 joint documents of Norfolk Southern Corporation, Guilford Transportation Industries, Inc. and the Pittsburgh and Lake Erie Railroad Company. Although those documents have provided some information to help us determine whether the new divestiture plan will achieve long-term, viable, competitive rail service that will resolve the competitive problems we have identified, a substantial amount of additional information will be needed before we can make a final determination about the divestiture. Accordingly, I am enclosing an initial list of the types of additional information that we will need to receive from GTI to complete our analysis.

I wish to emphasize strongly that time is of the essence in complying with these information requests. The consulting firm that the Department selects to assist in our analysis must have information on all of the basic details of GTI's proposed post-divestiture plans before it can begin conducting its analysis. If there are delays in receiving that information, there will be delays in completing the analysis and corresponding delays in the final decision of the Attorney General. Accordingly, I have marked with an asterisk those requests for which we need complete responses as soon as possible and no later than January 24, 1986. We ask that you supply us with complete responses to those requests not marked by February 10, 1986. In order to facilitate this process, I would like to meet with you or any other GTI representative as soon as possible in order to answer any questions you may have about the scope of the requests.

As you may know, it is possible under the Freedom of Information Act for the Justice Department to refuse to disclose publicly confidential commercial or financial information. Much of the information we are requesting in this letter could therefore be held in confidence by the Department, if you were to request that it be treated confidentially. However, the nature and viability of the rail service your client intends to provide on the divested properties is of major interest to Congress and the public. We believe, therefore, that it is appropriate to disclose publicly all information that you provide to us about your plans and ability to operate the divested rail properties. Except when the information is particularly sensitive. Accordingly, we are asking that you designate information as confidential only if its public disclosure would be clearly unwarranted. In particular, we believe that the details of both your final agreement with Norfolk Southern and your operating plan should be available for public analysis, and that at least a general description of your financial structure and market analysis should be disclosed. In addition, you should realize that it will be necessary for us to disclose some or all of the information that you designate as confidential to the outside consultant who will be retained by the Department to assist in our analysis of the divestiture. Please let us know if you would like to have the consultant enter into a confidentiality agreement with GTI. In addition, we plan to request that Donaldson, Lufkin and Jenrette furnish us their firm's internal documents concerning GTI's proposed acquisition of the divestiture properties, and we are asking that you waive any claim of confidentiality that GTI may have concerning such documents.

Finally, I note that the attached request is preliminary and that in the future it will be necessary for us or our consultant to request additional material about the proposed purchase. Please note that whenever the term "GTI" is used in the attached information requests, we intend that the term include GTI's Rail Division and its corporate parent and subsidiaries, unless otherwise specified.

If you have any questions about this matter, please call me at (202) 724-6478.

Sincerely,

PAUL A. MAPES,
Attorney, Antitrust Division.

APPENDIX A

I. DIVESTITURE AGREEMENT

1. A detailed description and a copy of the divestiture agreement reached between GTI and NS.

2. All documents in GTI's possession used in calculating the final purchase price.

3. A list of all locomotives, rail cars and maintenance-of-way equipment GTI intends to purchase or lease from NS, and the amount GTI will pay for such equipment.

4. A detailed description of all the terminal and yard arrangements between GTI and NS.

5. The specific number and type of employment positions that GTI will offer to NS/Conrail employees.

6. An estimate of the labor protection costs that GTI is likely to incur as a result of operating the divestiture properties.

7. To the extent not supplied in response to item 1, above:

a. A detailed description and a copy of all trackage rights agreements between GTI and NS and between P&LE and GTI;

b. A detailed description and a copy of all switching and haulage arrangements between GTI and NS and between P&LE and GTI;

c. A detailed description and a copy of any agreement between GTI and NS concerning the rescission or transfer of transportation contracts and a list of all NS or Conrail transportation contracts to be assumed by GTI;

d. A list and description of all rail properties to be purchased by GTI; and

e. A statement outlining in detail any interest GTI will acquire or will have the option of acquiring in any railroads or terminal carriers and the anticipated costs of such acquisition.

8. A statement of GTI's rationale for selecting each rail property in the sales agreement.

9. A description of the current operational capabilities of the tracks, yards and rights-of-way that GTI will be acquiring, together with a description of the effects on these properties of any deferred maintenance or delayed capital improvements, a time schedule and estimated costs of any planned rehabilitation or upgrading of the acquired properties, and any other plans for improving the operational capability of the acquired properties.

10. A description of the modifications and rehabilitation that will have to be done for any properties purchased or leased by GTI including estimates of the cost of such modifications and rehabilitation, and a copy of any agreement whereby NS will assist GTI with the modifications or rehabilitation work.

11. A description in detail of all interchange connections with all carriers, including the condition of the track, switches and signals and any anticipated modifications or rehabilitations of such connections.

II. OPERATIONS

An operating plan that shows the following for the next three years or until the operating plan goes fully into effect, whichever is longer:

1. A map indicating clearly, in separate colors, the acquired properties to be operated by GTI, interline connections, other rail lines in the territory, and the counties and the principal geographic points in the region traversed;

2. The pattern of service intended for the acquired properties, including proposed principal routes, proposed coordination of these routes with the services of other railroads and GTI's current operations, anticipated traffic density and general categories of traffic, service frequency and train schedules;

3. Anticipated equipment requirements for providing rail service on the acquired properties, plans for acquiring equipment not conveyed under the sales agreement, and plans for retiring equipment; and

4. A comparison between the services currently provided on the acquired properties by NS/Conrail and the services to be provided under GTI's operating plan.

III. FINANCIAL INFORMATION

1. A description of the source, amount, and all material conditions relating to any funds to be expended by GTI or any related entity to acquire, or rehabilitate or operate the acquired properties for the first three years of operation or until the operating plan is anticipated to go fully into effect, whichever is longer.

2. A pro forma balance sheet for GTI and any other related entitites that will operate the acquired properties for the first three years of operation or until the operating plan is anticipated to go fully into effect, whichever is longer.

3. A pro forma income statement showing estimated revenues, expenses, net income and dividends for GTI and any related entities that will operate on the acquired properties for the first three years of operation or until the operating plan is anticipated to go fully into effect, whichever is longer.

4. A forecast of the source and application of funds for GTI and any other related entities that will operate the acquired properties for the first three years of operation or until the operating plan is anticipated to go fully into effect, whichever is longer.

5. A list and description of all of the acquired properties subject to new or assumed encumberances, with a full description of each encumberance including maturity date, interest rate and other material terms and conditions, and a schedule of proposed asset dispositions for 1986.

6. Monthly balance sheets and income statements from January, 1985, through December, 1985, for the GTI Rail Division and 1985 quarterly balance sheets and income statements for GTI, and the 1985 consolidated financial statements for both GTI and the GTI Rail Division.

7. The 1985 Budget and all existing Lines of Credit Agreements for GTI's parent corporation and GTI's Rail Division.

8. All loan agreements between the GTI Rail Division and GTI's parent corporation, and all loan agreements between GTI's parent corporation and Timothy Mellon, and/or between the GTI's Rail Division and Timothy Mellon.

9. All documents that contain plans or proposals for GTI to participate in third party lease arrangements.

10. A schedule of federal, state and/or local subsidies (grants) expected to be received by GTI for 1985-1987.

11. Documents detailing the status of renegotiations for Boston commuter train service, including net fees/bonuses for GTI or its Rail Division.

12. A statement describing and quantifying any expenses that are not reflected in GTI's financial statements, past or future, including but not limited to, pension contributions.

13. Cost estimates of overhead expenses expected to be incurred by GTI to coordinate its operations with the operations of NS/CR on lines where GTI will be granted trackage rights and/or car haulage arrangements.

14. Data used by GTI to estimate an additional 173,000 carloads of traffic annually and incremental annual revenues of $189 million.

15. A schedule estimating reciprocal switching, trackage rights and car haulage fees to be paid by GTI during the next three years or until the operating plan goes fully into effect, whichever is longer.

16. All documents concerning GTI's financial condition that GTI has provided since January, 1985, to any person or financial institution for the purpose of obtaining a loan.

17. Any document that revises the August 20, 1985 comfort letter to GTI from Donaldson, Lufkin & Jenrette (DLJ or the firm).

18. All documents supplied by GTI to DLJ since GTI retained the firm to arrange financing.

19. All documents received from DLJ since GTI retained the firm to arrange financing.

20. All documents reflecting meetings concerning proposed financing of GTI's acquisition of the divestiture properties where representatives of DLJ were present.

21. A list of all potential investors and/or institutions who have been contacted by or who have contacted DLJ/GTI about financially participating in the divestiture to GTI, as well as materials provided by GTI and/or DLJ to the potential investors.

22. All documents prepared by GTI concerning future financing requirements for the entire GTI rail system, including:

a. amount of funds to be raised

b. equity/debt position

c. use of funds: (1) working capital; (2) acquistion; (3) paydown of debt; (4) rehabilitation; and (5) other.

IV. MARKET ANALYSIS

An economic analysis of the transportation markets to be served by GTI showing the following:

1. Maps and charts estimating for the next three years or until the operating plan is anticipated to go fully into effect whichever is longer. GTI's gross ton miles of freight moving in each direction on those segments of the acquired properties connecting major freight yards and terminals, including major intermodal and intramodal exchange points.

2. Revenue car load interchange data estimating for GTI for the next three years or until the operating plan is anticipated to go fully into effect whichever is longer: (1) all traffic received or delivered at any gateway located on the acquired lines, (2) the number of these car loans originating and terminating on the acquired properties, (3) the volume of overhead traffic moving on the acquired lines, and (4) the number of revenue carloads handled in local service on the acquired properties.

3. A narrative discussion identifying the transportation markets to be served or that could be served by GTI's operations on the acquired properties, the types of traffic expected to be generated or that could be generated, and levels of business anticipated on these properties.

4. A copy of all agreements and understandings between GTI or its Rail Division and other railroads (including NS) concerning traffic that could be moved over the acquired properties, including but not limited to agreements and understandings relating to:

a. joint-line rates, single-line rates, or divisions of revenues,

b. solicitation of shippers,

c. coordination of train schedules,

d. run-through trains, and

e. routing traffic through particular gateways.

5. A study estimating the volume of revenue freight cars that, as a result of NS's acquisition of Conrail, may be diverted to or from railroads currently operated by GTI and to or from any entity that GTI may use to provide rail service over the acquired properties.

V. MISCELLANEOUS

1. All information that was requested but not provided to the Department of Justice in response to previous requests for information and that would still be relevant to the new divestiture proposal, including but not limited to Appendix A of September 13, 1985 report of R. L. Banks & Associates, which is attached to this letter.

2. All studies, analyses, and reports within the possession of GTI not otherwise requested that relate to the agreement to purchase or lease the acquired properties; development or implementation of an operating plan for the acquired properties; financing the purchase and operation of the acquired properties; estimating current or future revenues and expenses for operating the acquired properties; and estimating the current or future flow and volume of rail traffic on the acquired properties.

3. Traffic tapes showing 100 percent of traffic moved on each GTI railroad for calendar year 1984.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
Washington, DC, January 8, 1986.

Mr. G.E. Neuenschwander,
Executive Vice President, Pittsburgh & Lake Erie Railroad Co., Pittsburgh, PA.

DEAR GORDON: As you know, the Department of Justice has announced that it will proceed with the second phase of its analysis of the divestitures proposed in connection with the planned sale of Conrail to the Norfolk Southern Corporation. In this regard, we have reviewed the November 11 and November 19, 1985 joint documents of Norfolk Southern Corporation, Guilford Transportation Industries, Inc. and the Pittsburgh and Lake Erie Railroad Company. Although those documents and P&LE's preliminary business plan of November 13 have provided some information to help us determine whether the new divestiture plan will achieve long-term, viable, competitive rail service that will resolve the competitive problems we have identified, a substantial amount of additional information will be needed before we can make a final determination about the divestiture. Accordingly, I am enclosing an initial list of the types of additional information that we will need to receive from P&LE to complete our analysis.

I wish to emphasize strongly that time is of the essence in complying with these information requests. The consulting firm that the Department selects to assist in our analysis must have information on all of the basic details of P&LE's proposed post-divestiture plans before it can begin conducting its analysis. If there are delays in receiving that information, there will be delays in completing the analysis and corresponding delays in the final decision of the Attorney General. Accordingly, I have marked with an asterisk those requests for which we need complete responses as soon as possible and no later than January 24, 1986. We ask that you supply us with complete responses to those requests not marked by February 10, 1986. In order to facilitate this process, I would like to meet with you or any other GTI representative as soon as possible to answer any questions you may have about the scope of the requests.

As you know, it is possible under the Freedom of Information Act for the Justice Department to refuse to disclose publicly confidential commercial or financial information. Much of the information we are requesting in this letter could therefore be held in confidence by the Department, if you were to request that it be treated confidentially. However, the nature and viability of the rail service P&LE intends to provide on the divested properties is of major interest to Congress and the public. We believe, therefore, that it is appropriate to disclose publicly all information that you provide to us about your plans and ability to operate the divested rail properties, except when the information is particularly sensitive. Accordingly, we are asking that you designate information as confidential only if its public disclosure would be clearly unwarranted. In particular, we believe that the details of both final agreement with Norfolk Southern and your operating plan should be available for public analysis, and that at least a general description of your financial structure and market analysis should be disclosed. In addition, you should realize that it will be necessary for us to disclose some or all of the information that you designate as confidential to the outside consultant who will be retained by the Department to assist in our analysis of the divestiture. Please let us know if you would like to have the consultant enter into a confidentiality agreement with P&LE. In addition, we plan to request that Dillion, Read & Co. Inc. furnish us that firm's internal documents concerning P&LE's financial condition and proposed acquisition of the divestiture properties and we are asking that you waive any claim of confidentiality that P&LE may have concerning such documents.

Finally, I note that the attached request is preliminary and that in the future it will be necessary for us or our consultant to request additional material about the proposed purchase.

If you have any questions about this matter, please call me at (202) 724-6478.

Sincerely,

PAUL A. MAPES,
Attorney, Antitrust Division.

2. A pro forma balance sheet for P&LE and any other related entities that will operate the acquired properties for the first three years of operation or until the operating plan is anticipated to go fully into effect, whichever is longer.

3. A pro forma income statement showing estimated revenues, expenses, and net income for P&LE and any related entities that will operate on the acquired properties for the first three years of operation or until the operating plan is anticipated to go fully into effect, whichever is longer.

4. A forecast of the source and application of funds for P&LE and any other related entities that will operate the acquired properties for the first three years of operation or until the operating plan is anticipated to go fully into effect, whichever is longer.

5. A list and description of all of the acquired properties subject to new or assumed encumbrances, with a full description of each encumbrance including maturity date, interest rate and other material terms and conditions.

6. A fiscal year 1985 consolidated financial statement.

7. Monthly income statements, balance sheets and Statements of Changes in Financial Position from October of 1984 through December of 1985.

8. A schedule of asset dispositions from FY 1983 through FY 1985, and a schedule of proposed asset dispositions for FY 1986.

9. A schedule of federal, state and/or local subsidies (grants) from FY 1983 through FY 1985, and a schedule of anticipated subsidies for FY 1986–FY 1987.

10. A statement describing and quantifying any expenses that are not reflected on the income statement, past or future, including but not limited to, pension contributions.

11. Data used by P&LE to estimate its additional post-divestiture traffic of 108,000 carloads and revenues of $51 million.

12. Cost estimates of new offices in Toledo, Chicago, and in eastern Ohio.

13. Cost estimates of overhead expenses expected to be incurred by P&LE to coordinate its operations with the operations of NS/CR and the operations of GTI on lines where P&LE will be granted trackage rights.

14. A schedule estimating reciprocal switching, lease, trackage rights, and car haulage fees to be paid by P&LE or a P&LE affiliate during the next three years.

15. All documents prepared to date on the incorporation of a P&LE affiliate that would acquire/lease the P&LE portion of the NS divestiture lines, including but not limited to the affiliate's capitalization, management, and anticipated inter-company transactions.

16. Any letters or other documents that revise the September 3, 1985 comfort letter to P&LE from Dillon, Read & Co. Inc.

17. All documents prepared by P&LE concerning future financing requirements for the entire P&LE rail system including: a. amount of funds to be raised; b. equity/debt position; c. use of funds; (1) working capital, (2) acquisition of the divestiture properties, (3) pay down of debt, (4) rehabilitation and maintenance, (5) other.

18. All documents given to, or received from, Dillon, Read & Co. Inc. including but not limited to: a. letters permitting Dillon, Read to contact possible capital sources; b. letters permitting Dillon, Read to contact P&LE's current lenders; c. studies that evaluate P&LE's financing needs; and d. studies that evaluate P&LE's ability to raise either debt or equity funds.

19. Documents that describe the structure of the financing proposal by which P&LE is attempting to obtain financing for acquiring the divestiture properties, including but not limited to documents describing: a. equity/debt percentages; b. covenants; (1) financial restrictions, (2) security agreements, (3) ability to obtain additional equity/debt partners; c. management input, i.e. whether the financing individual(s) or firm(s) may/may not have a position on the board of directors/management team; and d. change in ownership.

20. All correspondence between P&LE and its banks since October 1, 1985, relating to requests by P&LE to obtain additional financing.

21. A list of all potential investors who have been contacted by, or who have contacted, Dillion, Read/P&LE, concerning financial participation in the acquisition of the divestiture properties. Please indicate the transaction proposed, and provide all the materials supplied by P&LE and/or Dillion, Read to the potential investors.

IV. MARKET ANALYSIS

An economic analysis of the transportation markets to be served by P&LE showing the following for the next three years or until the operating plan is anticipated to go fully into effect, whichever is longer:

1. Maps and charts estimating for the next three years P&LE's gross ton-miles of freight moving in each direction on those segments of the acquired properties connecting major freight yards and terminals, including major intermodal and intramodal exchange points.

2. Revenue car load interchange data estimating for P&LE for the next three years or until the operating plan is anticipated to go fully into effect, whichever is longer: (1) all traffic received or delivered at any gateway located on the acquired lines, (2) the number of these carloads originating and terminating on the acquired properties, (3) the volume of overhead traffic moving on the acquired lines, and (4) the number of revenue carloads handled in local service on the acquired properties.

3. A narrative discussion identifying the transportation markets to be served or that could be served by P&LE's operations on the acquired properties, the types of traffic expected to be generated or that could be generated, and levels of business anticipated on these properties.

4. A copy of all agreements and understandings between P&LE and other railroads (including NS) concerning traffic that could be moved over the acquired properties, including but not limited to agreements and understandings relating to: a. joint-line rates, single-line rates, or divisions of revenues, b. solicitation of shippers, c. coordination of train schedules, d. run-through trains, and e. routing traffic through particular gateways.

5. A study estimating the volume of revenue freight cars that, as a result of NS's acquisition of Conrail, may be diverted to or from P&LE and to or from any entity that P&LE may use to provide rail service over the acquired properties.

V. MISCELLANEOUS

1. All information that was requested but not provided to the Department of Justice in response to previous requests for information and that would still be relevant to the new divestiture proposal, including but not limited to Appendix A of September 13, 1985 report of R.L. Banks & Associates, which is attached to this letter.

2. All studies, analyses, and reports within the possession of P&LE not otherwise requested that relate to: the agreement to purchase or lease the acquired properties; development or implementation of an operating plan for the acquired properties; financing the purchase and operation of the acquired properties; estimating current or future revenues and expenses for operating the acquired properties; and estimating the current or future flow and volume of rail traffic on the acquired properties.

3. Traffic tapes showing 100 percent of traffic moved on P&LE for calendar year 1984.

Assistant Attorney General Ginsburg makes the assertion that the Department has made significant progress. It seems to me that that assertion is absolutely ludicrous, considering the length of time these divestiture proposals have been before the Department of Justice—they received them on November 11. Why does it take until January 8, 1986, which is the date of transmittal to Pittsburgh and Lake Erie and Guilford, for these questions to be propounded?

Why does it take a protracted period of time to ask for comments from the transportation officials of the various States in the divestiture corridor?

Why has the Department of Justice not yet selected an expert in this field? What is taking so long?

The obvious answer is that the Department of Justice is hopeful that sufficient time will pass so that this matter will come to the floor of the U.S. Senate, and cloture will be invoked, and the matter will be acted upon by the U.S. Senate before we see what these proposals are.

Mr. President, considering the amount of time which has passed, I consider that absolutely outrageous. Why has the Department of Justice not gone back to the Banks consultants, whom they hired initially, to consider Guilford and Pittsburgh and Lake Erie? Banks was obviously paid a handsome fee for the extensive consulting report they filed. Was Banks not retained because Banks found Pittsburgh and Lake Erie and Guilford insufficient to provide the necessary competition, and unsubstantial as disclosed by their financial statements?

May we have order, Mr. President?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will be in order.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, we just learned Howard and Elizabeth were married last week.

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, permit me on a pleasant note to extend my congratulations as well to Howard and Elizabeth Greene on the event of their nuptuals. Certainly, it is a matter which has been completed in a timely fashion, unlike the Department of Justice's activity on the consideration of the Norfolk Southern proposal.

Mr. President, the questions on Pittsburgh and Lake Erie have been outstanding for a very long period of time. It seems to me that the Department of Justice has not proceeded in a timely fashion to get to that information.

When my letter of December 9 to Mr. Ginsburg went unanswered, on January 9, 1986, I wrote to Mr. Timothy Mellon, chairman of Guilford, and asked for the relevant information. I ask unanimous consent that the full text of my letter to Mr. Mellon be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

U.S. SENATE,
Washington, DC, January 9, 1986.

Mr. TIMOTHY MELLON,
Chairman and Chief Executive Officer, Guilford Transportation Industries Inc., Exchange Place, Boston, MA.

DEAR MR. MELLON: On November 11, 1985, Guilford Transportation Industries entered into an agreement with the Norfolk Southern Corporation and the Pittsburgh & Lake Erie Railroad regarding the divestiture of certain rail lines involved in the proposed merger of Conrail/Norfolk Southern.

The November 11 agreement is devoid of certain critical documents which are necessary for the evaluation of Guilford's role in this proposal. This extensive documentation includes financial plans, revenue estimates, balance sheets and operating schedules.

Assistant Attorney General Douglas H. Ginsburg, appearing before an "informal gathering" of the Senate Committee on the Judiciary last November, stated that these documents would be submitted to the Department of Justice, and evaluated and verified by the Antitrust Division, as well as by an outside consultant, before any final approval of the plan could be given.

I would like to know if the necessary documentation has been provided to Mr. Ginsburg's staff and, if so, I request that I be provided copies of these documents forthwith as the Senate is expected to consider the Conrail sale legislation when it reconvenes on January 21. If the materials have not yet been provided, I would like to know when they will be, and I would appreciate a list of the anticipated documents.

Thank you for your prompt attention to this extremely important matter.

Sincerely,

ARLEN SPECTER.

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, on the same date, January 9, 1986, I wrote to Mr. Gordon Neuenschwander, executive vice president of the Pittsburgh and Lake Erie, and asked that information be provided since the Department of Justice had not responded to my letter. I ask unanimous consent that the full text of this letter be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

U.S. SENATE,
Washington, DC, January 9, 1986.

Mr. GORDON NEUENSCHWANDER,
Executive Vice President, Pittsburgh & Lake Erie Railroad, Pittsburgh, PA.

DEAR MR. NEUENSCHWANDER: On November 11, 1985, the Pittsburgh & Lake Erie Railroad entered into an agreement with the Norfolk Southern Corporation and Guilford Transportation Industries regarding the divestiture of certain rail lines involved in the proposed merger of Conrail/Norfolk Southern.

The November 11 agreement is devoid of certain critical documents which are necessary for the evaluation of Pittsburgh & Lake Erie Railroad's role in this proposal. This extensive documentation includes financial plans, revenue estimates, balance sheets and operating schedules.

ARLEN SPECTER.

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, there is one other matter to which I shall briefly allude this afternoon. May I emphasize the point that in taking the floor and in introducing these various studies which have been made and these various analyses, I am skimming the surface. I am presenting just the conclusory material on extraordinarily complex issues—issues which customarily would be undertaken by the Interstate Commerce Commission, which has the statutory duty to pass on rail mergers like Conrail and Norfolk Southern.

But the legislation enacted by the Congress in 1981 excluded consideration by the ICC. Were the ICC to consider this matter, I think it beyond any doubt that they would find a violation of the antitrust laws and would prohibit the merger. But in the context where the ICC has been discharged of its statutory responsibility to consider the proposed acquisition of Conrail by Norfolk Southern, it is all the more important that there be an objective, disinterested evaluation by the Department of Justice, which, simply stated, cannot be done. The Department of Justice has disqualified itself from rendering that kind of an impartial evaluation by its conduct in this matter.

There were very serious questions raised, Mr. President, that I think ought to be noted at this point by Congressman JOHN DINGELL, chairman of the Subcommittee on Oversight and Investigations of the House Committee on Energy and Commerce which has taken up the Conrail issue.

I ask unanimous consent that the full text of Congressman DINGELL's letter of December 9, 1985, to Attorney General Meese be included in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

U.S. HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, DC, December 9, 1985.

Hon. EDWIN MEESE III,
Attorney General of the United States, Department of Justice, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. ATTORNEY GENERAL: I invite your attention to my letter of March 11, 1985 to former Assistant Attorney General J. Paul McGrath, my letters of June 4, July 18, August 21 and August 22, 1985 to then-Acting Assistant Attorney General Charles F. Rule, and my letter of November 19, 1985 to Assistant Attorney General Douglas H. Ginsburg, requesting documents and information relating to the proposed sale of Conrail to Norfolk Southern Corporation. Copies of the referenced correspondence are enclosed.

These requests were made pursuant to the authority of Rules X and XI of the Rules of the U.S. House of Representatives. I regret to say that the Department's consistent response has been one of frustration and delay. This has continued to the present time with the Department's failure to respond in a timely fashion to our most recent letter. I will recount briefly the history of this delay before raising a related and more serious concern.

In my letter of March 11 to former Assistant Attorney General McGrath, I asked for copies of certain documents pertaining to Norfolk Southern's efficiency claims in connection with its proposed purchase of Conrail. This was followed at the Conrail hearing on April, 30, 1985, by several additional requests for information and materials to be supplied for the record. None of this information was provided to the Committee until July 29, despite two interim follow-up letters and numerous staff telephone calls. Moreover, even by July 29, compliance with the Committee's request was not complete. Rather than furnishing the documents pertaining to Norfolk Southern's efficiency claims as had been requested in March, the Antitrust Division instead suggested that the Committee seek the documents from Norfolk Southern.

After a review of the submitted documents, it became clear that additional information and materials relating to the proposed sale of Conrail were necessary if the Committee was to discharge its responsibility under the law. Thus, a further request by the Committee was made in letters of August 21 and August 22, with production of the following documents sought in the August 21 letter:

1. All internal analyses, memoranda, and letters to third parties, including drafts, and including, but not limited to, all such materials prepared between the two drafts of January 18, 1985 of an opinion letter from Mr. McGrath to Secretary Dole (previously provided) and the Department's formal opinion letter of January 29, 1985;

2. All documents, memoranda and notes reflecting or involving meetings or conversations (including telephone conversations), either within the Department of Justice or between representatives of the Department of Justice and representatives of the Department of Transportation and/or Norfolk Southern Corporation; and

3. All Congressional testimony, speeches, press releases, and other public relations material, and all drafts thereof, prepared or proposed for delivery or release by the Department of Justice or any Department representative.

Despite our earlier complaints, the cooperation of the Department in timely fulfilling the Committee's requests did not improve at that point either. It was not until two months later that the Department responded, and when it did, several of the Committee's questions were not answered at all. New questions were raised. These were addressed in the Committee's most recent letter of November 19. Although a response to that letter was requested by Friday, December 6, the Committee received nothing more than a two-paragraph letter from Mr. Ginsburg on that day promising answers "as soon as possible."

It is in this context that an even more troubling issue has surfaced. The Subcommittee has learned that within the recent past an official in the Antitrust Division instructed Departmental staff, with respect to the Conrail case, to: (1) destroy personal files, including notes and all drafts of documents; and (2) not to make notes or create work papers in the future. This instruction was allegedly given for the purpose of preventing access to such materials by the Energy and Commerce Committee.

The Subcommittee has also learned that Deputy Assistant Attorney General Mark P. Leddy and Evaluation Section Chief Neil E. Roberts began an investigation on November 25, 1985, into the facts and circumstances leading to this instruction. According to our information, the instruction was given prior to the confirmation of Mr. Ginsburg as Assistant Attorney General and that Mr. Ginsburg, upon learning of the situation, directed that this inquiry be made.

I am sure you appreciate the gravity of this matter. The Committee's jurisdiction in this area is unassailable and its requests of August 22 and November 19, made pursuant to the authority of Rules X and XI of the Rules of the House of Representatives, specifically called for all drafts and notes. These requests continue to be outstanding. Clearly, a Departmental instruction to destroy such materials would be a patent obstruction of a lawful Congressional request. Moreover, in view of the Committee's ongoing inquiry into the competitive aspects of the proposed sale of Conrail to Norfolk Southern, an instruction to refrain from keeping notes or creating work papers would represent an obvious effort to deny to Committee members the benefit of learning the candid views of all Departmental staff and officials with respect to this important issue.

Documents already provided to the Committee raise questions about both the extent to which the Department has been forthcoming and the desire of Antitrust Division officials to hide from the Committee the views of the Division's staff on this matter. As an example, I call attention to certain documents produced on September 27, numbered III(2) and described in the index accompanying the Department's cover letter as "draft press releases prepared in mid-December 1984." These documents, standing alone, suggest that in December 1984, the Department was considering a position in opposition to the sale of Conrail to Norfolk Southern. Indeed, one of these drafts states that a two-month staff study "indicated that the competitive problems with the merger are so pervasive that it may be impossible to devise conditions on the sale of Conrail that would preserve competition." From the appearance of these "drafts"—which do not bear a single mark or correction on them—it is reasonable to suspect that other iterations of these documents would have existed. Yet, they have not been provided to the Committee despite a specific request covering them. I am particularly concerned that such other iterations may not have been produced as a consequence of the order to destroy documents discussed above.

In view of the foregoing, I request that you provide the Subcommittee with the following: (1) the date the Leddy-Roberts inquiry is expected to be completed; (2) a copy of the report made by Messrs. Leddy and Roberts on their inquiry, or if no report is prepared, their complete findings and conclusions; and (3) the identities and positions of all persons interviewed in connection with the Leddy-Roberts inquiry if such persons are not otherwise identified in the report.

Please respond to item (1) above by the close of business on Friday, December 20. Please forward the Leddy-Roberts report and the information requested in items (2) and (3) above immediately upon the completion of the current Departmental investigation. I will appreciate your cooperation. If you have any questions concerning this matter, please contact Michael F. Barrett of the Subcommittee staff at 225-4441.

Sincerely,

JOHN D. DINGELL, CHAIRMAN,
Subcommittee on Oversight and Investigations.

Mr. SPECTER. At this point, Mr. President, I shall refer only to a portion of Chairman DINGELL's complaints. After referring to the failure of the Department of Justice to respond to requests, Chairman DINGELL says at the bottom of page 2:

It is in this context that an even more troubling issue has surfaced. The subcommittee has learned that within the recent past an official in the Antitrust Division instructed departmental staff with respect to the Conrail case to: First, destroy personal files, including notes and all drafts of documents; and second, not to make notes or create work papers in the future. This instruction was allegedly given for the purpose of preventing access to such materials by the Energy and Commerce Committee.

Mr. President, Mr. DINGELL's letter to Attorney General Meese was responded to by Assistant Attorney General Ginsburg by letter dated December 20, 1985. At this point I ask unanimous consent that the full text of the response by Assistant Attorney General Ginsburg be included in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

U.S. DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
ANTITRUST DIVISION,
Washington, DC, December 20, 1985.

Congressman JOHN D. DINGELL,
Chairman, Committee on Energy and Commerce, U.S. House of Representatives, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: This letter responds to your letter, dated December 9, 1985, to the Attorney General, which was delivered to the Department of Justice on December 16. That letter contains accusations concerning alleged obstruction by the Department's Antitrust Division of the consideration by the House Committee on Energy and Commerce of the proposed sale of Consolidated Rail Corporation (Conrail) to Norfolk Southern Corporation (NS). In your letter, you allege that "within the recent past an official in the Antitrust Division instructed Departmental staff, with respect to the Conrail case, to: (1) destroy personal files, including notes and all drafts of documents; and (2) not to make notes or create work papers in the future. This instruction was allegedly given for the purpose of preventing access to such materials by the Energy and Commerce Committee." Your letter expresses concern that if true, the allegations indicate documents requested by the Committee have been destroyed. Your letter goes on to state your understanding that the Division is conducting an investigation of such an instruction. You have asked when that investigation will be complete and requested that the Department supply you with the findings of that investigation.

As detailed below, the allegations are untrue. All documents requested by Congress have been provided. In fact, the Department has gone to unprecedented lengths to facilitate Congressional consideration of the sale of Conrail.

I

First, it is important to note at the outset that the Department's disclosure to your Committee of documents relating to the Antitrust Division's evaluation of the sale of Conrail is unprecedented in my experience. The Department has attempted to cooperate fully with Congress in this matter, virtually opening our files to members of the Committee and their staff. We have spent hundreds of man-hours explaining our analysis and answering the multitude of questions posed by various members of Congress. In short, we have done everything to facilitate the Congress's efforts to consider the sale of Conrail to NS.

Second, then Acting Assistant Attorney General Charles F. Rule made the decision not to withhold from the Committee any documents or notes under claims of privilege. Despite concerns about the potential effect in chilling the candor and fullness of communications by and among the Division staff. Mr. Rule recognized the concerns of Congress and the need to provide it with all the materials deemed necessary. Every document requested by the Committee has been turned over. After the staff expressed its concern about the disclosure of personal notes and other materials that under any other circumstances would have remained confidential. Mr. Rule informed the staff that in connection with the Conrail matter the Department would, then and in the future, comply fully with reasonable requests for documents by the Congress regardless of possible claims of privilege. When I became Assistant Attorney General, I concurred in that decision.

Third, prior to my becoming Assistant Attorney General, Mr. Rule never intended to change the staff's existing document retention practice. When I arrived in September, I considered making such a change; however, Mr. Rule strongly argued against any change, and we agreed that we should not attempt to change the staff's practice.

Fourth, although Mr. Rule and I never intended to change the staff's document retention practice, we learned that for a short time in the late summer and early fall of this year the staff thought that superseded drafts of documents and personal notes should not be retained. When this came to our attention, the staff was instructed to return to their normal retention practice. I have subsequently learned that two notes that otherwise would have been retained were discarded as a result of that misunderstanding. From the information available, it is clear that both notes were innocuous. The only other document destroyed by the staff was their draft of my September 25 letter to Secretary Dole that would have been destroyed in any event.

Fifth, in response to a December 5, 1985 request from Chairman Florio, I have now instructed the staff to go beyond their normal retention policy and to retain all notes and other written materials, including superseded drafts, even if they normally would discard those documents. This policy represents a further unprecedented step to cooperate with Congress in this very unusual case.

II

There is no standard document creation and retention practice in the Antitrust Division. Rather, the extent to which documents are created and retained varies from one individual to another among our professional staff of attorneys and economists. Some attorneys and economists take few notes and discard superseded drafts of documents, others take detailed and copious notes and save everything they have written. Some may write and edit on word processors, without generating paper copies of every iteration of their work. Because of the number of Division personnel involved in the Conrail matter, it is not surprising that the practice varied among those individuals. At least until the late summer of 1985, such "normal" but varied document retention and creation practices prevailed among the Conrail staff.

At a hearing on April 30, 1985, before the Subcommittee on Commerce, Transportation, and Tourism of the House Committee on Energy and Commerce, you asked then-Acting Assistant Attorney General Rule whether the Department would "submit [the] work papers and notes [of Dr. Kenneth Heyer, the Department staff economist assigned to the Conrail matter] together with any analysis that was performed by [Division] lawyers in connection with the questions" you had discussed with Mr. Rule. Mr. Rule responded that the Department "would be happy to work with . . . your staff in trying to work out some way to turn over these documents. As you know, the Department has a policy in terms of internal memoranda, but we will be happy to work with you and talk to the various folks in the Department who are responsible for that." (Transcript at pp. 156-157). The Department had no further contact with you or your staff concerning these materials until after June 4, when you wrote a letter to Mr. Rule referencing the April 30 colloquy and requesting: (1) "all work papers and notes of . . . Kenneth Heyer in connection with his economic analysis of the proposed sale of Conrail to Norfolk Southern"; (2) "all internal analyses and memoranda prepared by Department . . . attorneys in connection with the proposed review of the proposed sale"; and (3) "copies of Norfolk Southern's efficiency claims, together with any data submitted in support of those claims . . ." through the date of the hearing. On July 26, 1985, after resolving confidentiality concerns with your staff, we provided both the Committee and the Subcommittee with copies of all documents responsive to your request that were in our possession on April 30, with the exception of a small number of documents later discovered and forwarded to the subcommittee in early October.

The Division did not hear further from the Committee concerning the documents until it learned from an article in the Washington Post that Chairman Florio and Representative Mikulski of your Committee had sent the Department a letter based on those documents criticizing the staff's analysis of the sale of Conrail to NS. Some members of the Conrail staff were surprised and disturbed because of the extent to which the letter quoted the documents out of context and because of the failure of the Committee to seek clarifications and explanations from the Division before publicly criticizing the work of the professional staff.

On August 21, you sent a follow-up request for additional documents in the possession of the Department on or before April 30, 1985. This request included working papers, drafts and notes—classes of documents that under normal circumstances would clearly be privileged and never made public. In reviewing the material requested, it became clear that there were potentially misleading or personally embarassing statements in some notes and draft documents. These statements reflected no more than the informality appropriate to notes made only for the author's use, and to the imprecision in writing that makes a draft document just that—a draft not yet in final form. In addition, there were extraneous comments in a staff member's notes that, while irrelevant to Congress' consideration of Conrail, could be read as disparaging of an individual. The staff was understandably concerned about disclosing such documents.

Nevertheless, because of the unusual nature of this matter and the importance the Division attached to facilitating Congress' consideration of the sale of Conrail, Mr. Rule concluded that all requested documents should be turned over to your Committee. Mr. Rule so informed the career attorneys supervising the Divsion's Conrail analysis. Mr. Rule also notes thereafter created and retained would likewise be disclosed if requested by Congress and that the staff should of documents. This simple cautionary note was apparently misinterpreted by senior career staff who instructed the rest of the staff that in the future they should discard at least some superceded drafts of documents. Recollections of the scope of this instruction differ as to whether all drafts were implicated, whether there was a difference between substantive and non-substantive draft changes, or whether only "unnecessary" drafts should be discarded. Mr. Rule, however, was unware that his cautionary note had been misunderstood.

In September, I became the Assistant Attorney General and was called upon to make a final decision as to the materials to be disclosed pursuant to your August 21 request. I agreed with Mr. Rule, who had become my deputy, that all documents should be turned over but was surprised to learn that some members of the staff routinely retain superceded drafts and that there was no standard practice concerning the taking of notes at meetings. Unaware of the staff misunderstanding discussed above, Mr. Rule and I determined that the staff should not be directed to change its document retention policy during the pendency of the Conrail matter. A senior Conrail staff member was directed, however, to designate a single staff member to take notes at future meetings.

On one occasion, I did instruct the staff specifically to discard all superceded drafts of my September 25 letter to Secretary Dole. As you are aware, in that letter I informed the Secretary that NS' originally proposed divestiture of rail assets to Guilford Transportation Industries, Inc., and the Pittsburgh & Lake Erie Railroad Co. did not satisfy the conditions laid out in the Department's January 29, 1985 letter to the Secretary. The September 25 letter was extremely sensitive and its tone and nuance had to be precisely drawn. The staff was asked to provide draft language that I revised extensively. I ordered the superceded drafts to be destroyed in order to avoid speculation about views or language that the staff had attributed to me but that I did not ultimately adopt as my own. Under similar circumstances in the future, I would give the same instruction.

The staff's understanding that they were under instructions to discard any drafts of other documents did not come to Mr. Rule's or my attention until early November. As soon as we did learn of it, however, Mr. Rule informed the career supervisors that the staff should be told that they were under no such instructions. Rather, the staff was directed to follow their normal retention practices and not to discard anything that they felt should be retained. When a member of the minority staff on the Senate Judiciary Committee inquired about a rumor that the staff had been told to destroy documents, Mr. Rule decided to ask two senior career attorneys, who were not involved in the Conrail matter, to inquire into the staff's understanding of their instructions with regard to document retention, the basis for that understanding, and the effect of that understanding. The two attorneys interviewed all relevant career staff involved in the Conrail matter, as well as Mr. Rule and me. They completed their inquiry more than a week ago and prepared a summary of their conclusions, which I am attaching to this letter. On Friday, December 13, Mr. Rule informed the Judiciary Committee staff member of the conclusions of the inquiry.

That inquiry disclosed that, while the staff for a time in the late summer and early fall believed that they were to discard superseded drafts created during that period, no drafts that otherwise would have been retained were actually discarded. The only drafts discarded related to my September 25 letter to Secretary Dole, and, as I have explained, those drafts would have been discarded regardless of the misunderstanding relating to staff retention practices. One staff member did discard a page of notes relating to an internal meeting and described by its author as innocuous. In addition, a staff member discarded notes describing a confidential report of the United States Railway Association, which we understand has been requested by your Committee. The circumstances surrounding the discarding of those documents are described in the attached summary. Neither of the notes involved any relevant information that is not available from other sources.

The Division has been extremely careful to preserve all documents that were requested by Congress. The Division now and throughout its involvement in this matter has recognized the Committee's authority to examine the proposed sale of Conrail, and nothing has been done even indirectly to impede the Committee's consideration of the sale of Conrail. Indeed, as a result of a request by Chairman Florio in his letter to me of December 5, and because of the unique circumstances of this case, the career staff has now been instructed to retain all written materials generated by them in this matter, regardless of their normal policy. Mr. Rule and I are continuing our policy of discarding our own superseded drafts, inasmuch as we are available to explain our analysis and conclusions to Members of Congress and staff.

III

Before closing, it is necessary to address a specific allegation that the Division has destroyed drafts of a mid-December 1984 press release, copies of which were specifically requested by the Committee. First, let me reiterate that there is absolutely no indication that preexisting documents subject to Congressional requests were ever destroyed; the Committee has obtained all requested "materials in the Department's possession prior to the hearing on April 30, 1985, relating to the Department's review and consideration of the proposed sale of Conrail." This includes all iterations of the mid-December press release to which the allegation refers. Second, there is a rather simple explanation for the absence of other iterations. The draft press releases that exist were created by the staff without consultation with the Division's policy officials and prior to completion of the analysis of the sale of Conrail. The staff then presented the staff release to then-Assistant Attorney General Paul McGrath. Mr. McGrath concluded that a press release would be inappropriate, and so no further revisions of the draft release were made. As you are aware, the Department never issued such a press release and its first public statement on the merger took the form of the January 29 letter to Secretary Dole, which reflected more than a month of additional consideration of the sale.

IV

In closing, I want to stress that the Department wishes to cooperate fully with your Committee's consideration of the sale of Conrail to NS. The Antitrust Division has disclosed more internal documents and spent more time explaining its competitive analysis in this matter than in any other in which the Division has ever been involved. Although there was, for a short time, a misunderstanding as to instructions to the staff concerning the retention of subsequently produced documents, that misunderstanding was corrected as soon as it came to the attention of Mr. Rule and me. No documents and only two notes of no particular significance were discarded as a result of that misunderstanding.

To sum up: No action was taken at any time to destroy or discard any documents requested by Congress; all documents requested by the Congress have been and will be supplied; the misunderstanding about document retention was inadvertent, short-lived, and caused no harm.

Sincerely,

DOUGLAS H. GINSBURG,
Assistant Attorney General.

Mr. SPECTER. The essential conclusion as Mr. Ginsburg states, "As detailed below, the allegations are untrue."

Mr. President, at this juncture all there is on the record are the assertions made by Chairman DINGELL and the response made by Mr. Ginsburg. It seems to this Senator that those matters ought to be inquired into by the Judiciary Committee of the U.S. Senate so that we can proceed to question the appropriate officials of the Department of Justice as to what went on.

Now, I have great respect for what Mr. Ginsburg has said, but any inquiry worth its salt would do more than take the generalizations that the Assistant Attorney General has rendered. Obviously, he is relying upon information which has been provided to him, and I do not for 1 minute question his veracity. But I do believe that any inquiry ought to look behind those assertions and behind those conclusions as to what has happened to the people within the Department of Justice.

I think that is especially important in the context of this proceeding where the Department of Justice has taken an advocacy role really in support of the Department of Transportation. Those questions raised by Chairman DINGELL ought to be the subject of a thorough inquiry before the U.S. Senate is called upon to pass upon the proposed sale of Conrail to Norfolk-Southern.

Mr. President, there is one other question of tremendous importance that has to be answered with authority before the Senate can pass upon this proposed sale, and that is what the tax consequences will be to the U.S. Treasury.

Mr. President, there has always been a gray issue as to whether $1.2 billion was in any consideration adequate for a sale of 85 percent of the stock of Conrail, given the fact that the taxpayers of the United States have put some $7 billion into Conrail, given the fact that the depreciable assets of Conrail are worth in excess of $3 billion, and given the fact that the replacement value of Conrail has never even been evaluated, notwithstanding my continuing requests to the Secretary of Transportation, Elizabeth Dole, for that figure for more than a year.

The alternative offer made by Morgan Stanley is pending at $1.4 billion—$200 million in excess of the amount of money which has been offered by Norfolk-Southern. The Morgan Stanley offer, Mr. President, I think is infinitely superior to the Norfolk-Southern offer because the Morgan Stanley offer enables the current Conrail management to stay in place, management which has achieved very substantial profits over the course of the past 5 years.

The Morgan Stanley offer eliminates the antitrust problems of the acquisition by Norfolk-Southern and the Morgan Stanley offer would retain the current Conrail operations which have been so successful. When Norfolk Southern made its offer, which is approximately 2 years old, the Conrail picture financially was very different than it is today, and the only real argument advanced by the administration against the Morgan Stanley offer is the context that Conrail is not viable. But the viability of Conrail has been established in a variety of contexts and that is a subject which certainly will be a matter to be considered at some very extensive length if, as, and when we come to that issue.

I shall not dwell on that point today because I have sought to limit my remarks to outstanding questions which make it untimely to proceed with S. 638 at this time. One of those issues is the question of what will the tax loss be to the U.S. Treasury. The Congressional Budget Office made an evaluation of this issue on June 6, 1985, and estimated as set forth on page 1 that the Treasury would lose about .4 billion in tax revenues or about $400 million. Estimates made by others have placed that loss as high as $800 million.

There has been pending for some time an analysis by the Department of the Treasury on this subject which we have sought to secure and on January 9, 1984, I wrote to Treasury Secretary Baker as follows:

DEAR SECRETARY BAKER: As you know, the Senate is expected to address the Conrail sale legislation when we reconvene on January 21 and we have not yet heard from the Treasury regarding the revenue implications of the Conrail sale.

I have been informed that Treasury has prepared (or is in the process of preparing) a revenue analysis of the sale of the United States' interests in Conrail which shows, in economic terms, the net revenue difference between a sale of such interests to the Norfolk Southern Corporation, and a sale to the public, as contemplated by Morgan Stanley's proposal.

I would very much appreciate it if you could make this analysis available forthwith since Senator Dole, the Majority Leader, has announced that the Conrail issue will be the first order of business when the Senate reconvenes.

We need the information promptly in order to be prepared to proceed with the consideration of the Conrail issue on January 21.

If the analysis is not yet completed, I would very much appreciate your seeing to it that Treasury's analysis will:

1. Make realistic assumptions concerning Norfolk Southern's taxable income during the periods in question (e.g., at least $450 million in 1986 and growing at a rate of 5% or more per year thereafter);

2. Recognize that Conrail will be allowed post-sale deductions for payments in settlement of past wage claims and for accelerated ESOP contributions; and

3. Not limit the revenue projections to the five-year budget period in question.

The financial experts advise that these factors must be taken into account if the analysis is to be realistic.

As yet, Treasury Secretary Baker has not responded to this inquiry.

However, Mr. President, it is obvious that the revenue issue, the revenue impact on loss of taxes in terms of depreciation, or loss of revenue carryover, or whatever it is that Norfolk-Southern may be able to take advantage of, bears very materially and very heavily on the underlying merits.

At a point where the Morgan Stanley offer is $200 million more than the Norfolk-Southern offer, if the tax loss to the Treasury is to be $400 million, then in cold cash the Morgan Stanley offer is worth $600 million more.

If the estimates for $800 million in tax loss are accurate, and that is added to the $200 million that the Morgan Stanley offer exceeds the Norfolk offer, then it would be $1 billion more, and that is a very material consideration.

When Secretary of Transportation Dole appeared before the informal proceedings—since the Judiciary Committee was not formally in session on November 21—this Senator asked Secretary Dole what the tax loss would be, and she was unable to supply that figure.

Mr. President, I think it is indispensable that we know this figure in order to be able to make an evaluation on comparing the Norfolk-Southern offer with the Morgan Stanley offer.

Mr. President, it is for these reasons that it is my strongly held view that the U.S. Senate is not ready to proceed to consider this bill, which would call for the acquisition of Conrail by Norfolk-Southern. It seems to this Senator that, in good conscience, the U.S. Senate cannot be asked to pass upon this very vital combination of railway systems in this country without knowing what the antitrust consequences are.

That is especially true in the context where the ICC staff has come to the conclusion that there is a violation of the antitrust laws because the proposed divestiture to Guilford and Pittsburgh & Lake Erie is inadequate. That is especially true in the context where the Government consultant, Banks, has filed a voluminous report finding that the proposed divestiture to Guilford and Pittsburgh & Lake Erie is insufficient. That is especially true in the context where the third divestiture effort is finally given preliminary approval on the thinnest of reasons by the Department of Justice in a context where they are sitting back and not doing even the fundamental effort to find out what the facts are. It is outlandish that they announced their preliminary approval on November 11, 1985, and then seek to justify it in the informal proceedings before the Judiciary Committee on November 21. It is also outlandish that they failed to respond to my letter of December 19, when it is obvious that we have to have the information in order to proceed to find out what the facts are when the Senate takes up the matter today, January 21. It is outrageous that it is only on January 8 that the Department of Justice gets around to asking questions of Pittsburgh & Lake Erie and Guilford, and has not yet gotten around to asking questions of Norfolk-Southern and Conrail. It is absurd that they have not yet retained a consultant, when it is obvious that the consultant has already been paid handsomely by the Department of Justice, and Banks is familiar with the underlying factors, and it would be only updating or evaluating the changes that have been made. That has not been done, obviously, because the Department of Justice must know that if it submitted the matter to Banks, it would receive the same conclusion—that the divestiture to the likes of Pittsburgh & Lake Erie cannot possibly provide the kind of competition to compete with a giant of 18,000 miles of trackage like Norfolk Southern and 15,000 miles of trackage like Conrail.

Especially in the context of an analogous proposed merger of Santa Fe and Southern Pacific, we certainly should not rush to judgment and give our approval to buy this pig in a poke, and have the U.S. Senate approve this acquisition, depending on what the Department of Justice may or may not do, given that Department's track record in this case.

For these reasons, and what has occurred during the course of the past hour or so, this, as I say, only summarizes and puts in very condensed form, very expensive analyses of very complex issues which I believe this body must take up because the Department of Justice has not taken them up. This body has to come to grips with the antitrust consequences before we can be asked to pass on this pending legislation.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

Mr. DANFORTH addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri.

Mr. DANFORTH. Mr. President, I had not intended to speak on the motion to proceed, and I will not take long. I do regret that the debate on the question of the Conrail sale has begun on a couple of very sour notes.

One sour note was the fact that the distinguished Senator from Ohio has apparently decided to attempt to take for himself the responsibility of managing the time and the business of the Senate by making a motion to proceed to a bill. I had thought—when I was in the majority and in the minority in the Senate—that motions to proceed were to be made by the majority leader, that this was a privilege accorded by the traditions of the Senate to the majority leader, that he had that responsibility for determining what business would be before the Senate. But the Senator from Ohio has attempted to take out that management for himself.

Second, during the very extensive debate, with many, many documents put in the RECORD by the Senator from Pennsylvania, I have to say that I believed that it was a sour note that he dwelled at such length on what he thought were irregularities on the part of the Department of Justice, to the point of putting into question the reliability and the impartiality of the Attorney General and the Assistant Attorney General.

Mr. President, I hope that during this debate the merits will be discussed. I hope that we will get to the point. I have been led to believe by Senators who are opposed to the Conrail sale that they intend to debate it to the fullest, and they are certainly privileged to do that. But "to the fullest" in their minds means everything, from debating a motion to proceed to the at least clear threat of a postcloture filibuster. It is going to be a tough year.

I think when most of us left for the recess, we were a little bit disgruntled about the state of the Senate. We had a meeting about the quality of life in the Senate, and immediately after that, we went into that wrenching filibuster on the farm bill. And we looked forward to the year ahead with a difficult tax bill before us, not to mention the agonizing decisions that will have to be made in respect to compliance with GRAMM-RUDMAN-HOLLINGS.

But now on the very first day, nay, in the very first hours of this session of the Congress, we find ourselves engaged in a debate which deals less with debating the facts and debating the future of Conrail than with attacking the veracity and integrity of the Justice Department and with attempting to allocate to the Senator from Ohio the powers that the traditions of the Senate accord to the majority leader.

Mr. President, the question before us should be very simple: What future holds the soundest and brightest prospects for rail transportation in the Northeast quadrant of our country? That is the issue that is going to be before the Senate or should be before the Senate; not broadsides against the personalities in the Justice Department, not power struggles on the floor of the Senate, but what is the future of rail transportation. That is the issue and it is an issue that has been before us now for some 5 years.

The allegation is made that we are rushing this to decision. That has been an allegation that has been made repeatedly over the years. As a matter of fact, the sale of Conrail is something that the Congress decided on in 1981. Since 1981, when we passed the Northeast Rail Services Act, we have had the decision before us to sell Conrail. Pursuant to that legislation, the Department of Transportation went through a very prolonged proceeding to attempt to find the very best purchaser for Conrail. And what was the No. 1 criterion for the Department of Transportation? It was not tax revenues. It was not sales price.

When we are running $200 billion deficits, are we going to be here determining the future of rail transportation on the basis of $200 million? It is ridiculous. The question was not how much cash could we realize for Uncle Sam, but how could we provide the best future for the shippers, for those who are dependent on rail transportation in the Northeast quadrant of our country.

So the Department of Transportation hired a consultant, Goldman, Sachs. And Goldman, Sachs canvassed over 100 potential buyers and received 15 different proposals. Goldman, Sachs and the Department of Transportation analyzed those proposals at extraordinary length. The Department of the Treasury analyzed the proposals and the Justice Department analyzed the proposals. The House of Representatives held hearings and the Commerce Committee in the Senate held hearings and the Judiciary Committee held hearings ad nauseam. And now, finally, at long last, we get to the question on the floor of the Senate.

Mr. President, I in no way dispute the desire of Senators who are opposed to this bill to air the facts and air the arguments. But let us get to the facts and get to the arguments. The fact of the matter is that Conrail cannot exist for long as a stand-alone railroad. A sale to Morgan Stanley is the road to a stand-alone Conrail.

The idea of the Morgan Stanley sale is that Morgan Stanley operates as the manager of an underwriting group consisting of some 40-odd members, colleges, universities, businesses, competing railroads—you talk about competition, CSX is one of the underwriting groups—and then they are to sell it. They are to sell it. They are just to put it out to the public for sale. Who is going to buy it? Anybody; everybody; Carl Icahn; some raider? Who is going to buy it, the stand-alone Conrail?

The chief executive officer of the CSX, back in the days when he was apparently less fearful of Norfolk-Southern, said very clearly that in his view, a stand-alone Conrail could not prevail. That is the result of the Morgan Stanley possibility and that is the alternative that is going to be before the Senate: the Morgan Stanley stand-alone sale of Conrail.

Or, on the other hand, we can follow the advice of the Department of Transportation, we can follow the analysis that it and Goldman, Sachs have given to this, and we can say that the future of Conrail and the future of freight rail transportation in the Northeast quadrant of this country is best fostered by a linkage of Conrail with Norfolk-Southern.

Mr. President, if the criterion is the future of rail transportation, there is not the slightest doubt in my mind that the sound status of rail transportation in the Northeast part of our country is best furthered by proceeding with the bill that is before us.

Several Senators addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WARNER). The Senator from Ohio.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, I would like to respond to my colleague, respected colleague, about the sour note. The sour note with respect to this issue occurred when a motion was made to proceed to the consideration of Conrail, a cloture petition was laid down without one word of debate, without one word of debate, and immediately thereafter the Conrail bill was taken down.

That was sour. That was very sour. Because what it said was that you, who are Members of the Senate, elected by your respective States, do not have the right to debate the issue until we get to the question on cloture 2 days from now. What kind of logic is that? What kind of absurdity is that?

The Senator from Pennsylvania could not have spoken this afternoon except for the fact that there was unanimous consent. If the Senate has nothing before it, then debate is not in order on that issue or any other issue except by unanimous consent.

Talk about a sour note. I think it is very sour when, on the first day of the new year, we come back here and we bring up a measure and immediately take it down and say the U.S. Senate may not debate the issue.

You may have merit on your side, I say to the Senator, and I may have merit on my side. I do not happen to support the Morgan Stanley proposal. My colleague from Pennsylvania does. I believe that the railroad is doing fine. It is a very viable railroad. It was one of the best-respected railroads, best-operated railroads, and made between $400 million and $500 million last year. And the Senate is called upon, without one word of debate, to sell it for $1.2 billion, and included in the purchase you get $800 million in cash.

You get $250 million surplus in the pension fund. You get the right to depreciate $3.5 billion of assets. You get something like the use of $2 billion in loss carry forward for your tax purposes. And we do not have a right to debate it.

The Senator from Pennsylvania very appropriately points out that the matter is not right for the U.S. Senate to debate, or to vote on. It may be right to debate, but not to vote on certainly. The Justice Department is supposed to report back to the Senate on phase II. We do not have a report on phase II. We will not have it for some months. We all would like to see it.

But the Justice Department tells us to go ahead, and act before they advise us as to their view with respect to the antitrust aspects of this matter.

Then we are asked to act on this matter. Well, $200 million is left sitting on the table. I do not know if the Morgan Stanley deal is any better than the Norfolk Southern deal. I am not prepared to argue that. I know there is $200 million out there that we could use very well in trying to balance the budget. I am also a realist enough to understand that if they offered $200 million at this point my guess is there is more in the kitty, and they are ready to come up with some more. But, no, we cannot debate the issue.

Absent my motion which the Senator considers to be a usurping of the leadership prerogative, I never worried much about those issues. I have been more worried about the issues that we have to vote on rather than the questions such as the Senator suggests. But absent my motion, I would not be in a position to debate this issue, the distinguished Senator from South Dakota, who is waiting to debate the issue, would not be in a position to do so, and the Senator from Pennsylvania would not have been able to be heard this afternoon except by reason of unanimous consent request.

There is no filibuster going. What we are trying to do is debate the issue on its merits. If my motion were not pending, we could not debate the issue on the merits. The Senator says he would hope that the merits of the issue would be discussed. So would I because the more they are discussed, the less of a case you can make out for giving away this railroad to the Norfolk & Southern for $1.2 billion.

I respect the leadership of the Senate. And I respect the prerogatives of the leadership. I do not intend to usurp any of those rights at all. But I do believe that the U.S. Senate—all 100 Members—has a right to participate in the debate with respect to this issue. And the first issue is: Should we be taking it up at all?

Absent my motion, we would not be in a position to be debating it today and tomorrow. I want to debate it today and tomorrow. I am prepared to debate it at length tomorrow and explain all of the reasons I am opposed to this sale. I do not expect to do that this evening. I do intend to do it tomorrow. I know there are other colleagues in the U.S. Senate who also wish to be heard on this issue as to why we should not be moving to take up this measure at this moment. But without my motion, such debate would not be in order.

So, I want to say to my friend that I do not see anything sour about the note that has been injected on the floor of the U.S. Senate in saying that we want to debate the very issue that we are being called upon to vote with respect to cloture 2 days from now. We will debate this issue between now and that vote on Thursday.

I am glad that we have had an opportunity to clarify the picture, and I think when my colleague from Missouri understands that without this motion no debate would be in order perhaps he might be more inclined to reflect further as to whether or not it is a sour note to move that we proceed to consider the Conrail bill.

Mr. DANFORTH addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri is recognized.

Mr. DANFORTH. Mr. President, I would like to restate that it is a sour note. It is an insult to the majority leader to make a motion to proceed.

Mr. President, in the time that I have been in the Senate I can never remember a time when a Senator other than the leader just made a motion to proceed. Maybe it has been done. But it is certainly contrary to the traditions of the Senate.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. DANFORTH. No; I will not.

Mr. METZENBAUM. For a question?

Mr. DANFORTH. No; I will not.

The fact of the matter is this: The Senator from Ohio says we would not be able to debate the issue but for his motion. Mr. President, we were debating the issue but for his motion. The Senator from Pennsylvania was debating the issue.

Mr. METZENBAUM. With unanimous consent.

Mr. DANFORTH. Mr. President, I have the floor.

Mr. President, the Senator from Pennsylvania—not with unanimous consent—in morning business provided by the majority leader, was debating the issue of the Conrail sale. He was debating it at great length. He debated it, I believe, for over an hour. He asked to have printed in the RECORD many documents on the issue. He was talking about the Conrail sale on the floor of the Senate when the Senator from Ohio went up to the Senator from Pennsylvania and whispered in his ear. Then the Senator from Ohio asked if he could have the right to the floor without the Senator from Pennsylvania yielding his right to the floor.

Mr. President, I was sitting here minding my own business, believing that it was common courtesy to permit a Senator to break into a debate, and say what he wanted to. I was not going to raise any question about how many times the Senator from Pennsylvania might be speaking on an issue during one day; did not intend to do that. Common courtesy allowed this unanimous consent request to be made.

What happened? Not a debate, not a comment, not a question by the Senator from Ohio—instead the Senator from Ohio stood at the desk and said, "Mr. President, I move that we proceed." That is, Mr. President, a taking upon himself of the power, the right, and the tradition of the majority leader. It is a power that only the majority leader under the traditions of the Senate has. And the Senator from Ohio, in my opinion, Mr. President, attempted to insult the majority leader. We were debating the issue.

I am confident that if the Senator from Ohio wanted to debate it further, the majority leader would say fine, unless there is other pressing business that should be brought before the Senate. I do not know. I cannot speak for the leader. But I do know this: This is unprecedented. This is wrong. This is a further breach in the kind of basic comity which we hope would be furthered on the floor of the U.S. Senate.

Several Senators addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Dakota is recognized.

Mr. PRESSLER. Mr. President, let me speak, if I may, to the merits of the issue before us.

This is not just an east coast, Pennsylvania, Ohio, eastern Mississippi issue. There are regional railroads throughout the West, the South, and the Midwest that would be very much affected by the sale of Conrail. If there is one monopoly railroad east of the Mississippi, it means that truckers, railroads, and others who feed into that railroad will be at the mercy of that monopoly railroad. I know that much of the debate on Conrail has centered around the amount of the sale, the amount of the tax writeoff, and so forth. But across the country, there are shippers, railroads, and truckers who are very concerned about what the impact would be of a monopoly railroad east of the Mississippi.

At the appropriate time I shall offer a regional railroad amendment which will deal with the diversion of traffic, and with other issues. But this is a national transportation problem, a problem that cuts to the heart of what kind of transportation system we will have in all parts of the United States.

Let me also say that there are many strong arguments that my colleagues have made about the price, the alternative offers about the antitrust issues, and about many other matters that surround us. As a member of the Commerce Committee, I have raised those questions and have asked for answers, especially regarding antitrust.

I join with my colleague from Pennsylvania in recounting how difficult it has been to get answers from the Justice Department or from the Transportation Department on the specifics of antitrust.

We discovered that the so-called Pittman analysis was used for the antitrust analysis of the railroad merger in the western part of the United States while a different analysis was used for the Conrail issue.

We have asked a number of pointed questions which to this day have not been answered by the Justice Department. We are in a situation where a different standard was used by the Justice Department and the ICC regarding the Santa Fe merger than was used regarding the proposed Conrail-Norfolk Southern merger.

We also have difficulty with some of the diversions that will occur.

But I speak, I think, for the shippers and the regional railroads in the West, the Midwest and the South when I say that there is almost unanimous concern among major shippers, be they on trunk lines that feed into railroads or be they on regional railroads or short line railroads, as to what the gateway costs will be.

Let me explain how this would work.

If the regional railroad comes into Chicago with grain and wants to go on to New York City, it will be totally at the mercy of a monopoly railroad, if there is no competition. It will be totally at the mercy of the railroad before it can go forward to get rolling stock. It will be totally at the mercy of that railroad for rates, for transfer rates, rentals of track or cars, or whatever. There will be no one else to turn to.

The same is true of a railroad or a trucking institution that is moving machinery west. There will be no alternative but to use this monopoly railroad.

For many weeks and months we have tried to get the Conrail-Norfolk

Southern people to enter into agreements. They have entered into some agreements with some railroads but not the midwestern ones, certainly not the Chicago and Northwestern and others that operate in my State and other Western and Midwestern States.

The shippers throughout the western part of the country have almost unanimously spoken out against the proposed sale.

There is a strong feeling that the alternative plan, the Morgan Stanley plan, would provide more competition and more alternatives. I think that is something that we need to consider very carefully.

I do want to say that I compliment the chairman of the Commerce Committee for his work on this bill. Earlier this year, I did say to him that I would be prepared to go to a vote as soon as we heard back from the Justice Department; that if the Justice Department were to respond on the antitrust issues, especially the Pittman analysis, I would have no trouble taking my lumps and going to a vote.

But the Justice Department and the Department of Transportation have been very evasive on this antitrust issue. They have been very evasive and slow in responding, to put it mildly, to questions I asked them in hearings before the Commerce Committee, as well as letters we have sent them, as to why the Pittman antitrust analysis was used in one railroad merger case but a different antitrust standard was used in another railroad merger case.

They have been very slow—and in fact have not responded at all—regarding the impact on many lines.

There has been almost no analysis provided by the Government in terms of what would happen to regional railroads that would have to feed into this monopoly. And if they had a grievance, who would they turn to for relief.

I certainly do not advocate reinstituting the Staggers Act and I certainly do not advocate a return to the days before 1980. The fact of the matter is that we need some sort of gateway agreements or we need an agreement that if a certain amount of traffic is diverted there would be some steps taken by the appropriate Government agency.

Tomorrow, I and several of my colleagues will send a letter to all Members of the Senate regarding my amendment on regional railroads. I think we will find that this amendment will bring into action many shippers west of the Mississippi. It will bring comments from many railroads, truckers, and others interested in transportation not only in the East but in the West. If the Conrail sale goes forward as planned, it will mean that the shippers west of the Mississippi are facing a monopoly when they arrive at the gateway, and they will be at the mercy of that monopoly with no competition.

So, Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent at this point to insert a copy of the letter I will send to all of my colleagues tomorrow regarding the problems of Western, Midwestern, and Southern regional railroads and shippers in that part of the world.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

U.S. SENATE,
Washington, DC, January 21, 1985.

Re: Conrail Sale Amendments Act (S. 638).

DEAR COLLEAGUE: When the Senate considers the Conrail Sale Amendments Act (S. 638) this week, we will offer an amendment which is designed to protect small and regional railroads from unfair market dominance and other anticompetitive pressures which could be exerted by a combined Norfolk Southern-Conrail (NS/CR). The amendment would apply only to the extent that the ICC finds anticompetitive or unfair market control has been exercised by NS/CR.

Although the amendment is designed to protect smaller railroads in the Midwest and the West, it also applies to small railroads within the immediate NS/CR region. It does not apply to the larger railroads such as CSX, Burlington Northern, Union Pacific, etc.

In effect, the amendment simply gives the affected railroads a cause of action before the Interstate Commerce Commission if within ten years of the consummation of the sale the ICC finds that these small or regional railroads have experienced traffic diversions of three and one-half percent or greater, due to the anticompetitive impact of the sale. If the diversions are caused by fair competition or some other nonmonopolistic force, no remedy will be available. The remedy under the plan would be to allow the affected railroad, following an ICC investigation and determination, to purchase at fair market value enough track or trackage rights from NS/CR to allow for adequate competition in the affected region.

The philosophy behind this amendment is quite simple: the rail system of the Midwest or the Western part of the country should not be sacrificed for the sole benefit of the Northeast—or, in particular, for the benefit of a single railroad.

We do not believe this transaction should be made at the expense of other railroads. But, if Department of Transportation figures are accurate, this amendment should never have to be used. The DOT estimates that "[t]he diversion figures for the Midwestern carriers are all below the two percent figure, both in the base case and the liberal case estimates," and that the "[i]mpact on the Western carriers is de minimus, both in absolute and percentage terms." So this amendment should not pose a problem assuming these estimates are accurate. Indeed, we have made the numbers extremely conservative. The amendment would require diversions in excess of 200 percent of the DOT's "most liberal case" estimates before it could be used by railroads outside the immediate NS/CR region!

We have used the three and one-half percent diversion figure because it represents the point at which the actual existence of some of the smaller railroads is threatened. Additionally, we have made it very clear that the diversions must be caused by anticompetitive factors arising from the NS/CR merger. Diversions for other reasons simply will not be considered by the ICC.

This amendment is the result of a sincere desire on our part to avoid a potentially catastrophic situation with railroads in other parts of the country. Conrail originally became the ward of the federal government because of the large number of railroad failures in the Northeast. It would indeed be ironic if, by finally turning this system over to the private sector and getting the federal government out of the railroad business, we set the wheels in motion for larger railroad failures in other parts of the country, thereby starting the process all over again.

Our amendment will provide for protection against that happening. It would not require any re-regulation of the industry. (Indeed, it may never have to go into effect.) Regardless of how you ultimately decide to vote on the merits of S. 638, we hope you will be able to support this amendment as a reasonable means of protecting railroads outside the NS/CR region from the potentially anticompetitive impacts of this transaction.

We ask for your support for this extremely important amendment, and invite you to join us as a cosponsor.

If you have any questions regarding this amendment or if you would like to cosponsor, please contact us or have your staff contact Kevin Schieffer of Senator Pressler's office at Ext. 45842 or Bill Mattea of Senator Dixon's office at Ext. 48814.

Sincerely,

LARRY PRESSLER.

Mr. PRESSLER. Let me say that if the Department of Transportation had been willing to reach an agreement on this, and if the Department of Transportation and the Justice Department had been forthcoming in responding to questions on antitrust, I may well not have been in the position that I am in today. But I believe that every Senator from the South, from the West and from the Midwest should oppose this, not on the grounds of what it will do to competition on the east coasts, but on the grounds of what it will do to transportation throughout this Nation. It is a nationwide decision. It will have great impact. Anything moving east and west will be at the mercy of one monopoly force east of the Mississippi.

For that reason, I hope we can turn to the Morgan Stanley proposal. I hope we can defeat the Norfolk Southern proposal entirely.

Mr. President, I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. METZENBAUM addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. METZENBAUM. When the Senator from Pennsylvania was speaking earlier, it was suggested that he was speaking in morning business. Is it not a fact that the unanimous-consent request was that the Senator from Pennsylvania may be permitted to address the body as if in morning business but that we were not actually in morning business?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Parliamentarian will advise the Chair.

The Chair is informed that earlier today the Senate was conducting morning business without any limitation placed on the length of remarks by individual Senators. That was done by direction from the Chair.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Was the Senator from Pennsylvania speaking as if in morning business or was he in morning business? We had moved at that point to the legislative calendar and the majority leader had ruled with respect to the Conrail bill that he had taken down the Conrail bill. The Senator from Pennsylvania was on the floor speaking.

The Senator from West Virginia then raised the point that there was nothing pending before the Senate at that moment and that without unanimous consent, the Senator from Pennsylvania was not in a position to continue speaking and a unanimous-consent request was made at that point that he might be permitted to do so.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed by the Parliamentarian that the Senator from Ohio was speaking as if in morning business.

Mr. METZENBAUM. As if in morning business?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair wishes to correct the record. The Senator from Pennsylvania was speaking as if the Senate were in morning business.

Mr. METZENBAUM. I thank the Chair.

A further parliamentary inquiry: Is it not the fact that if there were not presently pending the motion of the Senator from Ohio or some other motion, any Senator who rose on the floor to debate the Conrail issue or any other issue would need unanimous consent to do so?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. I am informed by the Parliamentarian that the practice of the Senate for many years has been that a Senator seeking recognition and speaking when the Senate is conducting morning business may address any issue he or she desires.

Mr. METZENBAUM. My inquiry did not have to do with the subject of being in morning business. We are now on the Legislative Calendar so my question is addressed to the fact that when we are in the Legislative Calendar, is it not a fact that no Senator may speak except under the Pastore rule without there being unanimous consent?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair asks the indulgence of the Members present. He is now consulting with the Parliamentarian.

The Parliamentarian requests of the Chair that the Senator from Ohio restate the question.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, is it not the fact that when we are on the Legislative Calendar and not in morning business, no Senator may debate an issue or legislative matter except by unanimous consent unless there is something pending before the body?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Parliamentarian advises the Chair that the Senator from Ohio is right.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Is correct?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is correct.

Mr. METZENBAUM. I thank the Chair.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

Mr. DANFORTH and Mr. SPECTER addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania is recognized.

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, I shall now reply somewhat briefly to the comments of the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Commerce, the Senator from Missouri [Mr. DANFORTH].

I regretted his response to, as he put it, the sour note when this Senator made reference to what Chairman DINGELL had commented upon. I do not know that it serves any purpose to say that it is a sour note that Chairman DINGELL raises this kind of issue, but it seemed to this Senator that this issue is a very substantial one.

In the context of the floor statement which I made in excess of 1 hour, not more than a minute or two—2 or 3 minutes at the most—were spent upon the assertions by Chairman DINGELL. But since the Senator from Missouri has raised it, I do feel compelled to amplify a little bit, because it is a very important matter, and one that I believe Chairman DINGELL will pursue in the House of Representatives before that body is called upon to make a judgment on this issue and one which I believe the U.S. Senate ought to pursue.

I did not read into the RECORD the full text of Chairman DINGELL's letter to Attorney General Meese dated December 9, 1985, but I did put it in the RECORD. Chairman DINGELL objected strenuously to what he asserted was the failure of the Department of Justice to supply documents and respond to requests concerning, first, issues about the alleged destruction of personal files, including notes and all drafts of documents; and second, allegations concerning instructions not to make notes or create work papers in the future.

I referred to the response by Assistant Attorney General Ginsburg very briefly in which those allegations had been denied because I spent my time on the substance of the matter. But the Assistant Attorney General said this on page 2:

> Fourth, although Mr. Rule and I never intended to change the staff's document retention practice, we learned that for a short time in the late summer and early fall of this year the staff thought that superceded drafts of documents and personal notes should not be retained. When this came to our attention, the staff was instructed to return to their normal retention practice. I have subsequently learned that two notes that otherwise would have been retained were discarded as a result of that misunderstanding. From the information available, it is clear that both document destroyed by the staff was their draft of my September 25 letter to Secretary Dole that would have been destroyed in any event."

Mr. President, when notes are destroyed and when drafts are destroyed, and when that is a deviation from the existing practice of the Department of Justice, it seems to this Senator that it is worth an inquiry to find out precisely what was done. An inquiry of this sort can be made in proper form without impugning anyone's integrity or without making any charge or without making any accusations, but simply by finding out what had happened. When the conclusory information is given that notes were innocuous, it seems to this Senator that there ought to be more information about what are the underlying facts which led to that conclusion.

When Assistant Attorney General Ginsburg refers to the destruction of drafts of his letter of September 25 to Secretary Dole, at least again speaking for this Senator, I am interested in what that draft would have to say.

The letter that Assistant Attorney General Ginsburg ultimately sent to Secretary of Transportation Dole, dated September 25, 1985—which I ask unanimous consent to have made part of the RECORD—raises some very fundamental concerns about the adequacy of Pittsburgh and Lake Erie and Guilford.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

U.S. DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
ANTITRUST DIVISION,
Washington, DC, September 25, 1985.

Hon. ELIZABETH HANFORD DOLE,
Secretary of Transportation,
Washington, DC.

DEAR SECRETARY DOLE: This letter is to inform you of the status of the Department of Justice's review of the proposed divestiture of rail assets to Guilford Transportation Industries ("GTI") and Pittsburgh and Lake Erie Railroad ("P&LE"), in connection with the proposed sale of Consolidated Rail Corporation ("Conrail") to Norfolk Southern Corporation ("NS"). As you know, the Department has been reviewing those proposed divestitures in order to determine whether they meet the conditions that are described in former Assistant Attorney General J. Paul McGrath's letter to you dated January 29, 1985. As that letter indicates, those conditions must be met before we can conclude that a proposed divestiture eliminates the competitive problems that would otherwise be created by NS' acquisition of Conrail.

In his January 29 letter, Assistant Attorney General McGrath indicated that given the magnitude of the competitive problems created by the sale of Conrail to NS, the Department could not approve the sale unless "its competitive problems are remedied through a prior or concurrent divestiture of assets that is approved by the Attorney General. Appropriate divestiture must include divestiture of Conrail and/or Norfolk Southern rail assets along the designated corridor to one or more independent acquirers, other than CSX or any entity owned or controlled by CSX, that would provide long-term, viable, and competitive rail service to locations along the corridor."

Based on the information we have obtained to date, including but not limited to the recent Preliminary Report of the Department's independent consultant, R.L. Banks and Associates, it does not appear that the proposed divestiture will establish a rail carrier in the designated corridor capable of providing long-term, viable competitive service.[1] In many locations the facilities that GTI proposes to acquire seem to be inadequate to provide rail service that could effectively compete with that provided by NS/Conrail. For example, it appears that it will take longer to provide service over GTI's proposed routes than over the routes available to CSX and NS/Conrail, thus making it difficult for GTI to compete for much of the intra-corridor traffic. In addition, our review indicates that GTI has understimated the amount of capital required to rehabilitate the lines it would acquire and that GTI has not yet obtained a firm commitment for the financing necessary in order to acquire and rehabilitate the divested lines.[2] This raises serious questions as to GTI's financial viability.[3]

Also of great concern is the fact that GTI's operating plan provides no assurance that GTI will provide the sort of competition with the merged NS/Conrail that would be necessary in order to eliminate the problems created by the sale of Conrail to NS. Indeed, no more than $31 million of the annual revenues that GTI forecasts it will generate from operating over the divested lines would be derived from markets identified as "problems" in our January 29 and March 26 letters to you. That is less than ten percent of the more than $370 million in "problem" revenues in which NS/Conrail participated in 1983 and that our earlier letter requires to be resolved. Instead, GTI apparently contemplates generating a great deal of its revenue in other markets, particularly TOFC (trailer on flat car) traffic and traffic that originates or terminates in New England. While GTI's participation in that traffic might allow GTI to remain financially viable and even to earn a profit, it would not address the competitive problems created by the sale of Conrail to NS. From our standpoint, we must be satisfied that divestiture will create not just a railroad that will be viable in the long term but one that will be an effective competitor in the problem markets.

Second, there is nothing to suggest that the proposed divestitures would provide adequate connections either within the corridor or to independent carriers at the gateways, as required by the January 29 letter. As to intra-corridor connections, for example, there appears to have been little provision made for a good connection between P&LE and GTI; without such a connection, P&LE will not be able to provide service that is competitive with that provided by NS/Conrail. Similarly, the proposed arrangements at Toledo are totally inadequate to allow GTI to connect with independent railroads there. Indeed, the connections are so poor that GTI's current operating plan shows that GTI has no intention of providing a competitive alternative to shippers in Wayne and Washtenaw Counties in Michigan. Yet those two counties were identified in the January 29 letter as counties (a) that must be served by an independent carrier and (b) that generate a very large portion of the problem revenues identified in that letter.

In addition, our earlier letters also require that if the Attorney General approves a divestiture and Conrail is sold to NS, NS/Conrail must perform switching services for the acquirer(s) of the divested assets and shippers under certain terms and conditions. As of this time, we are aware of only one instance in which the parties have come close to finalizing a switching arrangement. While our earlier letters do not require the parties to enter into comprehensive switching agreements in every location prior to divestiture, we are seriously concerned by the fact that such agreements have been negotiated in only one market.

In closing, let me assure you that the Department of Justice agrees wholeheartedly with your desire to place Conrail in the private sector. I am sharing this assessment with you at this time to enable the Department of Transportation (DOT) to address the serious reservations that this Department now has with the current divestiture proposal. If the parties are able, either through a restructuring of the current divestitures or the development of a new divestiture, to cure the defects of the present proposals, my staff and I stand ready to analyze fairly and thoroughly any and all new information we are furnished in order to determine whether they meet the requirements of our earlier letters.

Sincerely,

DOUGLAS H. GINSBURG,
Assistant Attorney General.

[Attachment A, Sept. 25, 1985]

LIST OF CURRENTLY IDENTIFIED MAJOR PROBLEMS WITH THE DIVESTITURE PROPOSAL

A. "[T]he acquirer or acquirers must demonstrate . . . that it possesses the managerial, operational, and financial capability necessary to compete effectively, and to remain a viable entity providing long-term rail service along the designated corridor."

(1) The GTI operating plan provides for little or no service to many of the "problem" markets (i.e., STCC/SPLC pairs) identified in the Department's January 29 and March 26, 1985 letters to Secretary Dole. For example:

(a) No significant service will be provided to Wayne or Washtenaw Counties, Michigan or to Blackford or Wabash Counties, Indiana.

(b) GTI's operating plan projects no more than $31 million in annual revenues for movements of all commodities in the "problem" markets; our letters identified over $370 million in problem revenues in which NS and Conrail participated in 1983 and that must be resolved by a divestiture or divestitures.

(2) In many locations, GTI will be acquiring facilities that are inferior to those retained by NS/Conrail, and will have to rely on NS/Conrail for access to many potential customers. Accordinly, GTI will be at a substantial disadvantage in marketing its services, and its operating plan indicates that it does not expect to obtain a significant share of the identified problem markets. For example:

(a) GTI's proposed Delphos–St. Louis line is far inferior in quality to the two rival NS/Conrail lines to St. Louis, and incapable, in its current condition, of being used to provide service that is competitive with that provided by NS/Conrail.

(b) The Madison yard in East St. Louis, which GTI intends to acquire in order to serve St. Louis, is far inferior in quality to the NS/Conrail yards that serve St. Louis.

(3) Even assuming adequate rehabilitation of the tracks to be divested, GTI's operating plan proposes service that would be substantially slower and less frequent than that likely to be offered by NS/Conrail.

(4) While there are disputes concerning the amount of GTI's rehabilitation costs, our review indicates that GTI has underestimated those costs. Substantial questions also have been raised concerning the accuracy of GTI's estimates of its operating costs, as well as GTI's ability to obtain the revenues projected in its operating plan. To the extent that GTI does not realize its projections, there would be a serious adverse effect on GTI's ability to compete with NS/Conrail.

(5) While we need more information on this Point, GTI appears to be so highly leveraged that it is questionable whether it can obtain the additional debt financing necessary to acquire, rehabilitate, and operate the divested assets in a competitive manner. In addition to being highly leveraged, GTI is unable to cover current debt with current assets. Although GTI did obtain an investment bank's opinion that financing for the purchase is obtainable, firm commitments and a number of other aspects of that financing (e.g., restrictive convenants) are yet to be negotiated.

(6) P&LE's financial situation seems to be extremely serious in every respect. P&LE appears even less likely than GTI to be able to obtain the financing necessary to acquire and operate the assets necessary in order to provide truly competitive service.

B. "[T]he divestiture should provide the acquirer direct connections in Buffalo, Chicago, Toledo, and East St. Louis to one or more railroads other than the merged carrier or CSX Corporation or any railroad controlled by either of them."

(1) GTI and P&LE's Toledo gateway, as currently proposed, cannot be used for time-sensitive movements to or from Wayne and Washtenaw Counties, Michigan. For example:

(a) GTI's proposed line from Toledo to Chicago goes east from Toledo before going west to Chicago; the route appears to be too circuitous to provide competitive service for time-sensitive movements.

---

[1] Our analysis to date has identified a number of deficiencies in the proposed divestitures, some examples of which are discussed in this letter. The major problems that we have identified to date are listed in greater detail in Attachment A. Correction of these problems will be necessary for any divestiture proposal to meet the conditions set out in our letters of January 29 and March 26.

[2] Instead, GTI has obtained only a letter from an investment bank stating its opinion that GTI could obtain certain financing, conditioned upon unspecified covenants yet to be negotiated.

[3] It appears even less likely that P&LE could obtain the financing necessary to acquire and operate the assets necessary in order to provide truly competitive service.

(b) We have been advised by P&LE that GTI cannot provide competitive service on auto-related movements from Wayne and Washtenaw Counties to Chicago because GTI's proposed Toledo-Chicago line passes under a Conrail bridge at Toledo that does not allow sufficient clearance for automobile-related traffic.

"[I]n each of the designated counties in the east-west corridor, the merged Norfolk Southern/Conrail entity must switch cars between its tracks and facilities and the tracks and facilities of any shipper served by Norfolk Southern, Conrail, or Norfolk Southern/Conrail on customary terms and conditions whenever switching is practicable and necessary in order to provide a shipper with effective competitive access to the track and facilities of the acquirer."

Because the divestiture proposal contemplates that NS/Conrail would in most major markets retain the tracks providing direct access to shippers, it appears that GTI and P&LE will have to rely on their competitors for switching in almost every location. As of this time, however, we are aware of only one instance in which the parties have come close to finalizing a switching arrangement for service to any of the "problem" markets identified in our January 29 and March 26 letters.

Mr. SPECTER. Reading at the top of page 2, the Assistant Attorney General says:

Based on the information we have obtained to date, including but not limited to the recent Preliminary Report of the Department's independent consultant, R.L. Banks and Associates, it does not appear that the proposed divestiture will establish a rail carrier in the designated carrier capable of providing long-term viable competitive service.

The Assistant Attorney General goes on to raise questions about the adequacy of the divestiture proposal. Mr. President, I for one would be very interested to see an earlier draft of that letter if that is in accordance with the Department of Justice practices. I would like to see how strong the language was. We are now finding in January of 1986 that a month ago the Department of Justice said these very serious problems may have been corrected. Well, how could they have been corrected? What did the Assistant Attorney General say in his draft letter of September 25? The Judiciary Committee has not concluded its hearings—we just had the informal inquiry—and these would be questions that this Senator would raise. Why should we sweep this under the rug? Why should we be asked to pass upon this issue about an antitrust problem when these questions have been raised by the chairman of this very important subcommittee of the House of Representatives? If the Senator from Missouri believes that this is raising a sour note, then I have to disagree categorically with him. I think this is an issue of utmost materiality and utmost importance, and it is our job in the United States Senate to find those facts before we are asked to make a conclusion and/or to reach a judgment. I think perhaps it is most significant to consider what the distinguished chairman of the Senate Commerce Committee did not say, as opposed to what he did say. He picked an alleged sour note by Senator METZENBAUM, an alleged sour note on this inquiry, but he did not deal with the substance of the ICC staff report which found a violation of the antitrust laws.

The chairman of the Commerce Committee, the Senator from Missouri, did not deal with the conclusions of the Banks study which found insufficient stature by Guilford, Pittsburgh, and Lake Erie to provide competition. The Senator from Missouri did not deal with the parallel of the Southern Pacific-Santa Fe merger. If that proposal violates the antitrust laws, then certainly the Conrail-Norfolk joinder violates the antitrust laws.

The Senator from Missouri dealt very briefly with the question of the viability of Conrail, and I would refer to the USRA finding:

The agency established by Congress to oversee Conrail's operation concluded in a staff report reviewing the financial outlook for an independent Conrail back on July 29, 1985, that "All available evidence supports a finding that Conrail can generate positive cash flow for the foreseeable future. Traffic shortfalls compared to the forecasts should not threaten Conrail's survival as long as the rail regulatory fare work is unchanged allowing service to be shaped to meet the demands of the market. By the end of this year Conrail will have been profitable for 5 years. It has been reasonably and credibly forecast to be profitable through the remainder of this decade. While there can be no absolute certainty it might have a forecast, to require more evidence from Conrail of its likely reliability will impose an unreasonable burden of proof on that opposition."

Mr. President, it must be noted that Conrail has sustained extraordinary profits: In 1981, $39 million; in 1982, $174 million; in 1983, $313 million; in 1984, $500 million; in 1985, $440 million. The 1985 figure came at a time when traffic was down somewhat, and I believe there were extra payments made to labor. But I think the viability of Conrail has been established.

Mr. President, I know the hour grows late and there is an inclination to adjourn the Senate at this moment. But I conclude by expressing the hope that the important issues projected in Senate bill 638 will receive adequate consideration by this body.

Senator METZENBAUM wants to know if he can go home. Yes, we can. But these issues require analysis. The Department of Justice has not made that analysis. The Interstate Commerce Commission has not made that analysis. The Senate Judiciary Committee has not made that analysis. It is up to the Senate to do so, and we ought not to shorten the time. We ought not to impose cloture.

I thank the Chair and I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who seeks recognition?

The majority leader is recognized.

Mr. METZENBAUM addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The majority leader has been recognized.

Mr. METZENBAUM. I ask the majority leader if he will yield for a question?

Mr. DOLE. I will be happy to yield.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, for those of us concerned about Conrail, may we go home at this point?

Mr. DOLE. If the Senator leaves me his proxy.

There will be no votes today. There has been some great debate. I am not sure I understood it all. However, that is not a requirement. Unless there are other Members who wish to speak on Conrail, I intend to recess shortly until 11 a.m. tomorrow.

Mr. METZENBAUM. I thank the Senator.

MESSAGE FROM THE SUPREME SOVIET

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, on January 17, 1986, Ambassador Dobrynin of the Soviet Union formally presented to me, in my capacity as President pro tempore of the U.S. Senate, a message addressed to the Congress from the U.S.S.R. Supreme Soviet. This document urges Congress to accept the nuclear weapons proposal which was previously submitted by Soviet General Secretary Gorbachev on January 15, 1986.

Ambassador Dobrynin and I had a constructive meeting. We discussed our hopes of improved communications between our nations based on the recent Geneva summit. As a member of the bipartisan Senate delegation which traveled to the Soviet Union last September, I told Ambassador Dobrynin that General Secretary Gorbachev and I had discussed the need for cooperation between our nations. I told Gorbachev last September, and reemphasized to Ambassador Dobrynin, that just as our nations stood together to defeat the Nazis in World War II, we should work together today for the cause of world peace. We both agreed that annual summit meetings would greatly assist in normalizing the relations between our countries.

We also discussed President Reagan's Strategic Defense Initiative. I told Ambassador Dobrynin that I would urge President Reagan to stand firm on this important defense plan.

It is my belief that the path for constructive dialog and proposals for peace should always remain open. I told Ambassador Dobrynin that I looked forward to studying this latest Soviet arms reduction proposal and making the U.S.S.R. Supreme Soviet document available to my fellow Senators for their review.

Accordingly, Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the full text of the message from the Supreme Soviet be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the text of the message was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

APPEAL OF THE U.S.S.R. SUPREME SOVIET TO THE U.S. CONGRESS

Dear Members of the United States Congress:

On behalf of the U.S.S.R. Supreme Soviet, its Presidium—guided by the objective to reduce international tensions which have risen to a dangerous level and seeking to ward off the threat of nuclear annihilation from humankind—appeals to you on an issue, the resolution of which brooks no delay.

The nuclear arms race, devouring colossal material resources and leading to unproductive waste of scientific and technological potentials of our countries, is going on. The competition in military field is the primary source of instability, of the growing threat to peace.

One can no longer tolerate a situation when the danger of nuclear catastrophe is looming over people's heads like the sword of Damocles. Conscience of humankind and the natural feeling of self-preservation demand that an end must be put to it.

It is for this reason that the U.S.S.R. Supreme Soviet, the supreme body of legislative authority of the Soviet State, resolutely comes out in support of reaching substantial and effective solutions at the current negotiations, which would erect a firm barrier to the arms race both in space and on earth, would make it possible to free financial resources in the range of billions for accomplishing creative objectives, for helping the peoples seeking to do away with their economic backwardness. Actions on the basis of mutual example, parallel steps capable of preventing the deterioration of the situation, of providing an impulse for coming over from decades of accumulation of nuclear weapons to joint consecutive steps to eliminate them would be a major significance to this end.

The USSR Supreme Soviet welcomed the results of the Soviet-American summit meeting in Geneva, regarding the talks between General Secretary of the CPSU Central Committee M.S. Gorbachev and President R. Reagan as creating opportunities for initiating a constructive search for ways to normalize Soviet-American relations, to revitalize the international situation as a whole.

The Soviet Union and the United States share the goal of eliminating nuclear weapons completely and everywhere. Now, in our opinion, we have to start moving jointly toward this goal. The question arises: Which path should be taken?

We are aware of a concept, according to which the elimination of nuclear weapons could allegedly be achieved through the development of qualitatively new weapons and their deployment in outer space. We are convinced, however, that to base one's policy on such calculations is to make an irretrievable mistake. The history of the arms race convincingly proved that no new weapon reduces the danger to humankind, on the contrary, it increases that danger. Should weapons appear in space, the nuclear arms race, far from being stopped, will accelerate with a force yet unseen and will follow the most dangerous directions.

For the first time in the history of the nuclear era, the Soviet Union has put forward an extensive, concrete and precisely timed program of complete liquidation of nuclear weapons everywhere. We propose that in the next 15 years, that is already by the year 2000, the process be carried out and completed of freeing Earth from nuclear armaments, accompanied by a ban on attack space weapons. Humankind must enter the third millennium free of the burden of the most destructive weaponry threatening the lives of all people.

Specific proposals to that effect are contained in the statement of the General Secretary of the CPSU Central Committee on January 15, 1986.

Under this program 50 per cent reductions of the corresponding nuclear weapons of the USSR and the USA would be only the first stage to be followed by further reductions of Soviet and American arsenals as well as by other nuclear powers joining the process. Reliable verification would be established, including on-site inspections.

The Soviet Union, as is known, has long been proposing that Europe be freed from medium range and tactical nuclear weapons. Within the framework of the first stage of the program we find it possible to agree on a complete elimination of medium-range missiles of the USSR and the USA in the European zone-ballistic as well as cruise missiles. The implementation of such an agreement would be the first step towards freeing the European continent from nuclear armaments. In this context the United States should, naturally, assume the obligation not to supply other countries with strategic missiles and medium-range missiles, and Britain and France, not to build up their corresponding nuclear armaments.

The complete elimination of the American and Soviet medium-range nuclear systems would be achieved in the course of the further implementation of the program.

The USSR Supreme Soviet calls upon the U.S. Congress to choose this—the only reasonable, practically feasible alternative to nuclear weapons—which is set forth in our program. It is our conviction that at present there exist all the necessary prerequisites for it.

In a similarly radical way, the USSR proposes to resolve the issue of chemical weapons, to liquidate these weapons completely together with their industrial base under strict verification including international on-site inspections.

In order to take a practical step in curtailing the arms race on its most dangerous, nuclear track, first of all any nuclear tests should be discontinued. For it is obvious that if there are no nuclear explosions, the basis for the improvement of nuclear weapons, the development of new, ever more destructive types of such weapons will disappear. An objective process of aging and, ultimately, of the demise of the nuclear arsenals would start in the absence of tests.

Seeking to set a good example, the Soviet Union has halted all nuclear explosions within its territory since last August 6 and has been strictly observing this unilateral obligation. Simultaneously the USSR called upon the U.S. Government to also exercise restraint and in turn to renounce the carrying out of nuclear explosions.

Unfortunately, one has to note that up till now the American side has not responded with reciprocity to this peaceful action of the Soviet Union. The United States is conducting time and again nuclear weapon explosions.

The movement for halting nuclear tests is gaining momentum in the world. We know that demands to put an end to these dangerous experiments are growing in your country, too. Responding to the appeals of the public, of prominent state and public figures of all continents and guided by the desire to ensure the resolution of the issue on a mutual basis, the Soviet Union has announced the extension of our unilateral moratorium for three more months.

Thus the Soviet Union, by deeds, demonstrates restraint in the military field, the necessity to exercise which our two countries agreed upon in Geneva. The USSR has undertaken this step intending to give the American side additional time for making a decision that is being expected from Washington by the peoples throughout the world. We urge the United States to follow the example of the Soviet Union and not to block further the accomplishment of a paramount task of universal significance.

The arguments of those who favor the continuation of nuclear tests are at odds with the interests of strengthening strategic stability and of averting the threat of war. The arms race—and it is precisely to whip it up that the incessant nuclear experiments are intended for—cannot serve as a foundation for durable peace.

On the contrary, the continued perfection and deployment of new types of nuclear weapons increase tensions, nurture mistrust and mutual suspicion, and, instead of lessening, they bring closer the danger of a fateful collision which must be avoided.

If the moratorium on nuclear explosions were to become mutual, it would, undoubtedly, give strong impetus to reaching agreements on the limitation and reduction of nuclear weapons, to enhancing and broadening mutual trust. The moratorium is a necessary and important element in the general context of efforts to terminate the arms race, to implement the agreements of principle reached in Geneva.

And the questions of verification are not at all an obstacle for establishing the moratorium. The Soviet side is prepared to go as far as mutual on-site inspections for verification of the non-conducting of nuclear explosions.

Here the road to mutually acceptable agreement is open. Political will is all that is needed to walk that road. The Soviet side has this will.

Making this appeal on behalf of the USSR Supreme Soviet, its Presidium expresses the hope that the U.S. Congress, its members will raise their voices in support of complete and general liquidation of nuclear weapons and in favor of establishing a bilateral Soviet-American moratorium on all nuclear explosions as the first step leading to this goal. There is no doubt that such a position on the part of the U.S. Congress would be received everywhere as a manifestation of the sense of high responsibility for the strengthening of the security of peoples, for the destiny of world peace.

The time has come to put an end to the madness of the nuclear race. Nuclear explosions should cease to maim the beautiful face of our common home, the planet Earth. The nuclear threat must be eliminated forever.

THE PRESIDIUM OF THE U.S.S.R. SUPREME SOVIET.

THE SESQUICENTENNIAL CELEBRATION OF LIVINGSTON UNIVERSITY

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, the 1985-86 collegiate academic year signals the sesquicentennial anniversary of one of the many fine institutions of higher learning in my home State of Alabama, Livingston University. During the 150 years of this school's existence, it has been a cornerstone of educational progress and activity in Alabama.

With a current enrollment of almost 1,500 students, of whom some 200 are pursuing graduate degrees, Livingston has grown a great deal since it was chartered in 1835 as a church-related female academy. This growth, however, has not been a steady progression, since the school experienced the expected difficulties of the Civil War and Reconstruction. Overcoming these problems, the school reopened several years after the war, and even admitted a few male students. This policy was reversed by the board of trustees, which, in 1876, adopted a resolution excluding male students. The student body would remain all female until the 20th century.

In 1881, a noted educator in that period of Alabama history, Julia Strudwick Tutwiler, took charge of the school, which was still supported by private funds. Two years later, Miss Tutwiler succeeded in convincing the Alabama State Legislature to provide a small State appropriation, believed to be the first financial provisions made by the Alabama government exclusively for the education of women.

Under Julia Tutwiler's leadership, the school, then known as Livingston Female Academy and State Normal College, would continue as a private school partially funded by the State until 1907, when Alabama assumed full control. Three years later, in 1910, Miss Tutwiler's long tenure as president would end, but she had set an example of continuity in leadership which has continued to this day.

In fact, in the 150 years of Livingston University, there have only been eight presidents, and one of those Dr. Ralph Lyon, was an acting president who served only 1 year. After Miss Tutwiler, Dr. G.W. Brock would serve as president from 1910 to 1936. He was followed by Dr. N.F. Greenhill (1936-44), Dr. W.W. Hill (1944-54), Dr. D.P. Culp (1954-63), Dr. John Deloney (1963-72), Dr. Lyon (1972-73), and Dr. Asa Green (1973-present). Clearly, this stability and continuity in the president's office has contributed to the consistent progress Livingston has shown.

In 1929, the institution was renamed State Teachers College at Livingston, and was given the authority to grant the bachelor of science degree. In 1947, further authorization was given for the bachelor of arts degree. Although the school's name has changed more than once since, the training of teachers has remained a major facet of Livingston's educational agenda.

The next name change for the school came in 1957, when the school became Livingston State College. It was during this phase of the college's development that the graduate division was established, and the first master's degrees were awarded. Only 10 years later, the school's name was again changed, to Livingston University. This latest, most current name reflects what has become a broad educational purpose for the school, as a regional university, serving the higher education needs of west Alabama.

I feel a personal closeness to this fine institution for my mother was a graduate, Miss Julia Tutwiler was my cousin, and I have been honored with a honorary Doctor of Laws degree.

Under the current leadership of Dr. Asa Green and a fine board of trustees, Livingston University has dedicated itself to helping foster improvement in the educational, economic and cultural life of its community and region. By providing an environment conducive to excellence in education, and encouraging students to learn by their own initiative in addition to learning under the tutelage of instructors, Livingston is developing not only college graduates, but responsible citizens and leaders.

Now organized into four instructional units—the College of General Studies, the College of Business and Commerce, the College of Education, and the School of Graduate Studies—Livingston is accredited by the Southern Associates of Colleges and Schools, the National Council for the Accreditation of Teacher Education, and the National League for Nursing.

Mr. President, one of the few constants in our ever-changing society is the value of an education. Education is the key to employment, to economic progress. Education is the key to the preservation of individual liberties. Education is the key to understanding the vast world around us.

As education maintains this importance, and even increase in value as we approach the 21st century—a time period that just a few years ago was a science fiction writer's shorthand for the far distant future—I congratulate Livingston University for 150 years of contributions to improvements in education, and wish it many more years of progress.

LIABILITY INSURANCE RATES SKYROCKET: NGA SURVEY

Mr. PRESSLER. Mr. President, the problems associated with the high cost and scarcity of liability insurance affect all facets of our society. For the past several months we have heard countless examples of governments, businesses, and professionals being forced to reduce or eliminate services, or go out of business, because they could not find or afford adequate insurance coverage.

It has come to my attention that yet another sector of our economy—the grocery industry—has been hit with insurance problems.

I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD an article from Supermarket News titled "Liability Insurance Rates Skyrocket: NGA Survey," which documents the spread of the insurance availability and affordability crisis to this vital American industry.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Supermarket News, Dec. 16, 1985]

LIABILITY INSURANCE RATES SKYROCKET: NGA SURVEY

(By Jan Greene)

WASHINGTON (FNS).—Liability insurance rates for independents, wholesalers and small chains has been skyrocketing, according to the National Grocers Association. NGA has found a majority of respondents to a member survey have had recent increases in liability insurance rates running 25-500 percent.

The increases are part of a national trend—a crisis, some say—of rapidly increasing insurance rates and canceled policies affecting a range of businesses and even local governments.

NGA is one of 13 industry groups that have formed the Coalition for Insurance Availability, which sponsored a national liability insurance crisis symposium here last week, and which is seeking a Presidential task force to look into the problem.

Supermarket retailers in particular could be hurt by liquor liability problems, according to Richard Bolger, NGA government relations director. He said there reportedly are some cases pending where food retailers may be held liable in court for accidents caused by people who have bought alcohol in their stores. Other lines of insurance with sharp rises in the industry include casualty and property, as well as officers' and directors' insurance for warehouses.

NGA conducted separate surveys of retailers and wholesalers. Of the 161 retailers that responded, 110 said their insurance premiums had gone up 25-500% recently. Of those, 32 said their rates rose 100-300%, with four having hikes of 500% or more. A large number of the latter said their insurance companies attributed the increases to losses in the insurance industry.

Also, almost half the retailers said they had changed insurance companies recently to get a better price.

Of the 20 responding wholesalers, 18 said their premiums had increased substantially, most rising between 25 and 300%. While the insurance crisis has generated a great deal of discussion, few concrete proposals have been developed for either short- or long-term solutions. Some general ideas include tort law reform to reduce huge losses in court and Federal Government monitoring of the insurance industry.

NGA has not decided whether action in Congress is the right way to solve the problem.

"We are looking at a number of things," Bolger said. "It's a big, complex problem that cannot immediately be resolved."

NGA will be working within the coalition and with other groups to propose Congressional hearings and White House-sponsored discussions of the insurance crisis. "Concern will increase more in January and February when peoples' rates really go up," he said.

Explanations for the insurance crisis vary with each different interest group.

Ralph Nader's National Insurance Consumer Organization has charged that the insurance industry is "going on strike to extort excessive rates from the public." And in a recent Senate hearing, a group of state insurance regulators pointed to "ineffective underwriting by a number of insurers," adding that some companies have "ignored sound underwriting practices and opted for cash flow operations."

According to Charles H. Fritzel, assistant vice president for government relations, National Association of Independent Insurers, however, there are other issues. The insurance industry says, "No, something else is at work and the numbers show it. This year, after six months of rate increases, a stable securities market and substantial investment gains, we still chalked up a disturbing operations loss of $2.25 billion."

The culprit, according to insurers, is the legal system in general and trial lawyers in particular.

The Chamber of Commerce cites statistics that the average product liability award has increased from $345,000 to more than $1 million in the last 10 years. In asbestos litigation, of the average $101,000 award or settlement, lawyers received $62,000.

From the legal side, however, it is the insurance industry that needs to do "some house cleaning," said Barry J. Nace, of the Association of Trial Lawyers, during a recent Chamber of Commerce discussion. "The crisis that's being formed, if any, is because of the insurance industry's bad investments. Why penalize the individual who has been hurt?"

1987 U.S. TRAVEL AND TOURISM ADMINISTRATION BUDGET

Mr. PRESSLER. Mr. President, the administration soon will be sending us its fiscal year 1987 budget request. In the past, it has fairly consistently proposed eliminating or disproportionately reducing the budget for the U.S. Travel and Tourism Administration, a small agency within the Department of Commerce. And every year Congress puts the money back. This is another of the annual games of "cat and mouse" we play as part of every budget process.

As chairman of the Senate Business, Trade, and Tourism Subcommittee, I truly hope this year can be different. Tourism is an extremely important segment of our economy and deserves to be recognized as such. It is our second largest retail industry in terms of employment and third largest in terms of gross sales. The $210 billion generated by the industry in 1983 supported 4.6 million jobs. Travel and tourism is one of the three largest employers in 41 States. In 1983, travel and tourism generated $13.8 billion in Federal tax revenues, and $11.5 billion in State and local tax revenues. In that same year, international travel services ranked as the United States' largest services export. We cannot afford to play "cat and mouse" with this kind of industry.

As I have done every year since becoming chairman of the subcommittee, I will be introducing a USTTA authorization bill later this year, after the administration has made its recommendation and after the Senate Travel and Tourism Industry Advisory Council has reviewed the administration's proposal and made its own recommendations by my subcommittee. The Travel and Tourism Industry Advisory Council is comprised of the top 20 men and women from across the Nation involved in the tourism industry. They meet every quarter to discuss issues of concern to the industry and make recommendations to our committee.

The USTTA budget issue is on their agenda for their February 20 meeting, and I will be introducing the USTTA authorization bill shortly after I have had a chance to hear their recommendations and discuss the issue with them. The council has been an important source of information and ideas in the subcommittee's work, and we are indebted to these men and women who dedicate their time to assist us in setting national tourism policy.

I am hopeful we can work with the administration toward a reasonable compromise in this year's USTTA budget. It is extremely important to our economy. USTTA and the tourism industry are an important ingredient in the effort to reduce our international trade deficit. As the President recently acknowledged in a public speech, the tourism industry is one of the few industries with an international trade surplus, and holds great promise in further reducing the trade deficit if we adequately promote this important industry.

In USTTA, under the able leadership of Under Secretary Donna Tuttle, we have the potential to realize that goal. I hope the administration will translate word into actual policy initiatives and budget numbers by providing adequate funding for this small agency in its fiscal year 1987 budget request. I look forward to working with the administration toward an effective tourism trade policy, and toward establishing an effective tourism agency to continue its important task of promoting international travel to the United States.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Messages from the President of the United States were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Saunders, one of his secretaries.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

As in executive session, the Presiding Officer laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations and withdrawals which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(The nominations and withdrawals received today are printed at the end of the Senate proceedings.)

MESSAGES FROM THE HOUSE RECEIVED SUBSEQUENT TO SINE DIE ADJOURNMENT

Under the authority of the order of the Senate of January 3, 1986, the Secretary of the Senate on January 6, 1986, during the sine die adjournment of the Congress received a message from the House of Representatives announcing that pursuant to section 149 of Public Law 99-190, the Speaker designates the following Members of the House to resolve the outstanding conflicts with respect to the future leasing and protection of lands on the California Outer Continental Shelf for oil and gas exploration and development with the Secretary of the Interior: Mr. YATES, Mr. UDALL, Mr. LOWRY of Washington, Mr. PANETTA, Mr. BOSCO, Mrs. BOXER, Mr. LEVINE of California, Mr. REGULA, Mr. LUJAN, Mr. FIELDS, Mr. DANNEMEYER, Mr. LUNGREN, and Mr. LOWERY of California.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS SIGNED

Under the authority of the order of the Senate of January 3, 1985, the Secretary of the Senate, on January 8, 1986, during the sine die adjournment of the Congress, received a message from the House of Representatives announcing that the Speaker had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolutions:

H.R. 1083. An act to amend the Low-Level Radioactive Waste Policy Act to improve procedures for the implementation of compacts providing for the establishment and operation of regional disposal facilities for low-level radioactive waste; to grant the consent of the Congress to certain interstate compacts on low-level radioactive waste; and for other purposes;

H.R. 3384. An act to amend title 5, United States Code, to expand the class of individuals eligible for refunds or other returns of contributions from contingency reserves in the Employees Health Benefits Fund; to make miscellaneous amendments relating to the Civil Service Retirement System and the Federal Employees Health Benefits Program; and for other purposes;

H.J. Res. 187. Joint resolution to approve the "Compact of Free Association", and for other purposes; and

H.J. Res. 440. Joint resolution to designate the week of December 1, 1985, through December 7, 1985, as "National Autism Week".

Under the authority of the order of the Senate of January 3, 1985, the enrolled bills and joint resolutions were signed on January 8, 1986, during the sine die adjournment of the Congress by the President pro tempore [Mr. THURMOND].

MESSAGES FROM THE HOUSE

At 4:07 p.m., a message from the House of Representatives, delivered by Ms. Goetz, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had passed the following bill, in which it requests the concurrence of the Senate:

H.R. 3700. An act to amend and extend the Higher Education Act of 1965.

The message also announced that the House has agreed to the following resolutions:

H. Res. 353. Resolution appointing a committee of the House to join with a committee of the Senate to notify the President that a quorum of each House is assembled and ready to receive any communication that he may be pleased to make; and

H. Res. 354. Resolution notifying the Senate that a quorum of the House is present and that the House is ready to proceed with business.

MEASURES REFERRED

The following bill was read the first and second times by unanimous consent, and referred as indicated:

H.R. 3700: An act to amend and extend the Higher Education Act of 1965; to the Committee on Labor and Human Resources.

EXECUTIVE AND OTHER COMMUNICATIONS

The following communications were laid before the Senate, together with accompanying papers, reports, and documents, which were referred as indicated:

EC-2148. A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting, pursuant to law, a report on his exercise of statutory authority to declare a national emergency with respect to relations with Libya, and the imposition by executive order of certain sanctions and prohibitions; to the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES RECEIVED DURING SINE DIE ADJOURNMENT

Under the authority of the order of the Senate of December 20, 1985, the following reports of committees were submitted on January 8, 1986, during the sine die adjournment of the Congress:

By Mr. PACKWOOD, from the Committee on Finance, with an amendment:

S. 1567. A bill to authorize the Secretary of the Army to construct various projects for improvements to rivers and harbors of the United States, and for other purposes (Rept. No. 99-228).

INTRODUCTION OF BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS

The following bills and joint resolutions were introduced, read the first and second time by unanimous consent, and referred as indicated:

By Mr. PROXMIRE (for himself and Mr. INOUYE):

S. 2001. A bill to amend title XVIII of the Social Security Act to provide for research with respect to the outcomes of specific medical treatments and surgical procedures; to the Committee on Finance.

By Mr. THURMOND (for himself and Mr. HOLLINGS):

S. 2002. A bill to specify that appropriations for the Cooper River seismic modification project in South Carolina be used for such purposes; to the Committee on Environment and Public Works.

By Mr. MOYNIHAN:

S. 2003. A bill to control the precursors of acid rain through the establishment of a program to demonstrate new control technologies and through a program requiring reductions in emissions, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Environment and Public Works.

SUBISSION OF CONCURRENT AND SENATE RESOLUTIONS

The following concurrent resolutions and Senate resolutions were read, and referred (or acted upon), as indicated:

By Mr. DOLE:

S. Res. 295. Resolution informing the President of the United States that a quorum of each House is assembled; considered and agreed to.

By Mr. BYRD:

S. Res. 296. Resolution informing the House of Representatives that a quorum of the Senate is assembled; considered and agreed to.

STATEMENTS ON INTRODUCED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS

By Mr. PROXMIRE (for himself and Mr. INOUYE):

S. 2001. A bill to amend title XVIII of the Social Security Act to provide for research with respect to the outcomes of specific medical treatments and surgical procedures; to the Committee on Finance.

HEALTH OUTCOMES RESEARCH FUND

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, today I am introducing, on behalf of myself and the senior Senator from Hawaii, Mr. INOUYE, legislation to dedicate a very small proportion of the Medicare trust fund—one-fifth of 1 percent—to research into the outcomes of various medical and surgical procedures. In essence, my bill is based on the proposition that we know far too little about the quality of what we are purchasing with our Medicare dollars. I strongly believe that an investment of a small amount of money from the trust fund will produce impressive benefits in the form of improved treatment for our senior citizens at a substantially reduced cost.

Let me give you some idea of what I mean. In the fall of 1984 the Labor-HHS-Education Appropriations Subcommittee held a morning hearing on a little known but immensely important subject called variations in medical practice patterns. Our primary witness at that hearing was Dr. Jack Wennberg, a leader in the study of these variations, who testified that if low-cost patterns of practice were the norm, we would not be facing a Medicare funding crisis nor would we be concerned with the question of rationing medical health care.

Just what are these so-called low-cost patterns of practice? Dr. Wennberg's studies have shown that from county to county within a single State there are huge swings in the use of most surgical procedures. For example, in one area of Maine, by the time a woman reaches the age of 70, the likelihood that she will have undergone a hysterectomy is 70 percent, while in another area that likelihood is only 25 percent. In Iowa, the chances of a man who reaches the age of 85 having undergone a prostatectomy range from a low of 15 percent to a high of more than 50 percent, depending on the hospital market he lives in. Of course, the high surgery areas cost both the Federal Government and the patients who live in those areas a great deal of money. In fact, over the long haul all Medicare patients receiving medical insurance benefits under the program have to pay part of the costs of high surgery rates through increased part B premiums. Finally more surgery exposes more patients to the increased risks that come with hospitalization.

But what is the proper way to practice medicine when it comes to diseases of the uterus, prostate, and many other organs? Should the standard be "when in doubt, cut it out," or is there a better, more sophisticated way of dealing with these diseases? The truth of the matter is we simply do not have enough information to either praise the doctor who tends to recommend against certain kinds of surgery, or applaud the doctor who favors operating in most circumstances. And that is precisely why the legislation I am introducing today is badly needed. Without understanding how patients who have undergone surgery fare as compared with others treated more conservatively, the medical profession is in no position to make the best choice. My bill would fund research into the efficacy of various types of medical practice patterns—the outcome studies I mentioned at the beginning of this statement.

Let me quickly add that the money made available by my legislation would not be targeted only at studies that compare a surgical approach with a nonsurgical method of treatment. Far from it. The words "outcome studies" cover a multitude of medical practices. For example, this might be the time to look into the value of periodic examinations of the kind the President underwent prior to his surgery for intestinal cancer. Does it make sense to suggest that everyone over 50 should have a thorough sigmoidoscopy every year, or every 3 years, or every 5 years? Should an attending physician be suggesting more frequent examinations after the age of 55 or 60? We do not have the answers but a thorough outcome study that would tell us how many intestinal cancers would be caught in their early stages by various examination protocols would give us those answers and save a great deal of money in the treatment of this particularly common form of cancer in the bargain.

Another area that could profit from the investment of some outcome study dollars is the question of optimum hospital stay times. With the advent of the prospective payment system a premium has been placed on discharging patients from hospitals as soon as possible. This has apparently led to some abuses and we are going to be faced with an increasing number of complaints that hospitals are unfeelingly kicking patients out the door before they are on the mend in order to maximize hospital income. Well designed studies on the effect hospital discharge policies have on the outcome of various illnesses could shed helpful light on this issue and dissipate some of the heat generated by the absence of hard data.

Outcome research also should help us to move some medical and surgical procedures from the hospital to outpatient settings such as surgicenters and doctors' offices. Solid outcome research could tell us whether patients do as well, or possibly even better, if they are spared a stay in the hospital. We know their pocketbooks and the Federal Treasury will be a little healthier, but we should also know that patients are being properly counseled when they are advised to have surgery on an ambulatory basis.

It might be argued that ample authority to do the kind of research I have mentioned today already exists. Certainly the National Institutes of Health have a broad mandate to conduct biomedical research and a few exemplary outcome studies, such as the Heart, Lung and Blood Institute's study on coronary bypass surgery, have been done. But the Institutes are primarily concerned with basic biomedical research and rightly so. They have very little interest in looking into procedures that have been common medical practice for 20, 30 or 40 years to determine the conditions under which those procedures are indicated. The Health Care Financing Administration conducts research into service delivery questions having to do with beneficiary access, new reimbursement schemes and program management approaches, but this kind of research has relatively little to do with outcome studies.

The National Center for Health Services Research and Health Care Technology Assessment has a role to play in this area, which is why the funding provided by my bill is funneled into the Center, but their current budget allows them to fund, at most, one modest outcome based quality of care study each year and is devoted in large part to such topics as health promotion and disease prevention, the role of market forces in the health care delivery system the organization of health services, and the assessment of new technology.

Some might question the use of Medicare trust funds to deal with medical conditions that are not unique to our senior citizens. However, the legislation I am introducing today makes it clear that in selecting medical and surgical procedures for study, priority would be given to those that are significant for the Medicare population in terms of cost, risk, frequency, and length of hospitalization. There are many surgical procedures that could qualify including cataract surgery, prostatectomies, carotid endarterectomies, and a host of major genito-urinary tract operations. Of course, there are also many medical questions that are ripe for study such as hosptial stay times and the use of certain diagnostic procedures. Furthermore, I am convinced that this investment will save the Medicare trust fund far more than it will cost by reducing unnecessary hospitalizations and establishing the appropriateness of conservative methods of treatment for any number of conditions.

The bill I am introducing today would provide start up funds of $3 million in 1987 and then would earmark approximately $160 million a year—one-fifth of 1 percent of Medicare's hospital insurance trust fund—for the next 3 years of the program, increasing the percentage payment to two-fifths of the 1 percent after this initial start-up period. As I indicated earlier, the funds would be used to study the outcomes of procedures that have a significant impact on Medicare beneficiaries. At least 90 percent of the funds would be available for grants and cooperative agreements with non-Federal organizations. The legislation makes it clear that grant applications would be reviewed by technically competent peer review panels. The bill would establish a National Advisory Commission to provide advice on the conduct of the program, which would be administered by the National Center for Health Services Research and Health Care Technology Assessment. Finally, data derived from the Medicare Program as well as other federally gathered health data would be made available to approved research projects under my proposed program.

Mr. President, I'm convinced that this legislation will save both money and lives by sharpening the Nation's focus on the most efficacious methods of delivering medical care to our senior citizens. For the first time, we will be able to understand just what we are purchasing with our Medicare dollars and save a substantial number of those dollars in the process. I hope many of my colleagues will join me in sponsoring this legislation so we can work together to make a vigorous program of outcome research a reality.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the text of the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2001

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That (a) section 1875 of the Social Security Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(c)(1) The Secretary shall establish a program to provide for research with respect to patient outcomes of selected medical treatments and surgical procedures for the purpose of assessing their quality and effectiveness. In selecting treatments and procedures to be studied, the Secretary shall give priority to those medical and surgical treatments and procedures—

"(A) for which data indicates a highly variable pattern of utilization among beneficiaries under this title in different geographic areas; and

"(B) which are significant for purposes of this title in terms of utilization by beneficiaries, length of hospitalization, costs to the program, and risk involved to the beneficiary.

"(2)(A) For purposes of carrying out the research program under this subsection, there shall be available from the Federal Hospital Insurance Trust Fund—

"(i) for fiscal year 1987, $3,000,000;

"(ii) for each of the fiscal years 1988, 1989, and 1990, amounts equal to one-fifth of 1 percent of the receipts of such Trust Fund for such fiscal year; and

"(iii) for each of the fiscal years 1991, 1992, and 1993, amounts equal to two-fifths of 1 percent of the receipts of such Trust Fund for such fiscal year.

"(B) There are authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary to fund the entitlement established under subparagraph (A).

"(3) Not less than 90 percent of the amount available for any fiscal year shall be used to fund grants to, and cooperative agreements with, non-Federal entities to conduct research described in paragraph (1). The remainder may be used by the Secretary to provide for such research by Federal entities and for administrative costs.

"(4) The research program shall be administered by the National Center for Health Services Research and Health Care Technology established under section 305 of the Public Health Service Act (hereafter in this subsection referred to as the 'Center'). The Center shall establish application procedures for grants and cooperative agreements, and shall establish peer review panels to review all such applications and all research findings.

"(5) The Secretary shall make available data derived from the programs under this title and other programs administered by the Secretary for use in the research program.

"(6)(A) The Secretary shall appoint a National Advisory Council (hereafter in this subsection referred to as the 'Council') to advise the Secretary and the Center with respect to the research program.

"(B) The Council shall consist of—

"(i) the Director of the National Institutes of Health, the Chief Medical Director of the Veterans' Administration, the Assistant Secretary for Health and Environment of the Department of Defense, the head of the Centers for Disease Control, the head of the Health Care Financing Administration, the director of the Office of Personnel Management, and such other Federal officials as the Secretary may specify, who shall be ex officio members; and

"(ii) 12 voting members appointed by the Secretary.

"(C) The Secretary shall make appointments to the Council as follows:

"(i) The Secretary shall appoint 9 members of the Council from individuals who are distinguished in the fields of medicine, epidemiology, biostatistics, clinical decisions analysis, and the behavioral sciences. Of the members appointed under this clause—

"(I) at least 3 shall be physicians;

"(II) 1 shall be selected from individuals who represent organizations involved in medical peer review;

"(III) 1 shall be selected from individuals who represent hospital administrators; and

"(IV) 1 shall be selected from individuals who represent health insurance companies or self-insured employers.

"(ii) The Secretary shall appoint 3 members of the Council from members of the general public, at least one of whom represents beneficiaries under this title.

"(D)(i) Each appointed member of the Council shall be appointed for a term of 3 years, except that—

"(I) any member appointed to fill a vacancy occuring prior to the expiration of the term for which his predecessor was appointed shall be appointed for the remainder of such term; and

"(II) of the members first appointed, 4 shall be appointed for a term of 3 years, 4 shall be appointed for a term of 2 years, and 4 shall be appointed for a term of 1 year, as designated by the Secretary at the time of appointment.

Appointed members may be appointed for additional terms and may serve after the expiration of their terms until their successors have taken office.

"(ii) Members of the Council who are not officers or employees of the United States shall receive for each day they are engaged in the performance of the functions of the Council compensation at rates not to exceed the daily equivalent of the annual rate in effect for grade GS-18 of the General Schedule, including traveltime. All members, while so serving away from their homes or regular places of business, may be allowed travel expenses, including per diem in lieu of subsistence, in the same manner as such expenses are authorized by section 5703 of title 5, United States Code, for persons in the Government service employed intermittently.

"(E) The Council shall annually elect one of its appointed members to serve as Chairman until the next election.

"(F) The Council shall meet at the call of the Chairman, but not less often than 3 times a year.

"(G) The Director of the Center shall designate a member of the staff of the Center to act as Executive Secretary of the Council, and make available to the Council such staff, information, and other assistance as the Council may require.".

(b) Section 1862(a)(1) of such Act is amended—

(1) by striking out "and" at the end of subparagraph (C);

(2) by striking out the semicolon at the end of subparagraph (D) and inserting in lieu thereof ", and"; and

(3) by adding at the end thereof the following new subparagraph:

"(E) in the case of research conducted pursuant to section 1875(c), which is not reasonable and necessary to carry out the purposes of such section;".

● Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, I am pleased to cosponsor legislation being offered today by my colleague, Senator WILLIAM PROXMIRE, who has been serving admirably as the ranking member of the Senate Labor-HHS-Education Appropriations Subcommittee for the past several years.

The proposal which we are introducing would direct that a small, but significant, proportion of the Medicare Trust Fund be specifically allocated for outcome-related research activities. This proposal grew out of the special hearings held by the subcommittee in November 1984. At that time, we received testimony describing the extent to which various health care practitioners apparently treat very similar, if not identical, illnesses in quite different manners, depending upon their theoretical orientation and their geographical location.

In the mental health area this difference in orientation is especially significant. Dr. Charles Kiesler of the American Psychological Association pointed out during the hearings that "Traditional inpatient care for mental disorders is neither the most effective nor the most cost-effective method of treatment." He went on to state that, after a review of various studies, "In no case has mental hospitalization produced better treatment outcomes than any alternative care. In every study, differences favored the alternative care rather than mental hospitalization, in terms of psychiatric symptomatology, rating by family, probability of being able to locate or maintain a job, subsequent hospitalization, and the like. In every case where there has been systematic calculation, the alternative care was less expensive".

Mr. President, the most recent statistics I have received from the Department of Defense CHAMPUS Program indicate that approximately 72.7 percent of its total mental health expenditures are for inpatient care. Dr. Kiesler pointed out that presently 25 percent of all hospital inpatient days in our Nation are for mental disorders. I think all of us can readily see the very significant cost-savings potential of ensuring that the most effective and cost-efficient treatment is given priority.

Mr. President, during the 96th Congress a number of us attempted to have a proposal enacted into public law which, at that time, was commonly known within the mental health field as the "Efficacy Amendment". Essentially, under that proposal, Medicare and Medicaid would only provide reimbursement for those mental health services which were deemed to be safe, effective, and appropriate. At that time, we proposed to allocate $20 million of trust fund moneys so that the experts in the mental health field could conduct appropriate studies to determine what types of therapies, and under what conditions, would meet this very straightforward test of accountability.

It is my hope that the proposal which we are introducing today will represent the next step in our effort to ensure that the citizens of our Nation can be assured that they are receiving appropriate and quality mental health care.●

By Mr. THURMOND (for himself and Mr. HOLLINGS):

S. 2002. A bill to specify that appropriations for the Cooper River seismic modification project in South Carolina be used for such purpose; to the Committee on Environment and Public Works.

COOPER RIVER SEISMIC MODIFICATION PROJECT

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, together with my distinguished colleague, Senator HOLLINGS, I am today introducing legislation which would require the Army Corps of Engineers to allocate money previously appropriated by Congress for the Cooper River seismic modification project in South Carolina. Mr. President, it is unfortunate that introduction of this legislation is necessary. However, recent Office of Management and Budget [OMB] actions have made it necessary.

Under the fiscal year 1986 energy and water development appropriations bill (Public Law 99-141), funds for general construction projects of the Civil Division of the Army Corps of Engineers were specifically appropriated for the Cooper River seismic modification project in South Carolina. This is a project authorized by Public Law 98-63. It is intended to minimize downstream damage likely to result from an earthquake-induced failure of the Pinopolis West Dam.

It has now come to our attention that OMB has ordered the corps not to allocate the funds as directed by Congress in the conference report accompanying the energy and water resource appropriations bill.

Mr. President, the action of the OMB in directing that the corps not allocate these funds for the Cooper River seismic modification project can only be considered an effort to frustrate and circumvent the express will and intention of Congress in appropriating these moneys. This action raises serious public policy and constitutional concerns.

Mr. President, Congress has decided to appropriate these funds. It is not the function of OMB to second guess the will of Congress. Therefore, I urge my colleagues to support the swift adoption of this measure.

By Mr. MOYNIHAN:

S. 2003. A bill to control the precursors of acid rain through the establishment of a program to demonstrate new control technologies and through a program requiring reductions in emissions, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Environment and Public Works.

ACID RAIN CONTROL ACT

● Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, I rise today, the first day of the second session of this Congress, to introduce legislation to address a matter of importance to my State of New York and the entire Nation; acid rain.

Much has changed since I introduced the first—the only—acid rain legislation to become law, the Acid Precipitation Act of 1980.

I have said many times since we passed that law that I do not believe it would have been approved at all, had we known then what we now do about the dimensions of the problem.

We did pass it, the President signed it, and we now know a great deal. We know that man, not nature is the primary source of sulfur emissions in the United States. We know that sulfur emissions from utility stacks and smelters can travel thousands of miles and change the chemistry of rainfall at great distances. We know that some lakes are particularly sensitive to such emissions, and that the changes these emissions bring can kill fish. We have a great deal of information suggesting that the economic cost of damage to paint, buildings, and public monuments can be substantial—and we are very, very worried about the trees; with cause.

This administration has steadfastly maintained that it would consider controls on the emissions that cause acid rain, once we learned enough to be confident that such controls were necessary.

Mr. President, last March—St. Patrick's Day—President Reagan met with Prime Minister Brian Mulroney of Canada, at what has become known as the shamrock summit. Now, acid rain is a highly sensitive matter to the Canadians, because they are well aware that we produce most of the emissions that fall as acid rain in Canada. Many here urged President Reagan to produce substantive action on acid rain at that time; indeed I wrote him at the time with several suggestions.

Little action was taken, but the President did appoint a well-regarded envoy, Mr. Drew Lewis, to research this issue. And here are the findings of the President's envoy:

> Acid rain is a serious environmental problem in both the United States and Canada.
>
> Acid rain is a serious transboundary problem.
> At the present time, there are only a limited number of potential avenues for achieving major reductions in acidic air emissions.

Mr. President, Mr. Lewis is quite right, and President Reagan would do well to be guided by him; as should we all.

Mr. President, the bill I introduce today incorporates his findings and recommendations. It would establish a joint program with industry to develop new technologies for controlling acid rain and to reduce the costs of implementing existing control technologies. The President's envoy was quite specific about how this should be done—$500 million a year for 5 years from the Federal Government, and a like amount from industry, to fund demonstrations that would help us achieve the greatest reductions, as rapidly as possible, with technologies that permit the clean use of high-sulfur coal.

Mr. Lewis also called for greater bilateral communication between the United States and Canada; this bill includes such. And he called for a Cabinet-level panel to oversee the new Technology Demonstration Program. My bill includes this, too, a "Panel on Acid Rain Technology." I have named it so to make absolutely clear—and Mr. Lewis' findings leave no doubt—that improving technology is only part of the answer for acid rain.

The rest of the answer is a firm, comprehensive program for specific reductions in emissions of sulfur and nitrogen oxides. My bill includes this as well, by incorporating the substance of the Environment and Public Works Committee's acid rain bill, S. 52. I have been proud to be a cosponsor of Senator STAFFORD's bill in the past; I offer it again here in the context of the recommendations to President Reagan from his own envoy that he do something now to reduce acid rain.

Mr. President, the report of President Reagan's envoy has changed the terms of the acid rain debate. No longer need we debate whether the time has come to do something about acid rain. Now we must turn to crafting the best program we can to address the problem.

I ask unanimous consent that the text of the legislation be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2003

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the Uinted States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "Acid Rain Control Act of 1986".

TITLE I—CONTROL TECHNOLOGY DEVELOPMENT PROGRAM

SEC. 101. This title may be cited as the "Acid Precipitation Act Amendments of 1986".

SEC. 102. The Acid Precipitation Act of 1980 (Title VII of Public Law 96-294) is amended by adding after section 706 the following new section:

"RESEARCH AND DEMONSTRATION PROGRAM

"SEC. 707. (a)(1) The Congress finds that—

"(A) acid rain is a serious environmental problem in both the United States and Canada;

"(B) acid rain is a serious transboundary problem;

"(C) at the present time, there are only a limited number of potential avenues for achieving major reductions in acidic air emissions; and

"(D) there is a need both to broaden the range of options currently available for control of acidic air emissions and to reduce their costs as mandatory emission reductions are imposed.

"(2) The purposes of this section are to—

"(A) expand the scale of research activities designed to develop new technologies for commercial application in the near term for the reduction of acidic air emissions and to reduce the costs and improve the effectiveness of existing technologies;

"(B) augment existing bilateral research and consultative arrangements with the Government of Canada on acid rain; and

"(C) establish a commercial technology demonstration program to be funded jointly by industry and the Federal Government, to be targeted toward demonstration that both advance current knowledge and make maximal reductions in U.S. acidic air emissions.

"(b)(1) The President shall appoint the head of a department of cabinet rank to head an oversight panel for the research demonstration program under this section and to select the projects to be co-funded by the Federal Government. The panel shall be known as the "Panel on Acid Rain Technology". The Environmental Protection Agency, the Department of Energy, and the members and staff of the Acid Precipitation Task Force shall provide the panel with technical assistance necessary to select demonstration projects. The President shall include as members of the Panel officials from the Department of State and from State governments, and shall invite the Government of Canada to send a representative to sit on the panel.

"(2) The Panel shall make annual reports to the Congress detailing projects receiving support, knowledge gained, efficiencies obtained, and emissions removed or avoided.

"(c) Control technologies eligible for partial Federal funding under this section include those that may be expected to eliminate substantial portions of sulfur dioxide or nitrogen oxide emissions from either new or existing sources in applications of commercial scale. Projects with projected sulfur dioxide reductions of less than 55 percentum are not considered to offer substantial reductions for the purposes of this section.

"(d) Proposals for projects to be funded under this section must include a technical description of the nature of the project, the size or anticipated emission reductions, and a financial plan detailing the source or sources and amount of industry support.

"(e) The Federal share of project costs may be established on a project-by-project basis by the Panel. In no case shall the Federal Government assume more than 65 percent of the costs of any individual project.

"(f) The Panel shall report to the Congress 60 days prior to approving any project if the Federal share for such a project is $100,000,000 or greater.

"(g) The Panel shall evaluate proposals for the use of Federal funds under this section on the basis of the following criteria:

"(1) Projects should be chosen that have the potential for largest emissions reductions, measured as a percentage of sulfur dioxide or oxides of nitrogen removed.

"(2) Among projects with similar potential, Federal funding should go to those that reduce emissions at the smallest cost per ton.

"(3) More consideration should be given to projects that demonstrate retrofit technologies applicable to the largest number of existing sources, especially existing sources that, because of their size and location, contribute to transboundary air pollution.

"(4) Special consideration should be given to technologies that can be applied to facilities currently dependent on the use of high-sulfur coal.

"(h) The Joint Chairmen of the Acid Precipitation Task Force shall establish a bilateral advisory and consultative group on transboundary air pollution together with appropriate officials of the Canadian government to provide a forum for ongoing discussion, and to provide advice to the members of the Task Force, the Secretary of State, the President, and the Congress.

"(i) There are authorized to be appropriated, in addition to sums appropriated to the Department of Energy for clean coal technology under Public Law 99-190, $500,000,000 for the purpose of meeting the Federal share of project costs for demonstration control projects described in this section in each of the fiscal years 1987 through 1991, to remain available until expended." Sec. 103(a) Section 704(c)(4) of the Acid Precipitation Act of 1980 is amended by inserting "primary" before "basis."

(b) Section 704 of such Act is amended by inserting the following subsection after (c), and redesignating subsections (d) through (f) as subsections (e) through (g):

"(d) The following shall be considered a secondary basis on which requests for authorizations and appropriations may be made for the fiscal years 1987 through 1991, in addition to the requests made on the basis of the comprehensive plan, and represent research areas that the Congress believes are deserving of additional attention:

"(1) Developing improved methods for monitoring the dry deposition of acidic particles, and implementation of a dry deposition monitoring network sufficient to serve the entire North American continent.

"(2) Acquiring additional process-level data from differing watershed types to aid in determining current and potential effects of acid deposition on surface waters in the future; developing and empirically testing models for predicting watershed response to acid deposition; and developing an adequate acid deposition data base on watershed characteristics to exercise the models for selected North American sensitive areas.

"(3) Pursuing further research on surface water acidification, emphasizing quantification of the relationships between changes in surface water chemistry and both rates and types of changes in aquatic biota.

"(4) Accelerating ongoing research into the potential links between forest decline and acid rain as a causal or contributing factor.

"(5) Devoting increased attention to the effects of acid rain on materials, and improving the quantification of current damage, resources at risk, and the prognosis for future damage.

"(6) Investigating further the mobilization, transport and flux of heavy metals, including but not limited to lead, mercury, cadmium and arsenic, in acidified surface waters, with additional attention to the role of these metals in aquatic and forest damage and special emphasis on possible effects on human health and possible mitigation strategies.

TITLE II—EMISSION REDUCTION PROGRAM

INTERSTATE TRANSPORT AND ACID PRECURSOR REDUCTION

SEC. 201. Title I of the Clean Air Act is amended by adding the following new part:

"PART E—INTERSTATE TRANSPORT AND ACID PRECURSOR REDUCTION

"FINDINGS AND PURPOSES

"SEC. 180. (a) The Congress finds that—

"(1) the long-range transport of pollutants and their transformation products is an interstate and international problem;

"(2) current levels of emissions of air pollutants from existing sources as well as increased emissions from new and existing sources threaten public health and welfare and the environment in States and countries other than those in which emitted;

"(3) reduction of total regional atmospheric loading of pollutants such as sulfur oxides and nitrogen oxides will enhance protection of public health and welfare and the environment;

"(4) more effective regulation of the interstate transport of air pollutants is needed in order to protect the health and welfare of the citizens of downwind States and the economic growth opportunities of downwind States; and

"(5) in particular,

"(A) the deposition of acid compounds from the atmosphere is causing and contributing to widespread long-term ecosystem degradation;

"(B) the principal source of the acid compounds in the atmosphere, and their precursors, is the combustion of fossil fuels;

"(C) the problem of acid deposition is of national and international significance and cannot be addressed adequately without Federal intervention;

"(D) control strategies and technology for precursors to acid deposition exist now that are economically feasible; and

"(E) current and future generations of Americans will be more adversely affected by delayed action, so that efforts to remedy the problem should commence now.

"(b) The purposes of this part are to—

"(1) protect public health and welfare and the environment from any actual or potential adverse effect caused by ambient concentrations or deposition of air pollutants, including the products of atmospheric transformation of pollutants; and

"(2) preserve the rights and responsibilities of States to protect the public health and welfare and the environment of their citizens from air pollution originating in other States.

"ESTABLISHMENT OF REGION

"SEC. 181. There is hereby established a long-range transport corridor, hereafter referred to as the 'acid deposition impact region,' consisting of the States of Alabama, Arkansas, Connecticut, Delaware, Florida, Georgia, Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Kentucky, Louisiana, Maine, Maryland, Massachusetts, Michigan, Minnesota, Mississippi, Missouri, New Hampshire, New Jersey, New York, North Carolina, Ohio, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, South Carolina, Tennessee, Vermont, Virginia, West Virginia, Wisconsin, and the District of Columbia.

"RESEARCH AND SPECIAL STUDIES

"SEC. 182. (a) The Administrator shall conduct a study of air pollution problems associated with the long-range transport of pollutants in the portions of the continental United States not included in section 181. Not later than two years after the enactment of this section, the Administrator shall report to the Congress the results of such study.

"(b)(1) The Acid Precipitation Task Force established under title VII of the Energy Security Act (Public Law 96-294) shall submit to the Committee on Environment and Public Works of the United States Senate and the Committee on Energy and Commerce of the United States House of Representatives, two comprehensive reports, one by December 31, 1985, and one by December 31, 1987, which shall present the findings of the research conducted under section 704(b) of such Act, including recommendations, based upon existing scientific knowledge, for reducing acid deposition and its effects.

"(2) In addition to any other funds authorized to be appropriated for the Acid Precipitation Task Force for the purposes of carrying out the activities required by section 704 of title VII of the Energy Security Act, there are authorized to be appropriated $10,000,000 in each of the fiscal years 1985, 1986, 1987, 1988, and 1989.

"(c) The Task Force established by title VII of the Energy Security Act shall also conduct and support research on advanced flue-gas cleaning and precombustion fuel treatment technologies and inherently low-emission combustion processes (including atmospheric and pressurized fluidized bed combustion).

"(d)(1) Not later than six months after enactment of this section there shall be established an Acid Precipitation Scientific Review Board with not more than 15 members who shall be appointed by the National Academy of Sciences.

"(2) The Board shall examine and consider all available information regarding the causes, extent and potential environmental impacts of acid deposition, including a review of all the activities being performed by the Acid Precipitation Task Force under section 704(b) of the Energy Security Act.

"(3) The Board shall submit to the Committee on Environment and Public Works of the United States Senate and the Committee on Energy and Commerce of the United States House of Representatives at least two comprehensive reports, one not later than June 30, 1986, and one not later than June 30, 1988, on the results of its examination undertaken in accordance with paragraph (2), including a review of the report(s) submitted to the Committees of Congress by the Task Force as required by subsection (b)(1) of this section, together with the Board's own recommendations for reducing acid deposition and its effects.

"(4) There are authorized to be appropriated $1,000,000 for each of fiscal years 1985 through 1988, for the purposes of carrying out the activities required by this subsection.

"(e)(1) Promptly after the date established by section 185, the Administrator shall submit to the Committee on Environment and Public Works of the United States Senate and the Committee on Energy and Commerce of the United States House of Representatives a report describing the emission limitation and other enforceable measures adopted by the States and approved by the Administrator under section 184(b) or in effect under section 185, for all States in the acid deposition impact region established by section 181.

"(2) The Office of Technology Assessment shall analyze the environmental benefits to be gained through the implementation of the control requirements described by the Administrator in accordance with paragraph (1) of this subsection, the costs of implementing such control requirements, and any potential effects on coal production or markets of implementing such control requirements, on both an aggregate regional and a State-by-State basis. The Office of Technology Assessment shall report its findings to the Committee on Environment and Public Works of the United States Senate and the Committee on Energy and Commerce of the United States House of Representatives no later than six months after the submission of the report required in paragraph (1).

"(f) Upon receipt of the reports required by subsections (b)(1), (d), (e)(1), and (e)(2), the Committee on Environment and Public Works of the United States Senate and the Committee on Energy and Commerce of the United States House of Representatives shall conduct hearings on the matters contained in such reports and take such other action as each such committee deems appropriate.

"(g) The Administrator shall develop an inventory of sources of oxides of nitrogen in the acid deposition impact region established by section 181 and in each State thereof. Not later than four years after enactment of this part the Administrator shall report to the Committee on Environment and Public Works of the United States Senate and the Committee on Energy and Commerce of the United States House of Representatives on (1) the inventory of sources of oxides of nitrogen developed under this subsection, (2) control technology and methods for new and existing sources for oxides of nitrogen, and (3) any recommendations for requirements to reduce existing emissions or control new emissions of oxides of nitrogen to reduce acid deposition.

"(h) The Administrator and the Secretary of the Treasury shall jointly conduct a study of the potential for a system of fees on the generation of electrical energy in the acid deposition impact region established by section 181, to be used to finance the reductions in emissions required by this part, including the equitable distribution of the funds resulting from such fees. A report of such study shall be submitted to the Congress not later than six months after submittal of the report required by subsection (e)(1) of this section.

"(i)(1) The Administrator is authorized to conduct or make grants to any State or interstate agency for the purposes of conducting the development, refinement and practical demonstration of new, improved, or innovative methods of neutralizing or restoring the buffering capacity of acid altered bodies of water that no longer can support game fish species; and methods of removing from bodies of water toxic metals or other toxic substances mobilized by acid deposition, and to include in such grants such amounts as necessary for the purpose of reports, plans and specifications in connection therewith.

"(2) Grants under this subsection shall not be made for any project in an amount exceeding 75 per centum of the costs thereof as determined by the Administrator.

"(3) Grants under this subsection shall not be made for any project that involves bodies of water that did not contain game fish as established by State law prior to 1970.

"(4) For the purposes of this subsection there are hereby authorized to be appropriated $5,000,000 for each of the fiscal years 1985, 1986, and 1987.

"ACID PRECURSOR CONTROLS

"SEC. 183. (a) There shall be achieved a reduction in annual emissions of sulfur dioxide in the acid deposition impact region established under section 181 of this Act of ten million tons from the total actual annual level of such emissions between January 1, 1980, and December 31, 1980. Such reduction shall be achieved pursuant to a phased reduction and completed no later than January 1, 1994.

"(b)(1) Emissions of sulfur dioxide from major stationary sources which did not begin operation before January 1, 1981, or which have increased emissions since January 1, 1981 (to the extent of such increase), calculated on an annual basis, shall be added to the amount of sulfur dioxide which the State in which such sources are located is required to reduce not later than January 1, 1994, under 184(a).

"(2)(A) Such emissions shall not be so added in any State which during 1980 had no major stationary source which was a utility boiler which had an actual annual average emission rate greater than 1.2 pounds of sulfur dioxide per million British thermal units of heat input.

"(B) Increases in emissions of sulfur dioxide from utility boilers which are coal capable as defined under section 301(a) of the Fuel Use Act and which convert to the use of coal as a primary fuel shall be so added only to the extent such emissions from a particular source exceed 1.5 pounds of sulfur dioxide per million British thermal units of heat input on an annual average.

"(c) Other than as provided in subsection (b)(2)(B), no major stationary source in such region which began operation before January 1, 1981, shall increase its actual rate of emissions of sulfur dioxide over that experienced by such source during calendar year 1980, unless there has been identified for such source a simultaneous net reduction in emissions of sulfur dioxide at one or more points in such region—

"(1) in excess of the emissions which potentially would result from the proposed increase in emission rate, and

"(2) not otherwise required by a State implementation plan under section 110 of this Act or under section 184 or 185 of this part.

This subsection shall not apply to increases in actual rates of emissions of sulfur dioxide from sources in any State in which for each major stationary source of sulfur dioxide which was a utility boiler the emission limitation in effect under an applicable implementation plan at the time of such increases is less than or equal to 1.2 pounds of sulfur dioxide per million British thermal units of heat input on an annual average.

"(d) No major stationary source of sulfur dioxide shall commence operation after January 1, 1994, in such region unless there has been identified for such source a simultaneous net reduction in emissions of sulfur dioxide at one or more points in such region—

"(1) in excess of the emissions which potentially would result from the proposed new source, and

"(2) not otherwise required by a State implementation plan under section 110 of this Act or under section 184 or 185 of this part.

This subsection shall not apply to any major stationary source which adopts the best available control technology, as defined in section 169(3) or 171(3) as appropriate for the location of the proposed new source, and which attains at least the most stringent emission limitation shown by an adequate operating history to have been achieved in practice by a major stationary source of the same size, type, and class within the region established under section 181 of this Act.

"(e) No major stationary source of oxides of nitrogen in such region which began operation before January 1, 1981, shall increase its actual rate of emissions of oxides of nitrogen as measured in pounds of oxides of nitrogen per million British thermal units of heat input over the greater of that experienced by such source during calendar year 1980, or during the thirty-day period (excluding days on which such source did not operate) immediately preceeding the date of enactment of this subsection, unless there has been identified for such source a simultaneous net reduction in emissions of oxides of nitrogen at one or more points in such region—

"(1) in excess of the emissions which potentially would result from the proposed increase in emission rate, and

"(2) not otherwise required by a State implementation plan under section 110 of this Act.

The preceding sentence shall not apply to emissions of oxides of nitrogen from utility boilers which are coal capable as defined under section 301(a) of the Fuel Use Act and which convert to the use of coal as a primary fuel.

"STATE SULFUR DIOXIDE REDUCTION REQUIREMENTS

"SEC. 184. (a)(1) Each State shall be required to achieve within its borders a reduction in annual sulfur dioxide emissions equal to that fraction of ten million tons which is the ratio of all the actual utility emissions in such State in excess of 1.2 pounds of sulfur dioxide per million British thermal units of heat input averaged over the period January 1, 1980, to December 31, 1980, to the total in all States in the region of all the actual utility emissions in excess of 1.2 pounds of sulfur dioxide per million British thermal units of heat input averaged over such period.

"(2) The Governors of any two or more States within the region may by agreement reallot among agreeing States the reductions required under subsection (a)(1): Provided, That the total reductions equal the total required under subsection (a)(1).

"(b)(1) Not later than twenty-four months after the enactment of this part, each State shall adopt enforceable measures to achieve the reduction in sulfur dioxide emissions required by subsection (a) of this section, including emission limitations and schedules for compliance for sources within such State and other means of emission reduction in accordance with section 186 of this Act. The Governor of such State shall submit such measures to the Administrator for review in accordance with paragraph (2) of this subsection and section 110(a)(3), and to the Governors of all other States in the acid deposition impact region for comment.

"(2) Review and approval of measures submitted under this subsection shall be as provided in section 110(a)(3). The Administrator shall approve such measures submitted under paragraph (1) of this subsection if, taking into consideration the comments of Governors of other States in such region, the Administrator finds that such measures—

"(A) contain enforceable requirements for continuous emission reduction,

"(B) contain requirements for monitoring by the source and enforcement agencies to assure that the emission limitations are being met, and

"(C) are adequate to achieve the reduction in sulfur dioxide emissions for such State required pursuant to subsection (a) of this section within the time specified in section 183(a) of this Act.

"(3) Not later than thirty-six months after the enactment of this part, each major stationary source subject to an emission limitation established under this subsection shall notify the Governor of the State in which it is located of its intended method of compliance. The Governor shall submit such notifications to the Administrator.

"(4)(A) Not later than sixty months after the enactment of this part, each major stationary source which pursuant to the requirements of this subsection states that it will comply with an emission limitation through the use of fuel substitution shall be in compliance with such emission limitation.

"(B) Not later than sixty months after the date of enactment of this part, each major stationary source which pursuant to this subsection states that it will comply with an emission limitation established under this subsection through the installation of a technological system of continuous emission reduction or the replacement of existing facilities with new facilities with substantially lower emissions, or any other means except fuel switching, shall enter into binding contractual commitments to acquire, install, or construct such system or facilities.

"(5) Each emission limitation, schedule for compliance or other measure adopted and approved under this subsection shall be deemed a requirement of the State implementation plan approved or promulgated for such State under section 110 of this Act.

"(6) In the case of any major stationary source in a State listed in section 181, which is not by December 31, 1985, in full compliance with the applicable implementation plan for sulfur dioxide in effect on January 1, 1981, the owner or operator of such source shall be subject to:

"(A) the emission limitation established by section 185 for all facilities in such State owned or operated by such owner or operator, and

"(B) a noncompliance penalty established under section 120 for each such source or facility, including each electric generating facility, for the period from the original date for compliance under the applicable implementation plan until actual compliance with the emission limitation established under this paragraph.

"MAJOR STATIONARY SOURCE SULFUR DIOXIDE REDUCTION REQUIREMENTS

"SEC. 185. In any State in the acid deposition impact region established by section 181 of the Act which has not in accordance with section 184(b)(1) of this Act adopted measures to achieve the reduction required by section 184(a) of this Act within twenty-four months after enactment of this part, or which has not had such measures approved by the Administrator under section 184(b)(2) of this Act within six months after the submission of such measures, the owner or operator of each fossil-fuel-burning electric generating facility which is a major stationary source which is not subject to section 111(a) shall comply with an emission limitation or limitations for all such facilities owned or operated by the same entity in such region equivalent to an average among such facilities of 1.2 pounds of sulfur dioxide per million British thermal units of heat input on a thirty-day average. The owner or operator of each such facility shall submit to the Administrator a plan and schedule of compliance for achieving such emission limitation or equivalent emission reduction in accordance with section 186 of this Act, not later than three years after the enactment of this part or six months after the date on which such owner or operator becomes subject to such emission limitation, whichever is later. The Administrator shall approve such plan and schedule for compliance if it—

"(A) contains enforceable requirements for continuous emission reduction;

"(B) contains requirements for monitoring by the source and enforcement agencies to assure that the emission limitations are being met; and

"(C)(i) in the case of a source that proposes to comply with the emission limitation through use of fuel substitution, will achieve the emission reduction required by this section no later than twenty-four months after such plan is submitted, or

"(ii) in the case of a source that proposes to comply with the emission limitation through installation of a technological system of continuous emission reduction or replacement of existing facilities with new facilities with substantially lower emissions, or any other means except fuel switching, contains enforceable requirements that such source, within twenty-four months after such plan is submitted, enter into binding contactural commitments to acquire, install or construct such system or facilities.

Failure of such owner or operator to submit such approvable plan and schedule within the time provided in this section, failure to comply with the plan and schedule of compliance, and failure to achieve the emission reduction required by the dates required by this section, shall be violations of emission limitations for the purposes of sections 113, 120, and 304 of this Act.

"ENFORCEABLE EMISSION REDUCTION PROGRAMS

"SEC. 186. (a) For the purposes of maintaining the limitation on emissions required by section 183(c) of this Act or attaining emission reductions required by section 183(a), 184, or 185 of this Act, the following methods or programs for net emission reduction may be used, in addition to enforceable continuous emission reduction measures, by a State or the owner or operator of a source, if emission limitations under such methods or programs are enforceable by the Federal Government, States other than those in which the emissions occur, and citizens under section 304 of this Act:

"(1) least emissions dispatch to meet electric generating demand at existing generating capacity;

"(2) retirement of major stationary sources at an earlier date than provided in schedules on file with the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission, the Internal Revenue Service, or State utility regulatory agencies;

"(3) investments in energy conservation where reductions in emissions can be identified with such investments;

"(4) trading of emission reduction requirements and actual reductions on a State or regional basis, for which States and the Administrator are authorized to establish emission reduction banks or brokerage institutions to facilitate such trading; and

"(5) precombustion cleaning of fuels.".

INTERSTATE POLLUTION

SEC. 202. (a) Section 110(a)(2)(E) of the Clean Air Act is amended—

(1) by inserting "or sources" after "source";

(2) by striking "prevent" and inserting in lieu thereof "interfere with"; and

(3) by inserting after "visibility," the following: "or (III) contribute to atmospheric loadings of pollutants or their transformation products which may reasonably be anticipated to cause or contribute to an adverse effect on public health or welfare or the environment in any other State or foreign country,".

(b) Section 123 of the Clean Air Act is amended as follows:

(1) in the second sentence of subsection (c), by striking "immediate vicinity" and inserting in lieu thereof "impact area";

(2) in the fourth sentence of subsection (c), by striking all that language preceding "prohibit" and inserting in lieu thereof "The Administrator may";

(3) adding a new subsection (d) as follows:

"(d) The Administrator shall within one year of enactment of the Clean Air Act Amendments of 1984 complete a review of the emission limits for all existing major sources which have come into existence since 1970 or which have raised the stack height since 1970, in order to determine whether emission limits for such sources are inappropriately based upon modeling credit for stack height above good engineering practice. If emission limits are determined to be inappropriately based, the Administrator shall require the State, within six months, to correct the emission limit to conform with requirements of this section. It shall be the burden of the operator of each such source to demonstrate the correct stack height credit to be used in determining proper emission limits.".

(c) Section 126 of the Clean Air Act is amended as follows:

(1) by adding a new subsection as follows:

"(d) Emission of an air pollutant which, by itself or in combination, reaction, or transformation, adversely affects the public health or welfare of another State, is in violation of this section.".

(2) in subparagraph (B) of subsection (a)(1), by striking "in excess of the national ambient air quality standards";

(3) in subsection (b)—

(A) in the first sentence, following "major source", by inserting "or group of sources";

(B) by striking "110(a)(2)(E)(i)" and inserting in lieu thereof "110(a)(2)(E) or this section";

(4) in subsection (c)—

(A) in the first sentence, following the words "violation of", inserting "this section and";

(B) striking "110(a)(2)(E)(i)" wherever it appears and inserting in lieu thereof "110(a)(2)(E) or this section";

(C) in paragraph (2) insert before the period the phrase, "or to continue operation in violation of subsection (d) more than two years after the date of such finding without the installation of reasonably available control technology".

(d) Section 302(h) of the Clean Air Act is amended by inserting "precipitation," following "effects on" the second time it appears and by inserting before the period a comma and "whether caused by transformation, conversion, or combination with other air pollutants."

(e) Section 304(a)(1) of the Clean Air Act is amended by inserting—

(i) inserting a comma after "Act";

(ii) striking "or"; and

(iii) inserting at the end thereof the following: "or (C) section 126,".●

ADDITIONAL COSPONSORS

S. 524

At the request of Mr. ARMSTRONG, the names of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SIMON], and the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. NICKLES] were added as cosponsors of S. 524, a bill to recognize the organization known as The Retired Enlisted Association, Inc.

S. 929

At the request of Mr. HEINZ, the name of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. SPECTER] was added as a cosponsor of S. 929, a bill to amend the Railroad Retirement Act of 1974 to eliminate the COLA offset provisions, and restore amounts offset under those provisions after January 1984.

S. 945

At the request of Mr. THURMOND, the name of the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. PELL] was added as a cosponsor of S. 945, a bill to recognize the organization known as the National Association of State Directors of Veterans' Affairs, Inc.

S. 1018

At the request of Mr. GORTON, the name of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. SPECTER] was added as a cosponsor of S. 1018, a bill to amend the National Labor Relations Act to clarify the meaning of the term "guard" for the purpose of permitting certain labor organizations to be certified by the National Labor Relations Board as representatives of employees other than plant guards.

S. 1107

At the request of Mr. NUNN, the names of the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. THURMOND], and the Senator from Georgia [Mr. MATTINGLY] were added as cosponsors of S. 1107, a bill to authorize the Society of the Third Infantry Division to erect a memorial in the District of Columbia or its environs.

S. 1446

At the request of Mr. ANDREWS, the name of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SIMON] was added as a cosponsor of S. 1446, a bill to amend title 38, United States Code, to improve veterans' benefits for former prisoners of war.

S. 1456

At the request of Mr. LAUTENBERG, the names of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. KERRY] and the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. GORE] were added as cosponsors of S. 1456, a bill to recognize the Army and Navy Union of the United States of America.

S. 1640

At the request of Mr. GRASSLEY, the names of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. LEVIN], the Senator from Vermont [Mr. LEAHY], the Senator from Maryland [Mr. SARBANES], the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. THURMOND] and the Senator from West Virginia

[Mr. ROCKEFELLER] were added as cosponsors of S. 1640, a bill to amend title XVIII of the Social Security Act to provide for coverage under the Medicare Program of services performed by a physician assistant.

S. RES. 295

Resolved, That a committee consisting of two Senators be appointed to join such committee as may be appointed by the House of Representatives to wait upon the President of the United States and inform him that a quorum of each House is assembled and that the Congress is ready to receive any communication he may be pleased to make.

SENATE RESOLUTION 296—INFORMING THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES THAT A QUORUM OF THE SENATE IS PRESENT

Mr. BYRD submitted the following resolution; which was considered and agreed to:

S. RES. 296

Resolved, That the Secretary inform the House of Representatives that a quorum of the Senate is assembled and that the Senate is ready to proceed to business.

NOTICES OF HEARINGS

COMMITTEE ON THE BUDGET

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, the Senate Committee on the Budget will hold a hearing on the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings Law-fiscal year 1986 sequester and review of procedures—on Wednesday, January 22, 1986, at 2 p.m. The hearing will be held in room 608 of the Dirksen Senate Office Building. Alternate sound will be available in the Dirksen Auditorium.

The Honorable James C. Miller, Director, Office of Management and Budget; the Honorable Rudolph C. Penner, Director, Congressional Budget Office; and the Honorable Charles A. Bowsher, Comptroller General, GAO, will testify.

SUBCOMMITTEE ON PUBLIC LANDS, RESERVED WATER AND RESOURCE CONSERVATION

Mr. WALLOP. Mr. President, I would like to announce for the information of the Senate and the public, the scheduling of five public hearings before the U.S. Senate Subcommittee on Public Lands, Reserved Water and Resource Conservation, on Monday, February 10, 1986, in Ely, NV; on Tuesday, February 11, 1986, in Elko, NV; on Wednesday, February 12, 1986, in Winnemucca, NV; on Thursday, February 13, 1986, in Reno, NV; and on Friday, February 14, 1986, in Las Vegas, NV.

The subcommittee will hear testimony on S. 722, to designate certain National Forest System lands in the State of Nevada for inclusion in the National Wilderness Preservation System, and for other purposes, and on other legislative proposals for wilderness and park designations in Nevada.

The February 10 hearing will be held at the Bristlecone Pine Convention Center at 150 6th Street, Ely, NV, from 9 a.m. to 12 noon. Those wishing to testify in Ely should contact the office of Senator HECHT, 300 Las Vegas Boulevard, South, Suite 426, Las Vegas, NV 89101, phone: (702) 388-6605. Those wishing to testify must sign up in advance of the hearing no later than close of business February 5, 1986.

The February 11 hearing will be held at the Elko Convention Center at 700 Festival Way, Elko, NV, from 9 a.m. to 12 noon. Those wishing to testify in Elko should contact the office of Senator HECHT, 300 Booth Street, Reno, NV 89509, phone: (702) 784-5007. Those wishing to testify in Elko must sign up in advance of the hearing no later than close of business February 5, 1986.

The February 12 hearing will be held at the Winnemucca Convention Center at 50 Winnemucca Boulevard, Winnemucca, NV, from 9 a.m. to 12 noon. Those wishing to testify in Winnemucca should contact the office of Senator HECHT, 300 Booth Street, Reno, NV 89509, phone: (702) 784-5007. Those wishing to testify in Winnemucca must sign up in advance of the hearing no later than close of business February 5, 1986.

The February 13 hearing will be held at the Reno/Sparks Convention Center in Reno, NV, from 9 a.m. to 12 noon. Those wishing to testify in Reno should contact the office of Senator HECHT, 300 Booth Street, Reno, NV 89509, phone: (702) 784-5007. Those wishing to testify in Reno must sign up in advance of the hearing no later than close of business February 5, 1986.

The February 14 hearing will be held at the Las Vegas City Hall in the Commissioners Room at 400 Stewart Avenue, Las Vegas, NV, from 9 a.m. to 12 noon. Those wishing to testify in Las Vegas should contact the office of Senator HECHT, 300 Las Vegas Boulevard, South, Suite 426, Las Vegas, NV 89101, phone: (702) 388-6605. Those wishing to testify in Las Vegas must sign up in advance of the hearing no later than close of business February 5, 1986.

Oral statements will be limited to no more than 3 minutes per witness, and possibly less, depending on the number of witnesses who wish to testify. Witnesses will be placed in panels. A witness may testify at one hearing only. Because of the large expected attendance, individuals are requested to select the one city where they wish to testify and testify on the appropriate day. Witnesses are requested to bring 15 copies of their testimony with them to the hearing.

For further information, please contact Senator HECHT's offices in Reno or Las Vegas or Tony Bevinetto, Patty Kennedy, or Ann Femia of the subcommittee staff in Washington, DC at (202) 224-0613.

ADDITIONAL STATEMENTS

THE SAIDS OF DELPHI HIGH

● Mr. QUAYLE. Mr. President, since 1968, one category of Government spending has grown at a faster rate than any other in the Federal budget. Is that category defense spending? No, defense outlays have actually decreased from 46 percent of the Federal budget in 1968 to just over 26 percent in fiscal year 1985. Has it been spending on domestic health, education, and income security programs? No, these programs accounted for one-third of the Government's spending in 1968 and just under one-half in 1985, a growth rate of 48.9 percent. In fact, the fastest growing category of spending over the past 17 years has been interest payments on the national debt. Net interest payments accounted for $11 billion, or 6.2 percent, of the 1968 budget, yet by fiscal year 1985, they had more than doubled to 13.6 percent of the total budget, or a whopping $130.4 billion.

Our national debt of over $2 trillion is the legacy of past budget deficits. If record $200 billion-plus deficits are allowed to continue, it obviously follows that interest payments will consume still a larger portion of each year's tax dollar. Through runaway Federal spending, we have mortgaged our future for the sake of temporary convenience.

The reason I compare figures for 1968 to data from our most recently completed fiscal year is that most of today's high school seniors were born in 1968. These students represent our Nation's future, and it is they who will bear the burden of today's deficits. These costs are exacted not only through increasing interest payments, but also in real terms, through inflation, the cruelest tax of all, and through the overvaluation of the dollar, which allows foreign businesses to produce goods at a relative advantage over our domestic manufacturers—at the cost of U.S. jobs. Today's youth are entering the job market just as the staggering effects of our accumulated deficits are beginning to be realized.

Mr. President, the aptly named "Oracles" of Delphi Community High School in Delphi, IN, have provided us with valuable insight into the perils of a continued flow of red ink in our Federal budgets. In early December, the students of Norman Miller's government class there began to discuss the Federal budget deficit. As his students focused their attention on the impact today's deficits will have on their generation, Norm Miller was both surprised and impressed by the genuine concern and sense of urgency they expressed about Federal deficit spending. After studying these alarming numbers, one student told him, "We realized that we wouldn't have anything left for the future." All the students in the class asked Miller what could be done to cure our Nation's fiscal woes. "In order to have an impact on the political process," he told them, "you must organize yourselves." And organize they did.

About 30 Delphi High students, mostly seniors, attended an after-school meeting to form a club, "Students Against Inflated Deficit Spending," or SAIDS. The members of SAIDS circulated a petition among their 500 fellow students calling for a balanced Federal budget, and they gained 313 signatures. In addition, after school, SAIDS members braved the frigid weather of an Indiana December to canvass their school district with another balanced-budget petition, and garnered an additional 356 signatories among the residents of the Delphi school district, which includes the towns of Delphi, Battleground, Brookston, Burrows, Camden, Monticello, Rockfield, and West Lafayette. But the members of SAIDS still weren't satisfied that their point was sufficiently emphatic and unquestionably clear. Through a raffle, SAIDS raised $100 to be applied toward Federal deficit reduction.

I should add that the SAIDS members undertook their petition drive and fundraising campaign at a frenetic pace over the course of 2 weeks to complete their commendable initiative before the start of the school's holiday vacation schedule, and so that the petitions and their $100 check could be sent promptly to me and my colleagues, Senator DICK LUGAR and Fifth District Congressman BUD HILLIS, who represents Delphi and its surrounding communities.

Mr. President, this afternoon, I was proud to inform Secretary of the Treasury James A. Baker III of the grassroots support that the members of Delphi High's SAIDS club have generated for a balanced Federal budget, and I was privileged to present to Secretary Baker on behalf of SAIDS their check to the Treasury for $100. We should never forget the old proverb that a journey of 1,000 miles begins with one step. Thus, while $100 may not go far toward erasing the 1985 fiscal year deficit of $211.9 billion, nor a $2 trillion debt, the energy, spirit, dedication and sense of civic responsibility displayed by these young Hoosiers will do much to secure the future of our Nation. In working so hard to promote public awareness of the critical need for a balanced Federal budget, the members of Indiana's Delphi High SAIDS club have set a stellar example worthy of emulation by their peers across the country.

Mr. President, at the conclusion of my remarks, I ask to have printed in the RECORD the text of the two petitions circulated by the Delphi High SAIDS members, as well as articles about the student's efforts that appeared in the Lafayette Journal and Courier on December 12, 1985 and January 8, 1986.

The material follows:

PETITION

We, the students of the Delphi School District, petition Representative Bud Hillis, Senator Dan Quayle, and Senator Richard Lugar for a balanced budget. We feel that the deficit spending of our government adversely affects the youth of our community. We, as well as our children, will eventually be faced with the burden of paying these bills. We demand that a balanced budget be enacted as soon as possible.

We, the residents of the Delphi School District, petition Representative Bud Hillis, Senator Dan Quayle, and Senator Richard. Lugar for a balanced budget. We feel that the deficit spending of our government adversely affects the future of all American citizens. Our children will eventually be faced with the burden of paying these bills. We demand that a balanced budget be enacted as soon as possible.

DELPHI TEENS WILL MAKE PLEA FOR END TO DEFICIT

(By Dean Olsen)

DELPHI.—Teen-agers in this Carroll County city plan to tell federal lawmakers that they and hundreds of other county residents want the almost $2 trillion national debt eliminated.

"I really don't want to be paying for the national debt the government's gotten us into," Chris Flora, 17, said.

Flora and about 30 other students at Delphi Community High School have formed a club called Students Against Inflated Deficit Spending. They have begun a petition drive in the 500-student school and throughout the school district, demanding a balanced budget.

The students even hope to raise $300 and send it to the federal government to help reduce the national debt.

The petition drive, designed to get students interested in current events, was the idea of Norman Miller, Delphi High's government teacher. He said he didn't expect students to become so interested.

[Hope This Helps]

DELPHI STUDENTS GIVE TO REDUCE U.S. DEFICIT

(By Valerie Butler)

Can you imagine making a penny down payment on a $20 billion loan? Students at Delphi Community High School can.

About 40 students in this Carroll County city have sent $100 to the U.S. Treasury to help reduce the federal deficit.

Paying $100 toward a $2 trillion national debt is equivalent to making a one cent payment on $20 billion. Sen. Dan Quayle, R-Ind., plans to present the check to Treasury Secretary James A. Baker later this month.

The high school club, Students Against Inflated Deficit Spending, was formed last year in response to teen-age concern about the largest-ever national debt. Delphi teacher Norman Miller, organizer of the group, said he discussed the problems of deficit spending with his three government classes.

"They got all excited and asked, 'What can we do about it?' ", he said: "We called a meeting and about 40 kids showed up." One of the kids was Georgia Goodner, a high school senior, who eventually took charge of raising money.

Goodner said Miller's classes increased her awareness of the nation's spending problems.

"It really hit home. We realized that we wouldn't have anything left for the future," she said. Miller warned the students that the interest on $2 trillion would mean higher taxes and the possible elimination of Social Security.●

JEFFREY T. BERGNER

● Mr. LUGAR. Mr. President, as the Senate begins this second session of the 99th Congress, I am losing one of my closest associates who has been an important part of my life here since 1978. Jeffrey T. Bergner has served me and his country with distinction first as my legislative assistant for foreign policy, then my legislative director, my administrative assistant, and in the past year, staff director of the Foreign Relations Committee. He is leaving us today for the world of consulting, as part of the new firm of Berman, Bergner & Boyette.

It is with sadness and satisfaction that I see Jeff leave the Hill. His achievements during the past 7 years are legion. At the Foreign Relations Committee, he has done his greatest work. When I became chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee at the beginning of this Congress, my goal was to reinvigorate our activities with a new sense of direction and purpose. Any success that we have witnessed in this effort has been largely stimulated by Jeff Bergner.

We counseled that the committee hold a series of hearings attempting to build a new consensus in American foreign policy. His work led to the first foreign aid bill the Senate had passed in 4 years. Jeff's hand was also prominent in the Senate's action to support the Contras in Nicaragua, to provide emergency economic aid to Israel and Jordan, and to change the direction of our policies toward South Africa.

In addition, Jeff has built an excellent staff at the Foreign Relations Committee. He leaves the Senate and the committee in able hands. The new staff director is M. Graeme Bannerman, who has served as deputy staff director. The new deputy staff director is Kenneth Myers.

Although he is a native of Wisconsin, we have given Jeff honorary status as a Hoosier because of his long service in my office, and because of his wonderful wife, Susan, who is from Indiana. A graduate of Carleton College, where he attained Phi Beta Kappa, Jeff received both his master's degree and a Ph.D. from Princeton University. He was an assistant professor of political science at the University of Pennsylvania before joining my staff.

Jeff has earned the admiration and respect of committee members as well as his colleagues on the committee staff. The Committee on Foreign Relations passed the following resolution in honoring Jeff Bergner for his service to the committee:

Whereas Jeffrey T. Bergner joined the Senate in August 1978 and has served as Staff Director of the Committee on Foreign Relations since January 1985;

Whereas he served six of his years in the Senate as Legislative Director and subsequently Administrative Assistant to Senator Richard G. Lugar of Indiana;

Whereas, in his capacity as Staff Director, he made incalculable contributions to the Committee on a broad range of foreign policy issues, including passage by the Senate of the first foreign aid bill in four years, emergency economic aid to Israel and Jordan, and a major change in direction of our policies toward South Africa;

Whereas the reinvigoration of Committee activities with a sense of direction and purpose over the past year has been stimulated in large part by his efforts;

Whereas, as Staff Director, he supervised Committee consideration of innumerable items of legislation, treaties, and nominations, demonstrating great understanding of the legislative process;

Whereas, during his tenure as Staff Director, he has given the Committee the benefit of his perceptive insights into the role of Congress in foreign policy and sought to establish a more balanced relationship between the Legislative and Executive branches in the field of foreign policy;

Whereas he has provided indispensable leadership in developing and maintaining the professional traditions of the staff of the Committee on Foreign Relations;

Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Committee on Foreign Relations expresses to Jeff Bergner its deepest appreciation for his outstanding service to the Committee, to the United States Senate, and to the United States of America.●

TRIBUTE TO DR. JEFFREY T. BERGNER

● Mr. PELL. Mr. President, I wish to join the chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee, Senator LUGAR, in commending Dr. Jeffrey T. Bergner for his service to the Senate and in particular his service to the Foreign Relations Committee. Jeff has served for the past year as the committee's staff director. Prior to that, he spent 7 years in Senator LUGAR's personal office, first as his foreign policy adviser and then as his administrative assistant.

I came to know Jeff well during his tenure as the committee's staff director. We were in frequent contact, and I valued the fine relationship that he and I established and that Jeff established with the minority staff.

Sadly, Jeff is leaving the committee staff to enter the private sector, but he will take with him the friendship, respect and good wishes of people on both sides of the aisle. Jeff has served the chairman well; but he has also been attentive to the need and wishes of all members of the committee, and I commend him for that. We have not agreed on all issues, but we were always able to talk out our differences in a civilized manner and in the spirit of comity that has long prevailed in our committee.

Jeff will take a wealth of experience and ability with him into the private sector. In reflecting on his decision to enter the private sector, Jeff has said that he has talked so much for so many years about the importance and vitality of the free enterprise system that it is probably time to show that he meant it. Having spent some time in the business community myself, I can understand the sentiments that have led Jeff to leave the world of appropriations for the world of the bottom line. I wish him every success and thank him for the many courtesies he has extended to me.●

452D AIR REFUELING WING

● Mr. WILSON. Mr. President, I would like to offer my congratulations today to the personnel of the 452d Air Refueling Wing at March Air Force Base, CA.

This Air Force Reserve Wing compiled an outstanding record during 1985.

Taking part in the Strategic Air Command Bombing and Navigation Competition, an event which matches skills of bomber and air refueling tanker crews from the Active Air Force, the Air Force Reserve, the Air National Guard and the Royal Air Force, the 452d won the Saunders Trophy and the Navigation Trophy.

To win the Saunders Trophy, which is given for most points for all activity during four long and grueling missions, the 336th Air Refueling Squadron, headquarters flying unit, scored 3,743 points out of a possible 4,000.

The crews were just 10 points less than a perfect 1,600 in celestial navigation.

A total of 58 crews from the active Air Force, Air Force Reserve, and the Air National Guard took part in the competition for the two trophies.

The 78th Air Refueling Squadron, a 452d KC-10 associate unit at Barksdale Air Force Base, LA, shared the McDonnell-Douglas Best KC-10 Unit Trophy with its Active Air Force counterpart at that base.

The 78th was the first Air Force Reserve KC-10 associate unit formed.

In September, the 452d was named "Outstanding Flying Wing of the Year" by the Air Force Association. The award marked the fourth time since its inception in 1976 that the 452d had been singled out for this prestigious honor and was the third time the wing had been selected in the past 5 years.

During the period covered by the award, April 1, 1984, to March 31, 1985, 452d unit flew a combined total of 17,340 hours, refueled 9,248 receivers from all major U.S. Air Force commands as well as the Air Force Reserve, Air National Guard, U.S. Navy, U.S. Marine Corps and the German Air Force both in the continental United States and overseas. Reservists deploy annually to Royal Air Force in Mildenhall in England as well.

A total of 70,920,924 pounds of fuel or 11 million gallons was offloaded, 452d KC-10 crews have flown to Antarctica and they regularly travel to the Mideast and Spain for temporary duty there.

A fuel conservation program initiated by the 336th Air Refueling Squadron saved more than $655,000 during the first 9 months of 1984—a sum exceeding the squadron's entire payroll for that period. On an annual basis, the savings would come close to $900,000 and the Fuel Savings Program was instituted in 1978.

The California Air Force Reserve Wing was activated at Long Beach International Airport in 1949 and has compiled an exemplary record since then in bombardment, tactical reconnaissance, tactical airlift, military airlift and air refueling missions.

In January 1976, the 452d moved from Hamilton to March Air Force Base to begin conversion from a military airlift mission with C-130 turboprops to air refueling with KC-235's—the first Air Force Reserve organization chosen for such an assignment.

The conversion was so successful—all commitments and deadlines met either early or on time—the 452d was awarded the Air Force Outstanding Unit Award.

During the Korean conflict, the 452d, then a light bombardment wing, was the first Air Force Reserve unit to fly combat missions in that theater.

I am proud to have this honored air refueling wing in the State of California. I am sure my colleagues join me in commending Brig. Gen. William B. McDaniel and the outstanding members of the 452d Air Refueling Wing for their exemplary contribution to commitment.●

DOMESTIC ENERGY INDUSTRY

● Mr. BOREN. Mr. President, a little over a month ago I stood before this body and reminded my colleagues of the importance of considering the long-term impact of our actions. Specifically, I raised the question of the long-term stability of our domestic energy industry.

I introduced legislation last summer that proposed placing a fee on imported crude oil and petroleum products. At the time the price of oil on the spot market was approximately $30 per barrel. In December I asked the chairman of the Finance Committee, Senator ROBERT PACKWOOD, for hearings on this issue as soon as possible this year. At that time the price of oil had fallen to approximately $26 per barrel.

Today, I am renewing the call for consideration of an import fee on foreign crude oil. I ask that there be printed in the RECORD, at this point, a letter that I wrote to President Reagan concerning import fees; also an article from today's Washington Post which recounts the further dramatic fall in the futures market for oil prices. In London, futures contracts traded as low as $19.50 per barrel. On the New York Mercantile Exchange oil was trading as low as $21.27 per barrel. Mr. President, these are the lowest levels since the late 1970's.

Now is the time for an oil import fee. We must not delay any further. We must not allow this growing problem to reach full strength.

CRUDE OIL PRICES HIT 6-YEAR LOW

(By Kathleen Day)

Crude oil prices dropped below $20 a barrel in London yesterday, triggering speculation that prices could fall as low as $14 a barrel by the end of the year.

In the United States, futures prices for heating oil, gasoline and crude oil continued a 10-day drop that has left prices at their lowest level since the late 1970s, with crude closing at $21.27 on the New York Mercantile Exchange. It was the lowest price recorded by the exchange since crude began trading in 1982.

An analyst at Paine Webber Inc. said that several trades took place in London yesterday on April contracts for a key type of crude oil from Britain's North Sea in the range of $19.25 to $19.50 a barrel.

The sharp drop in oil prices could boost economic growth of industrial nations and have an almost immediate impact on consumer costs for home heating oil and gasoline. Energy experts predicted those prices could drop within the next several weeks.

At the same time, the decline could mean more problems for nations like Mexico and Nigeria that count on oil revenue to pay off their large foreign debts, as well as large oil producers like Britain and the OPEC countries. Lower oil prices also would hurt domestic energy companies and the banks that have many energy loans on their books.

The plunge in the price of oil—the result of a continuing worldwide glut in both crude and petroleum products—could bring consumers lower heating bills and gasoline prices within several weeks, said Bryan Jacoboski, international oil analyst at Paine Webber in New York.

Crude and heating oil were expected to fall this spring as winter demand ended. But while few analysts had ruled out the possibility that prices would fall below $20 a barrel, few were confident before yesterday that they actually would.

"Many people for some reason have latched on to $20 a barrel as a magic carpet floor to oil prices," Jacoboski said. Even though the purchases below $20 a barrel yesterday involved only a few trades, he said, "it's still significant."

He said that breaking that barrier could trigger a flurry of trading by investors focused on that mark, helping to push prices even lower.

Analysts said that because futures prices were lower than daily market—or spot—prices, further price drops are likely. When oil prices are stable, spot prices usually are lower than prices promised on future trades.

Both heating oil and crude oil are at their lowest prices since 1979. Energy prices began their latest decline around Thanksgiving after Saudi Arabia announced it would boost production of crude oil significantly this winter. In November, increased shipments of imported oil began arriving in the United States as a result of the Saudi production increase, swelling an already oversupplied market.

A major price war is likely if the Saudis or other producers do not decrease output, analysts say.

According to Steve Hanke, chief economist at Friedberg Commodity Management Inc. in Toronto, the Saudis also hope that by increasing production and further depressing prices, members of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries might be persuaded to adhere to production ceilings to prop up prices.

Assuming oil-producing nations outside OPEC continue to pump at current levels, OPEC members would have to limit output to 15.5 million barrels a day to match demand and keep prices from sliding, according to an analysis by a major U.S. energy company. But OPEC members have insisted their "fair share" of the market requires they produce more than 17 million barrels a day.

The demand for oil in the United States is expected to be flat despite continued growth in the economy because of the effects of continued energy conservation.

The futures price of crude oil has dropped more than $3 a barrel from early last week. A barrel is the equivalent of 42 gallons.

On the New York Mercantile Exchange, contracts for February delivery of West Texas Intermediate crude oil, the benchmark U.S. grade, slid $2.26 a barrel to close at $21.27. That contract traded at $25.15 a barrel last Friday, before the latest price drop began.

Oil traded on the spot market, which brought $32 a barrel in November, fell $2.25 a barrel to $21.70 yesterday.

Heating oil fell to 59 cents a gallon from Friday's close of 63.89 cents for February delivery. February contracts for unleaded gasoline dropped to 59.79 cents a gallon from 64 cents, and regular gasoline fell to 58.90 cents from 63.28 cents.

Exxon Corp., meanwhile, said yesterday it lowered the price it pays for West Texas intermediate crude by 50 cents a barrel, to $27.50. It said it reduced other crude prices by an average of 75 cents a barrel.

U.S. SENATE,
Washington, DC, January 8, 1986.

Hon. RONALD REAGAN,
The White House,
Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: Last summer as we in Congress struggled to develop a plan to reduce the budget deficits, I suggested an import fee on foreign crude oil and refined products. At that time you expressed reservations about the proposal. I urge you to weigh the very significant changes in the economic situation which have occurred since then. They easily justify reconsideration of the issue by you as the guardian of our Nation's economic and military security. Under today's conditions, we face possible instability in the oil markets that are very dangerous to our economy and pressures for spending cuts on national security programs that could be mitigated in part through an appropriate oil import fee.

Since the recent weakening of OPEC, analysts have predicted that there could be sudden sharp drops in the price of oil. On December 11, 1985, the New York Times in an editorial repeated the possibility that oil could fall $10 per barrel, to $18 per barrel or below. If the price of oil were to fall to $18 per barrel or lower, the domestic oil industry in this country would be devastated, and domestic production would be severely curtailed.

The value of oil reserves in the ground is used as security for billions of dollars in loans held by American banks. If the value of these reserves were to drop so drastically, not only would the domestic industry suffer, but the effect of this deflation of assets would have a domino effect on the financial system, sending major shock waves through even the big money centers such as New York and Chicago.

I would again suggest that we can avoid such an event. An import fee such as the one I introduced last summer, which would not raise oil prices from current levels, would generate as much as $15 billion per year for the U.S. Treasury. It would phase in only as the price of oil declined and would provide a buffer against the shocks caused by unstable oil prices. It is becoming clear that soon we will face dramatic cuts in social and defense spending under the provisions of the Gramm-Rudman deficit reduction mechanism. The revenue from an import fee would sharply reduce the need for tax increases on average Americans while protecting the stability of our economy and financial system at the same time.

I have also enclosed a copy of my most recent statements on the floor of the Senate concerning the need for an oil import fee. I again urge you to consider the many benefits of an import fee on foreign crude oil and refined products.

Sincerely,

DAVID L. BOREN,
U.S. Senate.●

BUDGET SCOREKEEPING REPORT

● Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I hereby submit to the Senate the final report on congressional budgetary action in the first session of the 99th Congress, prepared by the Congressional Budget Office. This report also serves as the scorekeeping report for the purposes of section 311 of the Congressional Budget Act, as amended.

Since the last report, the President has signed the further continuing appropriations for 1986 [Public Law 99-190], further temporary extensions [Public Law 99-189 and Public Law 99-201], and the Veterans Compensation Amendments of 1985 [Public Law 99-238].

I ask that the report be printed in the RECORD.

The report follows:

U.S. CONGRESS,
CONGRESSIONAL BUDGET OFFICE,
Washington, DC, January 21, 1986.

Hon. PETE V. DOMENICI,
Chairman, Committee on the Budget, U.S. Senate, Washington, D.C.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: The attached report shows the effects of Congressional action on the budget for fiscal year 1986. The estimated totals of budget authority, outlays, and revenues are compared to the appropriate or recommended levels contained in the most recent budget resolution, S. Con. Res. 32. This report meets the requirements for Senate scorekeeping of Section 5 of S. Con. Res. 32 and is current through January 20, 1986. The report is submitted under Section 308(b) and in aid of Section 311 of the Congressional Budget Act, as amended.

Since my last report the President has signed the Further Continuing Appropriations for 1986 (P.L. 99-190), Further Temporary Extensions (P.L. 99-189 and P.L. 99-201), and the Veterans Compensation Amendments of 1985 (P.L. 99-238), changing budget authority, outlay, and revenue estimates.

This letter is my final report on Congressional budgetary action in the first session of the Ninety-ninth Congress.

With best wishes,

Sincerely,

RUDOLPH G. PENNER.

CBO WEEKLY SCOREKEEPING REPORT FOR THE U.S. SENATE, 99th CONGRESS, 1st SESSION AS OF JAN. 20, 1986

[In billions of dollars]

	Budget authority	Outlays	Revenues	Debt subject to limit
Fiscal year 1986
Current level [1]	1,073.0	986.8	793.6	1,949.3
Budget Resolution, S. Con. Res. 32	1,069.7	967.6	795.7	[2] 2,078.7
Current level is:
Over resolution by	3.3	19.2
Under resolution by			2.1	129.4

[1] The current level represents the estimated revenue and direct spending effects (budget authority and outlays) of all legislation that Congress has enacted in this or previous sessions or sent to the President for his approval. In addition, estimates are included of the direct spending effects for all entitlement or other programs requiring annual appropriations under current law even though the appropriations have not been made. The current level excludes the revenue and direct spending effects of legislation that is in earlier stages of completion, such as reported from a Senate Committee or passed by the Senate. Thus, savings from reconciliation action assumed in S. Con. Res. 32 will not be included until Congress sends the legislation to the President for his approval. The current level of debt subject to limit reflects the latest U.S. Treasury information on public debt transactions.

[2] The current statutory debt limit is $2,078.7 billion.

BILL FRENCH: CITIZEN OF THE YEAR

● Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, I want to pay special tribute today to William J. French, town clerk of Tiverton, RI, who was recently honored as the Tiverton Lions Club "Citizen of the Year."

"It is an honor which is richly deserved and a long time coming," the Lions Club announced in making the selection. "Bill joins an illustrious group of dedicated, community-minded individuals who have received this honor," the announcement added, "and he has exemplified what is best in civil servants."

Mr. President, if I were going to compile a list of attributes that public servants should try to exemplify, dedication and a sense of caring would be near the top. In his tireless service to the citizens of Tiverton, Bill French has embodied both these qualities.

For Bill, "dedication" is defined as a routine 12-to-14-hour workday. In the office as early as 6:30 a.m. to start the day's work, he enthusiastically sees a task through to the end, whether it be responding to citizen complaints or unearthing an ancient town archive.

Bill's participation in numerous civic and social activities underscores his sense of caring. He is a member of the Civil Preparedness Administration Team, coordinator for the Title 504 Program for the Handicapped, a past commander of the Woodrow L. Silva Post 5392 VFW of Tiverton, a member of Kerins Hogan Post 7, Disabled American Veterans, cochairman of the VFW blood program, and a member of the Rhode Island, New England, and International Clerks Associations, to name just a few.

Bill French is a man of outstanding integrity and commitment, and I ask my Senate colleagues to join me and Bill's many other friends in congratulating him on this well-deserved award. I hope that the citizens of Tiverton will continue to reap the rewards of Bill French's selfless service to them for many years to come.●

STUDENT CHEMICAL SUBSTANCE ABUSE PREVENTION ACT

● Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, on December 17, 1985, I cosponsored S. 1820, the Student Chemical Substance Abuse Prevention Act, introduced by my close friend and ally from Arizona. This bill authorizes $5 million in each of fiscal years 1987 through 1989 for grants to State educational agencies to assist them in developing and expanding demonstration substance abuse prevention programs in elementary and secondary schools.

I urge my colleagues to support this bill and to work for an increased commitment by the Federal Government to drug law enforcement, prevention, and treatment. The explosive increase in the availability and use of drugs in this country has resulted in intolerable increases in drug-related crime, health care costs, and numerous other social problems.

Local law enforcement, education, and social service agencies have been overwhelmed by the increased levels of drug and alcohol abuse in this country. The funding authorized by S. 1820 represents a modest, but very welcome, increase in the Federal Government's assistance to local drug prevention and education programs.

We are in a battle for our very survival. With $51 billion in lost productivity each year due to alcoholism, with $47 billion lost due to drug abuse, with countless lives lost because of drug and alcohol abuse and addiction, we are not yet winning this battle.

We need a coordinated and comprehensive war on drugs at all levels. We need to educate our children much more effectively about the dangers of drug and alcohol abuse. As Senator DECONCINI pointed out in his statement upon the introduction of S. 1820, this effort must begin at the earliest grade levels.

We must demand international cooperation to eradicate drugs at their source and to cripple the drug trafficking groups. We need an interdiction effort that makes fuller use of the military to disrupt the drug smuggling networks and deter drug trafficking. We must seize the profits and proceeds of the illicit drug industry and more effectively combat drug money laundering. The revolving door criminal justice system that favors the criminal must be overhauled.

Above all, we need the active involvement of an enlightened and aroused public that demands action from all levels of government and every segment of society. I commend Senator DECONCINI for introducing S. 1820, and I urge my colleagues to give this bill their full support.●

THE 57th ANNIVERSARY OF THE BIRTH OF DR. MARTIN LUTHER KING, JR.

● Mr. HART. Mr. President, as you know, yesterday marked the first observance of the birth of Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr., as a national holiday. I am proud to join with all Americans in celebrating the 57th anniversary of Dr. King's birth. As we commemorate his life, my sincerest hope is that we resist the temptation to elevate Dr. King to sainthood in death. Instead Mr. President, I hope we to view him as an ordinary man—called by a God in whom he had a deep and abiding faith—to perform extraordinary deeds. Far from being passive and dreaming as popular culture too often portrays him, Dr. King was militant and bold. This is the legacy which we must address if we are to truly honor the contributions of this friend of mankind.

This day carries with it a dual significance. The symbolism and importance of a nation designating a day in honor of the grandson of former slaves cannot be underestimated. Yet, the greater significance of this day is that it gives us a chance to reflect on the lessons Dr. King taught us through his words and deeds.

And what magnificent words and deeds they were. This son of the middle class, this Ph.D. educated Baptist minister went to jail 39 times challenging unjust and immoral laws.

He adopted nonviolent direct confrontation as a strategy, not because he enjoyed jail, but because he understood that eloquence and analysis by themselves do not bring change.

He challenged us to be men and women of conviction and not conformity. He challenged us to make choices. He said that each of us had to decide whether we would be thermometers or thermostats in life. Thermometers merely register temperature. "Thermostats," he said, "transform the temperature of society."

He was thrust onto the world stage demanding that black Alabamians be free to use public transportation on an equal basis with their white counterparts. Thirteen years later, he was taken from that stage after concluding that economic justice for poor black men in Memphis was a cause to die for. In between, he became the conscience of this Nation as it confronted internal revolution and external change.

His mentor Dr. Benjamin E. Mays said it best: Martin Luther King spoke to America "about war and peace; about social justice and racial discrimination; about its obligation to the poor; and about nonviolence as a way of perfecting social change in a world of brutality and war."

Mr. President, Dr. King was, as he said of himself, "a drum major for justice—a drum major for peace" for he realized that "where creative statesmanship wanes, irrational militarism increases."

To truly appreciate Dr. King's leadership we have to look—not so much at where he had been—as at where he was going. He called himself a transformed nonconformist, willing to stand up and be criticized.

He was about change. He was about a revolution in values. He was about the reordering of this society.

Dr. King said the crusade he led was much more than a struggle for the rights of blacks. He said that it forced America "to face all of its interrelated flaws—racism, poverty, militarism, and materialism," and that it revealed "systematic rather than superficial flaws." What was at issue he said, was "radical reconstruction of society itself."

This is the meaning of Dr. King's life. The commitment with which he pursued this calling is his gift to us. That we each have within us, the capacity to undergo a personal revolution of values in pursuit of peace and justice in our "world house" is the reason that we celebrate this day.

Mr. President, in order to share with my colleagues several examples of the breadth and depth of Dr. King's analysis and thinking, I respectfully submit the following items to the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. As you can see, Mr. President, they are: The speech Dr. King delivered at the end of the voting rights march from Selma to Montgomery in 1965; his transformed nonconformist sermon, delivered on January 16, 1966, in Ebenezer Baptist Church; and several addresses he made between April 1967 and February 1968 in which he cogently set forth the basis of his opposition to the Vietnam war.

The material follows:

ADDRESS BY: DR. MARTIN LUTHER KING, JR., DELIVERED MARCH 25, 1965, DURING CEREMONIES AT THE CONCLUSION OF THE SELMA TO MONTGOMERY MARCH AT THE STEPS OF THE STATE CAPITOL IN MONTGOMERY, AL

Last Sunday, more than 8,000 of us started on a mighty walk from Selma, Alabama. We had walked through desolate valleys and across tiring hills. We have walked on meandering highways and rested our bodies on rocky byways. Some of our faces are burning from the outpourings of the sweltering sun. Some have literally slept in the mud. We have been drenched by the rain. Our bodies are tired, our feet are sore.

It is not an accident that one of the great marches of American history should terminate in Montgomery, Alabama. Just ten years ago in this very city almost at this very spot, a new philosophy was born of the Negro struggle. Nonviolent resistence came into being expressing the will and determination of the Negro people to be free in the second half of the 20th century.

Montgomery was the first city in the South in which the entire Negro community united and squarely faced its age old oppressors. Out of its struggle more than bus integration was won. A new idea more powerful than guns or clubs was born. Negroes took it and carried it across the South in epic battles that electrified the nation and the world. Yet, strangely the climactic conflicts always were fought and won on Alabama soil.

After Montgomery, heroic confrontations loomed up in Mississippi, Arkansas, Georgia and elsewhere. But not until the colossus of segregation was challenged in Birmingham did the conscience of America begin to bleed. White America was profoundly aroused by Birmingham because it witnessed a whole community of Negroes facing terror and brutality with majestic scorn and heroic courage. From the walls of its democratic spirit the nation finally forced Congress to write legislation in the hope that it would eradicate the strain of Birmingham. The Civil Rights Act of 1964 gave Negroes some part of their rightful dignity but without the vote it was dignity without strength.

Once more the method of nonviolent resistance was unsheathed from its scabbard and once again an entire community was mobilized to confront the adversary. And again, the brutality of a dying order shrieked across the land. Yet Selma, Alabama, became a shining moment in the conscience of man. If the worst in American life lurked in its dark streets the best of American instincts arose passionately from across the nation to overcome it. There never was a moment in American history more honorable and more inspiring than the pilgrimage of clergy and laity of every race and faith pouring into Selma to face danger at the side of its embattled Negroes.

The confrontation of good and evil compressed in the tiny community of Selma, generated the massive power to turn the whole nation to a new course. A president born in the South had the sensitivity to feel the will of the country and in the address that will live in history as one of the most passionate pleas for human rights pledged the might of the Federal Government to cast off the centuries-old blight.

President Johnson rightly praised the courage of the Negro for awakening the conscience of the nation. On our part we must pay our profound respect to the white Americans who cherished their democratic traditions over the ugly customs and privileges of generations and came forth boldly to join hands with us.

From Montgomery to Birmingham, from Birmingham to Selma, from Selma back to Montgomery, the trail wound in a circle long and often bloody, yet it has become a highway up from darkness. Alabama has tried to nurture and defend evil, but evil is choking to death in the dusty roads and streets of this state. So I stand before you today with the conviction that segregation is on its death bed, and the only thing uncertain about it is how costly the segregationists will make the funeral.

In focusing the attention of the nation and the world today on the flagrant denial of the right to vote we are exposing the very origin, the root cause, of racial segregation in our Southland. Racial segregation as a way of life did not come about as a result of natural emnity between the races immediately after the Civil War. There were no laws segregating the races then. But as the noted historian, C. Vann Woodard, in this book "The Strange Career of Jim Crow" clearly points out that the segregation of the races was really a political stratagem employed by the emerging bourbon interests in the South to keep the Southern masses divided and Southern labor the cheapest in the land.

You see, it was a simple thing to keep the poor white masses working for near starvation wages in the years that followed the Civil War. Why, if the poor white plantation or mill worker became dissatisfied with his low wage, the plantation or mill owner would merely threaten to fire him and hire a former Negro slave and pay him even less. Thus, the Southern wage level was kept almost unbearably low.

But toward the end of the Reconstruction Era, something very significant happened. There developed what was known as "The Populist Movement." The leaders of this movement began awakening the poor white masses and the former Negro slaves to the fact that they were being fleeced by the emerging bourbon interests. Not only that, but they began uniting the Negro and white masses into a voting block that threatened to drive the bourbon interests from the command posts of political power in the South. To meet this threat, the southern aristocracy began immediately to engineer the development of a segregated society. Through their control of mass media, they revived the doctrine of white supremacy. They saturated the thinking of the poor white masses with it; thus, clouding their minds to the real issue involved in the Populist Movement. They then directed the placement on the books of the South of laws that made it a crime for Negroes and whites to come together as equals at any level.

And that did it. That crippled and eventually destroyed The Populist Movement of the 19th Century.

If it may be said of the slavery era that the white man took the world and gave the Negro Jesus; then it may be said of the Reconstruction Era that the Southern Aristocracy took the world and gave the poor white man JIM CROW. He gave him Jim Crow—and when his wrinkled stomach cried out for the food that his empty pockets could not provide, he ate Jim Crow, a psychological bird that told him that no matter how bad off he was, at least he was a white man—better than black men. He ate Jim Crow, and when his undernourished children cried out for the necessities that his low wages could not provide he showed them the Jim Crow signs on the busses and in the stores, on the streets and in the public buildings—and his children too, learned to feed upon Jim Crow, their last outpost to psychological oblivion.

Thus, the threat of the free exercise of the ballot by the Negro and white masses alike resulted in the establishment of a segregated society. They segregated southern money from the poor whites, they segregated southern poor from the rich whites, they segregated southern churches from Christianity, they segregated southern minds from honest thinking, and they segregated the Negro from everything.

That's what happened when the Negro and white masses of the South threatened to unite and build a "Great Society"; a society of justice where none would prey upon the weakness of others, a society of plenty where greed and poverty would be done away, a society of brotherhood where every man will respect the dignity and worth of human personality.

We've come a long way since that travesty of justice was perpetrated upon the American mind and the American dream. James Weldon Johnson put it eloquently when he said. "We have come over a way that with tears has been watered. We have come treading our path through the blood of the slaughter. Out of the gloomy past, til now, we stand at last, where the white gleam of our bright star is cast."

And today I want to tell the city of Selma and the state of Alabama and the people of America and to the nations of the world, that we are not about to turn around now. We are on the move now . . . We are on the move now and no wave of racism can stop us. We are on the move and the burning of our churches will not deter us; the bombing of our homes will not dissuade us; the beating and killing of our young people will not divert us; the wanton release of their known murderers will not discourage us. We are on the move now and like an idea whose time has come, not even the marching of mighty armies can halt us.

Let us therefore, continue our triumphant march to the realization of the American dream. Let us march on segregated housing until every ghetto of social and economic oppression is disabled and Negroes and whites live side by side in decent, safe and sanitary housing. Let us march on segregated schools until every vestige of segregated and inferior education becomes a thing of the past and Negroes and whites study side by side in the socially healing context of the classroom. Let us march on poverty until no American parent has to skip a meal so that their children may eat. March on poverty until no starved man walks the streets of our cities and towns in search of jobs that do not exist. Let us march on poverty until wrinkled stomachs in Mississippi are filled and the idled industries of Appalachia are revitalized and broken lines of sweltering ghettos are mended and remolded. Let us march on ballot boxes until the salient misdeeds of the blood thirsty are transformed into the honest good deeds of orderly citizens. March on ballot boxes until race baiters disappear from the political arena; March on ballot boxes until the Wallaces of our nation tremble away in silence. March on ballot boxes until we send to our city councils, state legislatures and U.S. Congress, men who will not fear to do justly, love mercy and walk humbly with their God. Let us march on ballot boxes until brotherhood becomes more than a meaningless word in an opening prayer, but the order of the day on every legislative agenda.

Now there is nothing wrong with marching in this sense. The Bible tells us that the mightly men of Joshua merely walked about the walled city of Jericho and the barriers to freedom came tumbling down. I like that old Negro spiritual, "Joshua fit de battle of Jericho." In its simple yet colorful depiction of that great moment in Biblical history it tells us that:

"Joshua fit de battle roun' Jericho
Joshua fit de battle roun' Jericho
And de walls came tumbling down
Up to the walls of Jericho, dey marched wid spear in hand. Go blow dem ram horns, Joshua cried Course de battle am in my hand."

These words I have given you just as they were given us, by their unknown, long dead, dark skinned originator. Some now long gone black bard bequeathed to posterity these words in ungrammatical form, yet with emphatic pertinence for all of us today. The battle is in our hands. We can answer with creative nonviolence the call to higher ground to which the new directions of our struggle summon us.

The road ahead is not altogether a smooth one. There are no broad highways that lead easily and inevitably to quick solutions. And it would be irresponsible of us if we were to indicate that there were. Instead, the course we must follow lies through a maze of inter-related demands and counter-demands . . . hopes and aspiratons . . . fears and hatreds. But difficult and painful as it is, such a course must be charted and the civil rights movement must walk it with courage and dignity of our past achievements.

In the glow of lamplight on my desk a few nights ago, I gazed again upon the wondrous signs of our time, full of hope and promise for the future and I smiled to see in the newspaper photographs of nearly a decade ago, the faces so bright, so solemn of our valiant heroes, the people of Montgomery. To this list may be added the names of all those who have fought and yes, died in the nonviolent army of our day. The patter of their feet as they walked through Jim Crow barriers in the great stride toward freedom, is the thunder of the marching men of Joshua, and the world rocks beneath their tread.

My people, my people . . . listen . . . listen . . . the battle is in our hands. All over Alabama there is a cry for marching.

As I close, let us reaffirm our commitment to nonviolence. Mine eyes have seen the glory of the coming of the Lord. He is trampling out the vintage where the grapes of wrath are sworn. He has loosed the fateful lightning of his terrible swift sword. His truth is marching on.

He has sounded forth the trumpet
That shall never call retreat. He Is sifting out the hearts of men
Before his judgement seat.
O be swift my soul to answer him
Be jubilant my feet
Our God is marching on.

SERMON BY DR. MARTIN LUTHER KING, JR., EBENEZER BAPTIST CHURCH, ATLANTA, GA, JANUARY 16, 1966

Just a few days ago, the young representative-elect of the 136th District, Julian Bond, made a statement that placed him on record as taking a stand against war. He further made a statement agreeing with a statement that had been made by an organization criticizing the policy of our government in Vietnam. Immediately after this statement was made, there was a great uproar all over the State of Georgia. Screaming editorials in the newspapers, on television and on the radios were heard. Vituperative words were uttered by legislators from all over the State of Georgia. They talked about him as if he had committed some grave crime. And even some Negroes jumped into the fray to convince America of their respectability and patriotism, something America does not need to be convinced about concerning the Negro. And instead of statements saying we disagree with this position, we find it difficult to accept every aspect of this situation, some went so far to call him unreasonable, misguided, a traitor, failing to realize that when democracy fails to have healthy debate, it loses its soul. And so, a few days after, that legislature of the State of Georgia, in an unprecedented act, in an unjust and illegal and immoral act, voted almost unanimously to unseat Mr. Julian Bond. This was a young man who dared to speak his mind. This is a young man who dared to be different. This is a young man who dared to dissent. This is a young man who did not fear to take a view against majority opinion. Emotions are still high, but this morning I want to meditate with you on something that I've been thinking about ever since this crisis developed. I always go back to Scripture to find my consolation. Occasionally I find it in secular literature, and I think Ralph Waldo Emerson in his essay on self reliance was eminently correct when he said, "A man cannot truly be a man unless he can be a non-conformist." Long before Emerson wrote these words, the apostle Paul, in his letter to the Roman Christians said, "Do not conform to this world, but be ye transformed by the renewing of your mind." Paul was saying, in substance, don't fear to dissent, for if you're going to be a Christian, take the gospel of Jesus Christ seriously, you must be a dissenter, you must be a nonconformist. Now I know the advice, "Be not conformed," is difficult advice. When the pressure of the crowd is always unconsciously upon us, conditioning our minds and our feet to march to the rhythmic drumbeat of the status quo. There are always those voices and forces seeming to say to us, "never become identified with an unpopular cause, never be found in that pathetic area of being in the minority of two or three. And even our intellectual disciplines have somehow given us the impression that conformity is the way of life. Many philosophical sociologists would say in substance that morality is little more than group consensus, and that the folkways are the right ways. There are some psychologists who would say to us that the most ready and accessible path to personality and emotional adjustment is through acting like other people. So everybody seeks to walk like everybody else. Everybody seeks to think like everybody else. Everybody seeks to act like everybody else. Everybody seeks to wear a hair-do like everybody else. Everybody seeks to do just what everybody else is doing. Success, recognition, conformity are what we often find ourselves seeking, and we feel that the best path to success is the path of conformity. But in spite of this, in spite of this prevalent attitude, the words of the apostle Paul ring across the centuries: "Be not conformed to this world." In other words, we, as Christians, are called to be men of conviction and not of conformity. We are called upon to be men of moral nobility and not men of social respectability. As Christians, we are called upon to live differently, to be loyal ultimately and only to Jesus Christ, and to His ethical insights. Paul said it in another letter. He wrote to the Church of Philippi, "Ye are the colony of heaven". He was saying in substance that we have a dual citizenry. We live both in time and eternity, both in heaven and earth, and although we live in the colony of time, our ultimate allegiance is to the empire of eternity. Our ultimate allegiance is not to the State. Our ultimate allegiance is not to the government. Our ultimate allegiance is not to our nation. Our ultimate allegiance is to the Almighty God, and this is where we get our authority, this is where we get our mandate. Nietzsche said, . . . once the philosopher Nietzsche said, "Every man is a hammer or an anvil". I want you to decide this morning what you're going to be. Are you going to be an anvil, molded by the patterns of society? Are you going to be a hammer, molding the patterns of society? To put it another way, what are you going to be this morning, a thermometer or a thermostat? Go to your thermometer in the house, look at it hard, Pretty soon you discover that it does nothing but record and register the temperature. If it's 70 degrees, it says 70. If it's 80 degrees, it says 80. It merely registers the temperature. There's another instrument. When you push it a bit, if it's 70 degrees and you want it to be 80, you push it up a little. That's called a thermostat. It not only records and registers the temperature, but it regulates the temperature. If you want it a little cooler, you turn it down. Now, this morning, we as Christians must decide whether we will be thermometers, merely registering the temperature of society, or whether we will be thermostats, transforming the temperature of society. "Be not conformed to this world. Be ye transformed by the renewing of your mind." Now, many people fear nothing more terribly than to take a position which stands out sharply and clearly from the prevailing opinion. You know most people are cowards at this point, and they just follow the crowd, and they follow what the majority of people happen to be doing. They live by some such ethic that says, "Everybody's doin' it", "Everybody's sayin' it, so it must be allright". And some people are little more than grassshoppers in their lives. They don't have any convictions. They don't have any stable positions, they just jump around. You've seen people like that, and they try to be all things to all men, afraid to stand up. You know a grasshopper, if he's on green grass, he's green. If he gets on brown leaves, he's brown. If he gets on a red leaf, he's red. A grasshopper is any color of the situation he's in, and there are some people who are little more than grasshoppers in their thinking. They never stand up on a great world position, they never stand up on a great issue. Then, another tragedy of the modern world is that we have ended up in an age of jumboism. We worship that which is big—big buildings, big cars, big houses, big corporations. We find our great security in bigness, big cities, and all of this, this has all but led us to believe to live by the views that we are safer when we take a position that is in line with the majority, in line with the big opinion, so to speak. And so we end up astronomically intimidated. And so, this morning, there is a message, "Be not conformed", there are many of our white brothers all across the South who really feel deep down in their hearts that the struggle for racial justice is right, feel deep down in their hearts that the Negro should have a place in the sun of justice in America, yet they remain silent because they are afraid that the majority around them will criticize them and that they will suffer social ostracism. I remember I was speaking at Duke University not long ago, in North Carolina, most of the people in the audience were white. I talked about the mandates of the Gospel, and at the end of my speech, a young white theological student came up to me and said, "You know, Dr. King, I agree with everything you said. I believe in it, and I've come to believe in it even more since I've come into theological school and studied the meaning of the Gospel. On all of these issues", he said, "I just wish I could do something about it. But you know, I'm the pastor of a little church about 80 miles away from here, and if I said anything like this, if I even talked about brotherhood from my pulpit, they would kick me out". I thought about him, I thought about his dilemma, and I said to myself, this is it. Here is a man who forces himself to take abuse that he really doesn't agree with because the majority opinion is against him. Look at it over our nation. Whether people like to hear it or not, some voices must cry out. There's something wrong with this world, and I want the record straight, I'm against war. I want the record straight, I hear the words of prophecy this morning. I hear the words of prophecy saying that there must be a day when men will beat their swords into plowshares, their spears into pruning hooks, nation will not rise up against nation, and neither will they study war any more. I want it known this morning, however much people write editorials about our policy, we aren't doing enough to end the war in Vietnam. If one studied the history of that war, it isn't like the war fighting Hitler in Germany. Our hands are dirty in the war in Vietnam. Vietnam declared itself independent from the French back in 1945. And the United States of America did not even recognize the Republic of Vietnam at that time. That was before Communist China had come into being, so they couldn't use the argument that China was on the scene and this was a containment domino kind of theory war. Then, France decided to recapture her former colony. For eight years, she fought and murdered and killed the Vietnamese people. She was supported in that to the tune of three billion dollars by the United States of America. Then in 1954, France surrendered. Then came the Geneva Accord, which agreed to remove all foreign troops, which agreed that there would be free elections in 1966 to reunite the country. It was at that very same time that a young man, a relatively young man, stood on the floor of the Senate. He was at that time the Senate Majority Leader. He said, "I will not condone an act, even if it is advocated by Mr. Dulles, to send American boys to Asian soil to perpetuate a war that is at bottom perpetuating white colonialism." That man's name was Lyndon Baines Johnson. The years unfolded. 1956 came, but a puppet government had been set up in South Vietnam by the Eisenhower and Dulles regime. They got a man named Diem. He was a Catholic, and it exacerbated relations between Catholic and Buddhist because he was not elected by the people, and then in 1956, when the day for the election came, it never took place. Why? Mr. Eisenhower admits it in his book. The United States did not let those people have elections because he knew that Ho Chi Minh would get 80 per cent of the vote. And there is a time when prophecy must speak out. "Your hands are full of blood", says Isaiah, get out of my face, don't pray your long prayers to me, don't come to me with your eloquent speeches, don't talk to me about your patriotism, "Your hands are full of blood". Somebody must tell the nation this. We don't need to deal with the past so much. I only cited this this morning because I think most people really aren't educated about what is happening in Vietnam. There are many pacifists who stand against war, but there are many non-pacifists who are against this particular war. There has never been a war in the history of our nation that has had as much opposition as this war, and I'm tired of the press and others trying to brainwash people and let us feel that there are no issues to be discussed in this war. America doesn't need to prove to one of the smallest countries in the world that it has the military power. We have the greatest military power in the world. What we must show the world now is our moral power. Be assured that we will not stop communism with bombs and guns and bullets and napalm. We will stop communism by letting the world know that democracy is a better government than any other government, and by making justice a reality for all of God's children. Somebody must stand up and say this. "Be not conformed to this world; but be ye transformed by the renewing of your mind."

I didn't mean to get off on this. But every now and then, people must hear the truth. America must hear the truth, if we are going to survive as a nation, somebody has got to have vision, somebody must be willing to stand up and be criticized and called every bad name, out of love for this country. Nobody should be considered disloyal because they dissent, because it is done out of love. Many people get into other situations because they are afraid not to conform. Many young people develop bad habits that begin to ruin and destroy their lives, because they don't have the ability to say "no", when everybody else is saying "yes". But you know, the strange thing and one of the tragic things is that this tragic tendency to conform is probably more evident in the church than any other institution. Did you know slavery lasted in this country 244 years? With the exception of a few courageous Christians, the church took a stand for it and even went to the pulpit and started preaching that the Negro is inferior by nature because of Noah's curse upon the children of Ham. Segregation would end today in all of its dimensions, if the church really took a stand against it. Thank God that Pope Paul is now standing up against war and calling for peace. But we must admit this morning that the church has been all too slow at this point. Thank God the National Council of Churches has spoken out in a beautiful way, criticizing our foreign policy, and the present war, and criticizing war in general. This is marvelous. But we have to admit that war is a reality in this world today because the church has often sanctioned war and many, many wars, holy wars, sent our sons to the battlefields of the world singing, "Praise the Lord and pass the ammunition." The church does not have clean hands. It is too giving in to the world, and we preachers can't be totally excused. We too often conform, and we too often judge the success of our ministry by the size of the wheelbase on our automobile, the bigness of our houses and the bigness of our salaries. And so often we play with the Gospel in order to conform. I was talking to a young man not long ago, and he was . . . after the sermon I was talking with him, and he was just jumping all over the pulpit and jumping out and spitting all over everything and screaming with his tune, and moaning and groaning, and I said, now I just can't understand you, young man, you're getting an education. I can understand that there were certain cultural patterns in the past that caused many of the older ministers to do this, but I don't understand why you feel you have to do this. And he said, "well, you know, I got to get Aunt Jane", and he has reduced the Gospel to showmanship, reduced the Gospel to playing in order to get Aunt Jane. I say to you this morning, the Gospel isn't to be played with. "Be not conformed to this world". God is saying, don't play with my Gospel. And then, preachers will often preach nice little comforting, soothing sermons because some deacon out there or deaconness or head of some auxiliary or other members are . . . may be hurt in the process. He knows they are doing something they shouldn't be doing and he doesn't want to hurt them, so he preaches a nice little comforting sermon that says everything in general and nothing in particular, trying to conform. There was a time when the church was powerful. Never forget the early church. It was a great church. They told Caesar they would not fight war. They told Caesar that they would not follow the patterns of the Roman world that gave to them no power or capacity to worship the God of their salvation. They were persecuted. They were thrown into prison. They were taken to the chopping block and they were thrown into the dens of lions. They always went there with a hymn on their lips, singing about the Glory of God, saying we must stick to what we believe is right. And one historian said that Christianity won out over all the other religions of the Greco-Roman world, because the early Christians were able to outlive, outthink and outdie overybody else. "Be not conformed to this world". Now let me bring out another point quickly. Nonconformity in and of itself is not life's greatest virtue. Non-conformity per se contains no saving values. It may represent, in some circumstances, little more than a form of exhibitionism. You know there are some people who see everybody saying yes on an issue and they merely say no to get attention. They want to be seen, they want to get a headline, they want to get some kind of recognition. They've been ignored so often, so they are non-conformists in order to get attention. This isn't the kind of non-conformity I'm talking about this morning. We must get the other part of the text. "Be ye transformed by the renewing of your mind". In other words, non-conformity is creative when it is controlled and directed by a transformed life and by a new mental outlook. And by opening our lives to God through Jesus Christ, we become new creatures. You see, non-conformity without this leads to self-righteousness, leads to a kind of hard-headedness that becomes cold, and this is why you often read the statement, "I love reforms, but I hate reformers". These kind of reformers are not transformed nonconformists. A reformer may be an untransformed non-conformist whose rebellion against the evils of society will cause him to become annoyingly rigid and unreasonably impatient, and I've seen this so often in many struggles. I've seen it so often in the civil rights struggle, working as we must work to bring about a better and a new day. We don't need to curse anybody, we don't need to call them crackers, because they may call us niggers. We don't need to use vituperative language. We don't have to be bitter, we don't have to be mean. And so often, these non-conformists that I know are untransformed non-conformists. When you become a transformed non-conformist, you somehow rise to a higher level, and this very transformation saves you from irresponsible words that estrange rather than reconcile, making hasty judgments which are blind to the necessity of social process. Transformed non-conformists recognize that social change will not come overnight, and yet they work as though there is an imminent possibility at this very moment. So let us be transformed non-conformists. Let us not fear dissent. Let us stand up for that which conscience tells us is right. Now, I must confess my friends that if you are going to be a non-conformist, it won't always be easy. I don't want to disillusion you this morning. There are some rocky roads ahead. There are some meandering curves ahead. And there will be moments the buoyancy of fulfillment will be transformed into the fatigue of despair. There will be moments, if you're going to be a nonconformist and take a stand on controversial issues, that you'll go to bed at night and begin to roll and roll and you can't go to sleep. Somehow your mind is too filled up with many things—the frustrations of the world, the disappointments of the day. If you're going to be a non-conformist, I must confess to you, that often you may have to stand amid the chilly winds of adversity. If you're going to be a transformed non-conformist, sometimes you'll have to face crowded and agonizing jail cells. If you're going to be a transformed non-conformist, there will be days when you will not know what will happen next. Morning after morning, you will get up and look into the faces of your children and your wife, not knowing whether you will get back to them because you know that you are living every day under the threat of death. If you want to be a transformed non-conformist, over and over again, you will have your little seven or eight year old child saying, "Daddy, why do you have to go to jail so much?" If you're going to be a transformed non-conformist, sometimes your home will get bombed, sometimes you may be stabbed, sometimes people will misunderstand you. If you're going to be a transformed non-conformist, people are going to lie on you, spread false rumors on you, write bad and ugly editorials about you. If you're going to be a transformed non-conformist, these things will happen to you. But don't worry about them. Jesus said a long time ago, "If you believe in me, and if you stand up for what I tell you to stand up for, go on through life and know that I will be with you, even until the end of the world." This is the meaning of the cross. This is its power, and it can transform things. This morning, get in tune with the infinite. Don't conform to the world. Hear the beat of another drum. One day, a great general was to go to one of the outstanding army camps, and the soldiers had rehearsed for many days, and they marched and got in their ranks and moved together, getting ready for an impressive sight for the general who would review and who would behold them. And then that day came, and they got together and moved out. The sergeants and the lieutenants were calling signals, and the drums were beating. And one soldier in the situation got out of step, and he never did get right again, and at the end of the day, the general had left and the lieutenant called this man in, and said "why did you embarrass us today? We were preparing for the greatest day that we've ever had. Why did you get out of step and stay out of step in front of the general of all people?" He looked at the lieutenant and said, "I'm sorry. I apologize. I can almost cry about it. But something happened to me. You may not know it, Lieutenant, but while we were marching down on the lower level, there was another battalion way up on the hill, and they were marching, and unfortunately, somehow my ears couldn't quite get attuned to the drums down here, and I was listening to the beat of another drum up on the hill." This morning, our world is in dire need. Men who will listen and hear the beat of another drum. Shadrach, Meshach and Abednego heard the beat of another drum. They stood before Nebuchadnezzar, the king of that day, and said, "The Lord that we serve we believe will deliver us, but if not, we will not bow to your king." Amos heard the beat of another drum. He cried out in the midst of the injustices of his day, "Let justice roll down like waters and righteousness like a mighty stream." Micah heard the beat of another drum, and he cried out in the midst of the conditions of infidelity and idolatry, "What does the Lord require of thee, but to do justly, to love mercy and walk humbly with thy God." Paul heard the beat of another drum, and he cried out on Mars Hill, "Out of one blood, God made all men to dwell upon the face of the earth". We don't need to start back in biblical times. Come here, Abraham Lincoln, what's wrong with you? It seems that I can hear him saying, I hear the beat of another drum, which tells me that "this nation cannot survive half-slave and half-free". Thomas Jefferson, let us talk with you a minute. What's wrong with you? I hear the beat of another drum, which tells me in the midst of a day amazingly adjusted to slavery, that somehow "we hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal. That they are endowed by their Creator with certain inalienable rights, and among these are life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness." Come here, brother Kennedy. We know you got assassinated not long ago, but what happened to you? I heard the beat of another drum. I heard marching feet in Birmingham, Alabama. I looked at God's children facing water hoses, I saw them facing dogs, and I saw Bull Conner calling them everything but human beings, and I had to look back and say that "this is a moral issue, as old as the Bible, and as modern as the Constitution." Something ought to happen to you this morning. "Be not conformed to this world, but be ye transformed by the renewing of your mind." And whenever a transformed non-conformist comes into history, things begin to happen. Even the angels are struck silent, and the eternity stands still. Whenever a transformed non-conformist comes along, things begin to shake up, because God is working in history. And don't let anybody turn you around. We have a song we sing in the movement—"Ain't gonna let nobody turn me around." Ain't gonna let criticism turn me around. Ain't gonna let misunderstanding turn me around. Ain't gonna let bombs turn me around. Ain't gonna let threats turn me around. I'm gonna stand right here until the change has come, until all history knows that this is God's day. "Be not conformed to this world, but be ye transformed by the renewing of your mind."

SPEECHES BY THE REVEREND DR. MARTIN LUTHER KING, JR., ABOUT THE WAR IN VIETNAM

Martin Luther King was a peacemaker. For him peace was no static concept signifying the absence of conflict. Rather did he seek peace that is a wholeness constructed by justice, penetrated by love and forever pursued in hope. He could not separate peace in Harlem from peace in the Mekong Delta. Hailed as a civil rights leader, he was criticized by some for "confusing the issues" by his protest against America's bloodied course in Vietnam. But for Martin Luther King peace was indivisible.

What follow are three speeches which Dr. King gave during the past fourteen months concerning the Vietnamese war and the interrelatedness of our present domestic crisis. As a Co-Chairman of Clergy And Laymen Concerned About Vietnam, Dr. King's first address, "Vietnam and the Struggle for Human Rights," was delivered at historic Riverside Church on Tuesday evening, April 4, 1967. The second speech, "The Domestic Impact of the War in Vietnam," was delivered at the National Labor Leadership Conference, the University of Chicago, on November 11, 1967. Dr. King delivered the final address included in this pamphlet, "Vietnam Is Upon Us," at the New York Avenue Presbyterian Church in Washington, D.C., on February 6, 1968, to members of Clergy and Laymen Concerned About Vietnam.

VIETNAM AND THE STRUGGLE FOR HUMAN RIGHTS—APRIL 4, 1967

I come to this magnificent house of worship tonight because my conscience leaves me no other choice. I join you in this meeting because I am in deepest agreement with the aims and work of the organization which has brought us together: Clergy and Laymen Concerned About Vietnam. The recent statement of your executive committee are the sentiments of my own heart and I found myself in full accord when I read its opening lines: "A time comes when silence is betrayal." That time has come for us in relation to Vietnam.

The truth of these words is beyond doubt, but the mission to which they call us is a most difficult one. Even when pressed by the demands of inner truth, men do not easily assume the task of opposing their government's policy, especially in time of war. Nor does the human spirit move without great difficulty against all the apathy of conformist thought within one's own bosom and in the surrounding world. Moreover when the issues at hand seem as perplexing as they often do in the case of this dreadful conflict we are always on the verge of being mesmerized by uncertainty: but we must move on.

Some of us who have already begun to break the silence of the night have found that the calling to speak is often a vocation of agony, but we must speak. We must speak with all the humility that is appropriate to our limited vision, but we must speak. And we must rejoice as well, for surely this is the first time in our nation's history that a significant number of its religious leaders have chosen to move beyond the prophesying of smooth patriotism to the high grounds of a firm dissent based upon the mandates of conscience and the reading of history. Perhaps a new spirit is rising among us. If it is, let us trace its movements well and pray that our own inner being may be sensitive to its guidance, for we are deeply in need of a new way beyond the darkness that seems so close around us.

Over the past two years, as I have moved to break the betrayal of my own silences and to speak from the burnings of my own heart, as I have called for radical departures from the destruction of Vietnam, many persons have questioned me about the wisdom of my path. At the heart of their concerns this query has often loomed large and loud: Why are you speaking about the war, Dr. King? Why are you joining the voices of dissent? Peace and civil rights don't mix, they say. Aren't you hurting the cause of your people, they ask? And when I hear them, though I often understand the sources of their concern I am nevertheless greatly saddened, for such questions mean that the inquirers have not really known me, my commitment or my calling. Indeed; their questions suggest that they do not know the world in which they live.

In the light of such tragic misunderstanding, I deem it of signal importance to try to state clearly, and I trust concisely, why I believe that the path from Dexter Avenue Baptist Church—the church in Montgomery, Alabama where I began my pastorate—leads clearly to this sanctuary tonight.

I come to this platform tonight to make a passionate plea to my beloved nation. This speech is not addressed to Hanoi or to the National Liberation Front. It is not addressed to China or to Russia.

Nor is it an attempt to overlook the ambiguity of the total situation and the need for a collective solution to the tragedy of Vietnam. Neither is it an attempt to make North Vietnam or the National Liberation Front paragons of virtue, nor to overlook the role they can play in a successful resolution of the problem. While they both may have justifiable reason to be suspicious of the good faith of the United States, life and history give eloquent testimony to the fact that conflicts are never resolved without trustful give and take on both sides.

Tonight, however, I wish not to speak with Hanoi and the NLF, but rather to my fellow Americans who, with me, bear the greatest responsibility in ending a conflict that has exacted a heavy price on both continents.

Since I am a preacher by trade, I suppose it is not surprising that I have several reasons for bringing Vietnam into the field of my moral vision. There is at the outset a very obvious and almost facile connection between the war in Vietnam and the struggle I, and others, have been waging in America. A few years ago there was a shining moment in that struggle. It seemed as if there was a real promise of hope for the poor—both black and white—through the Poverty Program. There were experiments, hopes, new beginnings. Then came the build-up in Vietnam and I watched the program broken and eviscerated as if it was some idle political plaything of a society gone mad on war, and I knew that America would never invest the necessary funds or energies in rehabilitation of its poor so long as adventures like Vietnam continued to draw men and skills and money like some demoniacal destructive suction tube. So I was increasingly compelled to see the war as an enemy of the poor and to attack it as such.

Perhaps the more tragic recognition of reality took place when it became clear to me that the war was doing far more than devastating the hopes of the poor at home. It was sending their sons and their brothers and their husbands to fight and to die in extraordinarily high proportions relative to the rest of the population. We were taking the black young men who had been crippled by our society and sending them 8,000 miles away to guarantee liberties in Southeast Asia which they had not found in Southwest Georgia and East Harlem. So we have been repeatedly faced with the cruel irony of watching Negro and white boys on TV screens as they kill and die together for a nation that has been unable to seat them together in the same schools. So we watch them in brutal solidarity burning the huts of a poor village but we realize that they would never live on the same block in Detroit. I could not be silent in the face of such cruel manipulation of the poor.

My third reason moves to an even deeper level of awareness, for it grows out of my experience in the ghettos of the north over the last three years—especially the last three summers. As I have walked among the desperate, rejected and angry young men I have told them that Molotov cocktails and rifles would not solve their problems. I have tried to offer them my deepest compassion while maintaining my conviction that social change comes most meaningfully through non-violent action. But they asked—and rightly so—what about Vietnam? They asked if our own nation wasn't using massive doses of violence to solve its problems, to bring about the changes it wanted. Their questions hit home, and I knew that I could never again raise my voice against the violence of the oppressed in the ghettos without having first spoken clearly to the greatest purveyor of violence in the world today—my own government. For the sake of those boys, for the sake of this government, for the sake of the hundreds of thousands trembling under our violence, I cannot be silent.

For those who ask the question, "Aren't you a Civil Rights leader?" and thereby mean to exclude me from the movement for peace, I have this further answer. In 1957 when a group of us formed the Southern Christian Leadership Conference, we chose as our motto: "To save the soul of America." We were convinced that we could not limit our vision to certain rights for black people, but instead affirmed the conviction that America would never be free or saved from itself unless the descedants of its slaves were loosed completely from the shackles they still wear. In a way we were agreeing with Langston Hughes, that black bard of Harlem, who had written earlier:

O yes,
I say it plain,
America never was America to me,
And yet I swear this oath—
America will be!

Now, it should be incandescently clear that no one who has any concern for the integrity and life of America today can ignore the present war. If America's soul becomes totally poisoned, part of the autopsy must read Vietnam. It can never be saved so long as it destroys the deepest hopes of men the world over. So it is that those of us who are yet determined that America will be are led down the path of protest and dissent, working for the health of our land.

As if the weight of such a commitment to the life and health of America were not enough, another burden of responsibility was placed upon me in 1964; and I cannot forget that the Nobel Prize for Peace was also a commission—a commission to work harder than I had ever worked before for "the brotherhood of man." This is a calling that takes me beyond national allegiances, but even if it were not present I would yet have to live with the meaning of my commitment to the ministry of Jesus Christ. To me the relationship of this ministry to the making of peace is so obvious that I sometimes marvel at those who ask me why I am speaking against the war. Could it be that they do not know that the good news was meant for all men—for communist and capitalist, for their children and ours, for black and for white, for revolutionary and conservative? Have they forgotten that my ministry is to obedience to the one who loved his enemies so fully that he died for them? What then can I say to the Vietcong or to Castro or to Mao as a faithful minister of this one? Can I threaten them with death or must I not share with them my life?

Finally, as I try to delineate for you and for myself the road that leads from Montgomery to this place I would have offered all that was most valid if I simply said that I must be true to my conviction that I share with all men the calling to be a son of the Living God. Beyond the calling of race or nation or creed is this vocation of sonship and brotherhood, and because I believe that the Father is deeply concerned especially for his suffering and helpless and outcast children, I come tonight to speak for them.

This I believe to be the privilege and the burden of all of us who deem ourselves bound by allegiances and loyalties which are broader and deeper than nationalism and which go beyond our nation's self-defined goals and positions. We are called to speak for the weak, for the voiceless, for victims of our nation and for those it calls enemy, for no document from human hands can make these humans any less our brothers.

And as I ponder the madness of Vietnam and search within myself for ways to understand and respond in compassion my mind goes constantly to the people of that peninsula. I speak now not of the soldiers of each side not of the junta in Saigon, but simply of the people who have been living the curse of war for almost three continuous decades now. I think of them too because it is clear to me that there will be no meaningful solution there until some attempt is made to know them and hear their broken cries.

They must see Americans as strange liberators. The Vietnamese people proclaimed their own independence in 1945 after a combined French and Japanese occupation, and before the communist revolution in China. They were led by Ho Chi Minh. Even though they quoted the American Declaration of Independence in their own document of freedom, we refused to recognize them. Instead, we decided to support France in its re-conquest of her former colony.

Our government felt then that the Vietnamese people were not "ready" for independence, and we again fell victim to the deadly western arrogance that has poisoned the international atmosphere for so long. With the tragic decision we rejected a revolutionary government seeking self-determination, and a government that had been established not by China (for whom the Vietnamese have no great love) but clearly indigenous forces that included some communists. For the peasants this new government meant real land reform, one of the most important needs in their lives.

For nine years following 1945 we denied the people of Vietnam the right of independence. For nine years we vigorously supported the French in their abortive effort to re-colonize Vietnam.

Before the end of the war we were meeting 80% of the French war costs. Even before the French were defeated at Dien Bien Phu, they began to despair of the reckless action, but we did not. We encouraged them with our huge financial and military supplies to continue the war even after they had lost the will. Soon we would be paying almost the full costs of this tragic attempt at recolonization.

After the French were defeated it looked as if independence and land reform would come again through the Geneva agreements. But instead there came the United States, determined that Ho should not unify the temporarily divided nation, and the peasants watched again as we supported one of the most vicious modern dictators—our chosen man, Premier Diem. The peasants watched and cringed as Diem ruthlessly routed out all opposition, supported their extortionist landlords and refused even to discuss re-unification with the North. The peasants watched as all this was presided over by the U.S. influence and then by increasing numbers of U.S. troops who came to help quell the insurgency that Diem's methods had aroused. When Diem was overthrown they may have been happy, but the long line of military dictatorships seemed to offer no real change—especially in terms of their need for land and peace.

The only change came from America as we increased our troop commitments in support of governments which were singularly corrupt, inept and without popular support. All the while the people read our leaflets and received regular promises of peace and democracy—and land reform. Now they languish under our bombs and consider us—not their fellow Vietnamese—the real enemy. They move sadly and apathetically as we herd them off the land of their fathers into concentration camps where minimal social needs are rarely met. They know they must move or be destroyed by our bombs. So they go—primarily women and children and the aged.

They watch as we poison their water, as we kill a million acres of their crops. They must weep as the bulldozers roar through their areas preparing to destroy the precious trees. They wander into the hospitals, with at least 20 casualties from American firepower for one Vietcong-inflicted injury. They wander into the towns and see thousands of the children, homeless, without clothes, running in packs on the streets like animals. They see the children degraded by our soldiers as they beg for food. They see the children selling their sisters to our soldiers, soliciting for their mothers.

What do the peasants think as we ally ourselves with the landlords and as we refuse to put any action into our many words concerning land reform? What do they think as we test out our latest weapons on them, just as the Germans tested out new medicine and new tortures in the concentration camps of Europe? Where are the roots of the independent Vietnam we claim to be building? Is it among these voiceless ones?

We have destroyed their two most cherished institutions: the family and the village. We have destroyed their land and their crops. We have cooperated in the crushing of the nation's only non-communist revolutionary political force—the Unified Buddhist Church. We have supported the enemies of the peasants of Saigon. We have corrupted their women and children and killed their men. What liberators!

Now there is little left to build on—save bitterness. Soon the only solid physical foundations remaining will be found at our military bases and in the concrete of the concentration camps we call fortified hamlets. The peasants may well wonder if we plan to build our new Vietnam on such grounds as these? Could we blame them for such thoughts? We must speak for them and raise the questions they cannot raise. These too are our brothers.

Perhaps the more difficult but no less necessary task is to speak for those who have been designated as our enemies. What of the National Liberation Front—that strangely anonymous group we call VC or Communists? What must they think of us in America when they realize that we permitted the repression and cruelty of Diem which helped to bring them into being as a resistance group in the south? What do they think of our condoning the violence which led to their own taking up of arms? How can they believe in our integrity when now we speak of "aggression from the North" as if there were nothing more essential to the war? How can they trust us when now we charge them with violence after the murderous reign of Diem, and charge them with violence while we pour every new weapon of death into their land? Surely we must understand their feelings even if we do not condone their actions. Surely we must see that the men we supported pressed them to their violence. Surely we must see that our own computerized plans of destruction simply dwarf their greatest acts.

How do they judge us when our officials know that their membership is less than 25 per cent communist and yet insist on giving them the blanket name? What must they be thinking when they know that we are aware of their control of major sections of Vietnam and yet we appear ready to allow national elections in which this highly organized political parallel government will have no part? They ask how we can speak of free elections when the Saigon press is censored and controlled by the military junta. And they are surely right to wonder what kind of new government we plan to help form without them—the only party in real touch with the peasants. They question our political goals and they deny the reality of a peace settlement from which they will be excluded. Their questions are frighteningly relevant. Is our nation planning to build on political myth again and then shore it up with the power of new violence?

Here is the true meaning and value of compassion and non-violence when it helps us to see the enemy's point of view, to hear his questions, to know his assessment of ourselves. For from his view we may indeed see the basic weaknesses of our own condition, and if we are mature, we may learn and grow and profit from the wisdom of the brothers who are called the opposition.

So, too, with Hanoi. In the North, where our bombs now pummel the land, and our mines endanger the waterways, we are met by a deep but understandable mistrust. To speak for them is to explain this lack of confidence in western words, and especially their distrust of American intentions now. In Hanoi are the men who led the nation to independence against the Japanese and the French, the men who sought membership in the French commonwealth and were betrayed by the weakness of Paris and the willfulness of the colonial armies. It was they who led a second struggle against French domination at tremendous costs, and then were persuaded to give up the land they controlled between the 13th and 17th parallel as a temporary measure at Geneva. After 1954 they watched us conspire with Diem to prevent elections which would have surely brought Ho Chi Minh to power over a united Vietnam, and they realized they had been betrayed again.

When we ask why they do not leap to negotiate, these things must be remembered. Also it must be clear that the leaders of Hanoi considered the presence of American troops in support of the Diem regime to have been the initial military breach of the Geneva Agreements concerning foreign troops, and they remind us that they did not begin to send in any large number of supplies or men until American forces had moved into the tens of thousands.

Hanoi remembers how our leaders refused to tell us the truth about the earlier North Vietnamese overtures for peace, how we claimed that none existed when they had clearly been made. Ho Chi Minh has watched as America has spoken of peace and built up its forces, and now he has surely heard the increasing international rumors of Americans plans for an invasion of the North. Perhaps only his sense of humor and irony can save him when he hears the most powerful nation of the world speaking of his aggression as it drops thousands of bombs on a poor weak nation more than 8,000 miles away from its shores.

At this point I should make it clear that while I have tried in these last few minutes to give a voice to the voiceless on Vietnam and to understand the arguments of those who are called enemy, I am as deeply concerned about our own troops there as anything else. For it occurs to me that what we are submitting them to in Vietnam is not simply the brualizing process that goes on in any war where armies face each other and seek to destroy. We are adding cynicism to the process of death, for they must know after a short period there that none of the things we claim to be fighting for are really involved. Before long they must know that their government has sent them into a struggle among Vietnamese, and the more sophisticated surely realize that we are on the side of the wealthy and the secure while we create a hell for the poor.

Somehow this madness must cease. We must stop now. I speak as a child of God and brother to the suffering poor of Vietnam. I speak for those whose land is being laid waste, whose homes are being destroyed, whose culture is being subverted. I speak for the poor of America who are paying the double price of smashed hopes at home and death and corruption in Vietnam. I speak as a citizen of the world, for the world as it stands aghast at the path we have taken, I speak as an American to the leaders of my own nation. The great initiative in this war is ours. The initiative to stop it must be ours.

This is the message of the great Buddhist leaders of Vietnam. Recently one of them wrote these words: "Each day the war goes on, the hatred increases in the heart of the Vietnamese and in the hearts of those of humanitarian instinct. The Americans are forcing even their friends into becoming their enemies. It is curious that the Americans who calculate so carefully on the possibilities of military victory, do not realize that in the process they are incurring deep psychological and political defeat. The image of America will never again be the image of revolution, freedom and democracy, but the image of violence and militarism."

If we continue there will be no doubt in my mind and in the mind of the world that we have no honorable intentions in Vietnam. It will become clear that our minimal expectation is to occupy it as an American colony and men will not refrain from thinking that our maximum hope is to goad China into a war so that we may bomb her nuclear installations. If we do not stop our war against the people of Vietnam immediately the world will be left with no other alternative than to see this as some horribly clumsy and deadly game we have decided to play.

The world now demands a maturity of America that we may not be able to achieve. It demands that we admit that we have been wrong from the beginning of our adventure in Vietnam, that we have been detrimental to the life of the Vietnamese people.

In order to atone for our sins and errors in Vietnam, we should take the initiative in bringing a halt to this tragic war. I would like to suggest five concrete things that our government should do immediately to begin the long and difficult process of extricating ourselves from this nightmarish conflict:

1. End all bombing in North and South Vietnam.

2. Declare a unilaterial cease-fire in the hope that such action will create the atmosphere for negotiation.

3. Take immediate steps to prevent other battlegrounds in Southeast Asia by curtailing our military build-up in Thailand and our interference in Laos.

4. Realistically accept the fact that the National Liberation Front has substantial support in South Vietnam and must thereby play a role in any meaningful negotiations and in any future Vietnam government.

5. Set a date that we will remove all foreign troops from Vietnam in accordance with the 1954 Geneva Agreement.

Part of our ongoing commitment might well express itself in an offer to grant asylum to any Vietnamese who fears for his life under a new regime which included the Liberation Front. Then we must make what reparations we can for the damage we have done. We must provide the medical aid that is badly needed, making it available in this country if necessary.

Meanwhile we in the churches and synagogues have a continuing task while we urge our government to disengage itself from a disgraceful commitment. We must continue to raise our voices if our nation persists in its perverse ways in Vietnam. We must be prepared to match actions with words by seeking out every creative means of protest possible.

As we counsel young men concerning military service we must clarify for them our nation's role in Vietnam and challenge them with the alternative of conscientious objection. I am pleased to say that this is the path now being chosen by more than seventy students at my own Alma Mater, Morehouse College, and I recommend it to all who find the American course in Vietnam a dishonorable and unjust one. Moreover I would encourage all ministers of draft age to give up their ministerial exemptions and seek status as conscientious objectors. These are the times for real choices and not false ones. We are at the moment when our lives must be placed on the line if our nation is to survive its own folly. Every man of humane convictions must decide on the protest that best suits his convictions, but we must all protest.

There is something seductively tempting about stopping there and sending us all off on what in some circles has become a popular crusade against the war in Vietnam. I say we must enter that struggle, but I wish to go on now to say something even more disturbing. The war in Vietnam is but a symptom of a far deeper malady within the American spirit, and if we ignore this sobering reality we will find ourselves organizing clergy and laymen-concerned committees for the next generation. They will be concerned abut Guatemala and Peru. They will be concerned about Thailand and Cambodia. They will be concerned about Mozambique and South Africa. We will be marching for these and a dozen other names and attending rallies without end unless there is a significant and profound change in American life and policy. Such thoughts take us beyond Vietnam, but not beyond our calling as sons of the living God.

In 1957 a sensitive American official overseas said that it seemed to him that our nation was on the wrong side of a world revolution. During the past 10 years we have seen emerge a pattern of suppression which now has justified the presence of U.S. military "advisors" in Venezuela. This need to maintain social stability for our investments accounts for the counter-revolutionary action of American forces in Guatemala. It tells why American helicopters are being used against guerrillas in Colombia and why American napalm and green beret forces have already been active against rebels in Peru. It is with such activity in mind that the words of the late John F. Kennedy come back to haunt us. Five years ago he said, "Those who make peaceful revolution impossible will make violent revolution inevitable."

Increasingly, by choice or by accident, this is the role our nation has taken—the role of those who make peaceful revolution impossible by refusing to give up the privileges and the pleasures that come from the immense profits of overseas investment.

I am convinced that if we are to get on the right side of the world revolution, we as a nation must undergo a radical revolution of values. We must rapidly begin the shift from a "thing-oriented" society to a "person-oriented" society. When machines and computers, profit motives and property rights are considered more important than people, the giant triplets of racism, materialism, and militarism are incapable of being conquered.

A true revolution of value will soon cause us to question the fairness and justice of many of our past and present policies. On the one hand we are called to play the Good Samaritan on life's roadside; but that will be only an initial act. One day we must come to see that the whole Jericho Road must be transformed so that men and women will not be constantly beaten and robbed as they make their journey on Life's highway. True compassion is more than flinging a coin to a beggar; it is not haphazard and superficial. It comes to see that an edifice which produces beggars needs re-structuring. A true revolution of values will soon look uneasily on the glaring contrast of poverty and wealth. With righteous indignation, it will look across the seas and see individual capitalists of the West investing huge sums of money in Asia, Africa and South America, only to take the profits out with no concern for the social betterment of the countries, and say: "This is not just." It will look at our alliance with the landed gentry of feeling that it has everything to teach others and nothing to learn from them is not just. A true revolution of values will lay hands on the world of order and say of war: "This way of settling differences is not just." This business of burning human beings with napalm, of filling our nation's homes with orphans and widows, of injecting poisonus drugs of hate into the veins of peoples normally humane, of sending men home from dark and bloody battlefields physically handicapped and psychologically deranged, cannot be reconciled with wisdom, justice, and love. A nation that continues year after year to spend more money on military defense than on programs of social uplift is approaching spiritual death.

America, the richest and most powerful nation in the world, can well lead the way in this revolution of values. There is nothing, except a tragic death wish, to prevent us from re-ordering our priorities, so that the pursuit of peace will take precedence over the pursuit of war. There is nothing to keep us from molding a recalcitrant status quo with bruised hands until we have fashioned it into a brotherhood.

This kind of positive revolution of values is our best defense against Communism. War is not the answer. Communism will never be defeated by the use of atomic bombs or nuclear weapons. Let us not join those who shout war and through their misguided passions urge the United States to relinquish its participation in the United Nations. These are days which demand wise restraint and calm reasonableness. We must not call everyone a Communist or an appeaser who advocates the seating of Red China in the United Nations and who recognizes that hate and hysteria are not the final answers to the problem of these turbulent days. We must not engage in a negative anti-Communism, but rather in a positive thrust for democracy, realizing that our greatest defense against Communism is to take offensive action in behalf of justice. We must with positive action seek to remove those conditions of poverty, insecurity and injustice which are the fertile soil in which the seed of Communism grows and develops.

These are revolutionary times. All over the globe men are revolting against old systems of exploitation and oppression and out of the wombs of a frail world new systems of justice and equality are being born. The shirtless and barefoot people of the land are rising up as never before. "The people who sat in darkness have seen a great light." We in the West must support these revolutions. It is a sad fact that, because of comfort, complacency, a morbid fear of Communism, and our proneness to adjust to injustice, the Western nations that initiated so much of the revolutionary spirit of the modern world have now become the arch anti-revolutionaries. This has driven many to feel that only Marxism has the revolutionary spirit. Therefore, Communism is a judgment against our failure to make democracy real and follow through on the revolutions that we initiated. Our only hope today lies in our ability to recapture the revolutionary spirit and go out into a sometimes hostile world declaring eternal hostility to poverty, racism, and militarism. With this powerful commitment we shall boldly challenge the status-quo and unjust mores and thereby speed the day when "every valley shall be exalted, and every mountain and hill shall be made low, and the crooked shall be made straight and the rough places plain."

A genuine revolution of values means in the final analysis that our loyalties must become ecumenical rather than sectional. Every nation must now develop an overriding loyalty to mankind as a whole in order to preserve the best in their individual societies.

This call for a world-wide fellowship that lifts neighborly concern beyond one's tribe, race, class and nation is in reality a call for an all-embracing and unconditional love for all men. This oft misunderstood and misinterpreted concept so readily dismissed by the Nietzsches of the world as a weak and cowardly force—has now become an absolute necessity for the survival of man. When I speak of love I am not speaking of some sentimental and weak response. I am speaking of that force which all of the great religions have seen as the supreme or living principle of life. Love is somehow the key that unlocks the door which leads to ultimate reality. This Hindu-Moslem-Christian-Jewish-Buddhist belief about ultimate reality is beautifully summed up in the first epistle of Saint John:

Let us love one another; for love is God and everyone that loveth is born of God and knoweth God. He that loveth not knoweth not God; for God is love. If we love one another, God dwelleth in us, and his love is perfected in us.

Let us hope that this spirit will become the order of the day. We can no longer afford to worship the God of Hate or bow before the altar of retaliation. The oceans of history are made turbulent by the ever-rising tides of hate. History is cluttered with the wreckage of nations and individuals that pursued this self-defeating path of hate. As Arnold Toynbee says: "Love is the ultimate force that makes for the saving choice of life and good against the damning choice of death and evil. Therefore the first hope in our inventory must be the hope that love is going to have the last word."

We are not faced with the fact that tomorrow is today. We are confronted with the fierce urgency of now. In this unfolding conundrum of life and history there is such a thing as being too late. Procrastination is still the thief of time. Life often leaves us standing bare, naked and dejected with a lost opportunity. The "tide in the affairs of men" does not remain at the flood; it ebbs. We may cry out desperately for time to pause in her passage, but time is deaf to every plea and rushes on. Over the bleached bones and jumbled residue of numerous civilizations are written the pathetic words: "Too late." There is an invisible book of life that faithfully records our vigilance or our neglect. "The moving finger writes and having written moves on. . . ." We shall have a choice today: non-violent co-existence or violent co-annihilation.

We must move past indecision to action. We must find new ways to speak for peace in Vietnam and justice throughout the developing world—a world that borders on our doors. If we do not act we shall surely be dragged down the long dark and shameful corridors of time reserved for those who possess power without compassion, might without morality, and strength without sight.

Now let us begin. Now let us re-dedicate ourselves to the long and bitter—but beautiful—struggle for a new world. This is the calling of the sons of God, and our brothers wait eagerly for our response. Shall we say the odds are too great? Shall we tell them the struggle is too hard? Will our message be that the forces of American life militate against their arrival as full men, and we send our deepest regrets? Or will there be another message of longing, of hope, of solidarity with their yearnings, of commitment to their cause, whatever the cost? The choice is ours, and though we might prefer it otherwise we must choose in this crucial moment of human history.

THE DOMESTIC IMPACT OF THE WAR IN VIETNAM—NOVEMBER 11, 1967

What are some of the domestic consequences of the war in Vietnam? It has made the Great Society a myth and replaced it with the troubled and confused society. The war has strengthened domestic reaction. It has given the extreme right, the anti-labor, anti-Negro and anti-humanist forces a weapon of spurious patriotism to galvanize its supporters into reaching for power right up to the White House. It hopes to use national frustration to take control and restore the America of social insecurity and power for the privileged. When a Hollywood performer, lacking distinction even as an actor, can become a leading war hawk candidate for the presidency only the irrationalities induced by a war psychosis can explain such a melancholy turn of events. The war has produced a shameful order of priorities in which the decay, squalor and pollution of the cities are neglected even though seventy percent of our population now live in them. The war has smothered and nearly extinguished the beginnings of progress toward racial justice. The war has created the bizarre spectacle of armed forces of the United States fighting in ghetto streets of America while they are fighting in jungles in Asia. The war has so increased Negro frustration and despair that urban outbreaks are now an ugly feature of the American Scene. How can the administration with quivering anger denounce the violence of ghetto Negroes when it has given an example of violence in Asia that shocks the world? The users of naval guns, millions of tons of bombs, and revolting napalm cannot speak to Negroes about violence. Only those who are fighting for peace have the moral authority to lecture on nonviolence. I do not want to be misunderstood, I am not equating the so-called Negro violence with the war. The acts of Negroes are infinitely less dangerous and immoral than the deliberate acts of escalation of the war. In fact, the Negroes in the ghetto, goaded and infuriated by discrimination and neglect, have for the most part deliberately avoided harming people. They have destroyed property, but even in the grip of rage the vast majority have vented their anger on inanimate things, not people. If destruction of property is deplorable, what is the word for the use of napalm on people? What would happen to Negroes if they not only set fires but killed people in the vicinity and explained blandly that some known combatants had to die as a matter of course? Negroes would be called savages if we were so callous, but for generals it is military tactics.

The priorities of the administration and Congress are dramatically illustrated in the ease with which 70 billions are appropriated for war while 2 billion can scarcely be wrung from the unwilling hands of Congress for anti-poverty programs. In the past two months unemployment has increased approximately 15%. At this moment tens of thousands of people in anti-poverty programs are being abruptly thrown out of jobs and training programs to search in a diminishing job market for work and survival. The inflation of the war cuts the pay of the employed, the pension check of the retired, and the savings of almost everyone. Inflation has stopped creeping and has begun running. Working people feel the double impact of inflation and unemployment immediately. But Negroes feel its impact with crushing severity because they live on the margin in all respects and have no reserve to cushion shocks.

There is a great deal of debate about the nation's ability to maintain war and commit the billions required to attack poverty—the poverty of tens of millions that will not vanish even in an 800 billion dollar economy.

Theoretically, the United States has resources for both but an iron logic dictates that we shall never voluntarily do both for two reasons:

First, the majority of the present Congress and the Administration, as distinguished from the majority of the people, is singlemindedly devoted to the pursuit of the war. It has been estimated that we spend approximately $500,000 to kill a single enemy soldier in Vietnam, and yet we spend about $53.00 for each impoverished American in anti-poverty programs. Congress appropriates military funds with alacrity and generosity. It appropriates poverty funds with miserliness and grudging reluctance. The government is emotionally committed to the war; it is emotionally hostile to the needs of the poor.

Second, the government will resist committing adequate resources for domestic reform because these are reserves indispensable for military adventure. The logic of war requires that a nation deploy its wealth for immediate combat and simultaneously that it maintain substantial reserve. It will resist any diminishing of its military power through draining off of resources for the social good.

This is the inescapable contradiction between war and social progress at home. Military adventures must stultify domestic progess to insure the certainty of military success. This is the reason the poor and particularly Negroes have a double stake in peace and international harmony.

This is not to say it is useless to fight for domestic reform. On the contrary as people discover in the struggle what is impeding their progress they comprehend the full and real cost of the war to them in their daily lives.

Another tragic consequence of the war domestically is its destructive effect on the young generation. There cannot be enough sympathy for those who are sent into battle. More and more it is revealed how many of our soldiers cannot understand the purpose of their sacrifice. It is harrowing under any circumstances to kill, but it is psychologically devastating to be forced to kill when one doubts that it is right.

Beyond the tragedy at the front, at home the young people are torn with confusions which tend to explain most of the extremes of their conduct. This generation has never known a severe economic crisis but it has known something far worse. It is the first generation in American History to experience four wars in twenty-five years: World War II, The Cold War, The Korean War and the War in Vietnam. It is the generation of wars and it shows the scars in widespread drug consumption, alienation, and the feverish pursuit of sensual pleasures. Yet, we cannot call this generation of the young the lost generation. We are the lost generation, because it is we who fail to give them the peaceful society they were promised as the American Heritage.

Finally, the whole nation is living in a triple-ring of isolation and alienation. The government is isolated from the majority of the people who want either withdrawal, deescalation or honest negotiations, not what they are now given—steady intensification of the conflict. When a major city, San Francisco, in a referendum votes 37% for immediate withdrawal this is a stunning rebuke to the government. If young people between 18 and 21 could have voted they alone might have been a majority. But even more significantly, if the question had not offered only an extreme choice of immediate withdrawal, but included some of the many alternatives the government has rejected, no one could doubt that a substantial majority would have repudiated Washington's Policy. This is the position stated by the new Mayor of San Francisco. In addition to the isolation of the government from its people there is our national isolation in the world. We are without a single significant international ally. Every major nation has avoided active involvement on our side. We are more alone than we have been since the founding of the Republic. Lastly and more ironically, we are isolated from the very people whom we profess to support, the South Vietnamese. In their elections the prowar forces received less than one-third of the votes. In the countryside most of the area of South Vietnam is in the hands of the Vietcong and the army of South Vietnam has so reduced its role in the fighting it may shortly become the first pacifist army on a war front. The war that began with a few thousand Americans as advisors has become almost totally an American war without the consent of the American people. This is an historic isolation that cannot be rationalized by self-righteousness or the revival of unproved dangers of imminent aggression from China. China's incredible internal turmoil suggests it presently threatens only itself.

The war domestically has stimulated a profound discussion of the nature of our government. Important members of Congress and distinguished political scientists are questioning the trend toward excessive executive powers. Senator George McGovern has summed up these views in the following words: "Congress must never again surrender its power under our constitutional system by permitting an ill-advised undeclared war of this kind. Our involvement in South Vietnam came about through a series of moves by the executive branch—each one seemingly restrained and yet each one setting the stage for a deeper commitment. The complex of administration moves involving the State Department, the C.I.A., the Pentagon, A.I.D. and various private interests—all of these have played a greater role than has Congress. Congress cannot be proud of its function in the dreary history of this steadily widening war. That function has been one largely of acquiescence in little understood administrative efforts. The surveillance, the debate and the dissent since 1965, while courageous and admirable, came too late in the day to head off the foolish course charted by our policy-makers. For the future," the Senator concludes, "members of Congress and the Administration will do well to heed the admonition of Edmund Burke, a distinguished legislator of an earlier day: 'A conscientious man would be cautious how he dealt in blood.' "

The nature of our government is also under scrutiny by the young generation. I have spoken in recent years before hundreds of thousands of young people in their colleges, in the slums, and in churches and synagogues. Their comments and questions reflect a sharply rising body of opinion that the inability to influence government to adopt urgent reforms is not a consequence of any superficial ignorance, lethargy, or prejudice but is systemic. There is more serious discussion today about basic structural change in our society than I can recall over a decade.

We have thus far avoided a recrudescence of McCarthyism. It is constantly threatening but it has not yet been able to gain a secure foothold. It is not for lack of trying by the ubiquitous congressional committees. They are trying to bring down a blanket of intimidation, but a healthy resistance holds them in check. We must constantly be alert to this danger because if its evil is added to all the others we will have opened the door to other national disasters.

It is worth remembering that there is a strong strain of dissent in the American tradition even in time of war.

During the Mexican War the intellectual elite of the nation, Emerson, Thoreau, and many others were withering critics of National Policy. In the Congress a relatively unknown first term Congressman made a scathing address on the floor denouncing the war. The young Congressman was Abraham Lincoln of Illinois. At the same time a young army Lieutenant almost decided to resign his commission to protest the war. His name was Ulysses Grant.

To close my remarks and to illustrate basic optimism, I would like to repeat these most appropriate words of a great labor leader, Eugene Debs, when he stood before the court to be sentenced for opposing World War I:

"I can see the dawn of a better day for humanity. The people awakening in due course of time, will come to their own. When the mariner sailing over tropic seas, looks for release from his weary watch, he turns his eye towards the Southern Cross bearing luridly above the tempest tossed ocean. As the midnight approaches, the Southern Cross begins to bend, then the whirling worlds choose their places, and with starry fingerpoints, the almighty marks the page of time upon the dial of the universe and though no bell may beat the glad tiding, the lookout knows the midnight is passing—that relief and rest are close at hand. Let the people take heart and hope everywhere for the cross is bending, the midnight is passing and joy cometh with the morning."

VIETNAM IS UPON US—FEBRUARY 6, 1968

Fellow clergymen and laymen concerned about the war in Vietnam, my brothers and sisters, I need not pause to say how delighted I am to be here and how delighted I am to be in the midst of this fellowship of concern. It is a magnificent experience to see so many of you taking time out of what I am sure are busy schedules and coming to Washington to make a witness. I need not remind you that these are difficult days in which we live, and in these days of emotional tension when the problems of the world are gigantic in extent and chaotic in detail, the challenge which faces us more than ever before in the church and the synagogue is to take a stand for justice and for peace. From a scientific and technological point of view there can be no gainsaying of the fact that our nation has brought the whole world to an awe-inspiring threshold of the future. We have built machines that think and instruments that peer into the unfathomable regions of interstellar space. We have built Gargantuan bridges to span the seas and gigantic buildings to kiss the sky. Through our spaceships we have penetrated oceanic depths and through our airplanes we have dwarfed distance and placed time in chains. This is really a dazzling picture of American technological and scientific progress.

But in spite of this, something basic is missing and I just want to say a few words about that this afternoon. In spite of all of our scientific and technological progress we suffer from a kind of poverty of the spirit that stands in glaring contrast to all of our material abundance. This is the dilemma facing our nation and this is the dilemma to which we as clergymen and laymen must address ourselves. Each of us lives in two realms in life—the within and the without. The within of our lives is that realm of spiritual ends expressed in our literature, morals and religion. The without of our lives is that complex of devices, techniques, mechanisms and instrumentalities by means of which we live. The problem we face today is that we have allowed the within of our lives to become absorbed in the without. Henry David Thoreau said once something that still applies. In a very arresting dictum he talked about improved means for an unimproved end. And this is a tragedy that somewhere along the way as a nation we have allowed the means by which we live to outdistance the ends for which we live, and consequently we suffer from a spiritual and moral lag that must be redeemed if we are going to survive and maintain a moral stance.

Nothing convinces me more that we suffer this moral and spiritual lag than our participation as a nation in the war in Vietnam. Our involvement in this cruel, senseless, unjust war is a tragic expression of the spiritual lag of Americans. This is why we must be concerned about the war and its damaging effects—that we all know. We all know the war in Vietnam has strengthened the military and industrial complex of this nation. We know that the war in Vietnam has strengthened the forces of reaction in our nation. We know that the war in Vietnam has exasperated the tensions between the continents and between the races. And it does not help America nor its so-called image to be the most powerful and the richest nation in the world at war with one of the smallest and poorest nations in the world which happens to be a colored nation. And this is something that must be said over and over again, for a predominantly white nation to be at war with one of the poorest and smallest nations that happens to be a colored nation. This only leads a nation, leads America to a point of losing its own soul if something is not done. But not only that. The war in Vietnam has played havoc with our domestic destiny. We would think about the fact today that our government spends about $500,000 to kill every Vietcong soldier while we spend at the same time about $53 a year per person for everybody that is characterized as poverty stricken in the so-called war against poverty that is not even a good skirmish against poverty.

And we can look around and see how we find ourselves with mixed up priorities. President Johnson raised the question the other day, the other night rather, when he gave his State of the Union address. He talked about the 70,000,000 televisions in our country. He talked about all the beautiful new highways and the beautiful new cars—about eight million a year that are flowing down these highways; he talked about our material abundance. And then he said something that needs an answer when he went on to say that yet, there is a restlessness in the land. He said that there is so much questioning. And I would like to say that there is a restlessness in the land because the land doesn't seem to have a sense of purpose, a proper sense of policy, and a proper sense of priority. This is the basis for this restlessness. The words of Jesus are still applicable, "What does it profit a generation, what does it profit a nation" to own the whole world of means, television, automobiles, electric lights, and in the end lose the soul. And the words of Jesus are still true in another sense. Man cannot live by the bread of color television alone, but by every word, the word of love, the word of justice, the word of truth, every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God. And the problem is that all too many people in power are trying to get America to live on the wrong things.

This is why we are moving in the wrong direction. And this war is playing havoc with our domestic destiny. For all of these reasons we are fighting two wars today—one is the unjust war in Vietnam. We are not winning that war there because it is clearly an unwinnable war. And certainly we are not winning the other war we are supposed to be fighting, namely, the war against poverty. We are not winning that war because we are attempting to win a war 8,000 miles away from home, and because there are all too many people not willing to grapple with the problems of the poor. There are some wars in which the people ought to be conscientious objectors and if I had to make the decision, I would be a conscientious objector in the war in Vietnam. But there are other wars in which we cannot be conscientious objectors and all too many people are trying to be conscientious objectors in the war against poverty. Everybody ought to be involved in that.

Not only has the war played havoc with our domestic destinies, but it has played havoc with the destiny of the whole world. And somehow, somewhere, we must come to see this. I said sometime ago, and the press jumped on me about it, but I want to say it today one more time and I am very sad to say it: we live in a nation that is the greatest purveyor of violence in the world today. Any nation that spends almost $80 billion of its annual budget for defense channeled through the Pentagon and hands out a pittance here and there for social uplift is moving toward its own spiritual doom. I say it over and over again, that something must be changed. We have played havoc with the destiny of the world and we have brought the whole world closer to a nuclear confrontation. Somewhere we must make it clear that we are concerned about the survival of the world in the days when sputniks and gemini are dashing through outer space and guided ballistic missiles are causing highways of death through the stratosphere, when no nation can ultimately win a war. It is no longer a choice between violence and non-violenece. It is either non-violence or non-existence, and the alternative to disarmament, the alternative to a great suspension of nuclear tests, the alternative to strengthening the United Nations and thereby disarming the whole world will be a civilization plunged into the abyss of annihilation, and our earthly habitat will be transformed into an inferno that even the mind of Dante could not envision. We have to see that and work diligently and passionately for peace. You know that in the freedom movement we have a song that we sing based on the Negro spiritual and I hope that we will continue to sing that song and sing it in the peace movement. Somehow we have got to sing that "I ain't gonna' let nobody turn me round." And we must make it clear to America and make it clear to the Government and to the courts that we as clergymen and laymen support Bill Coffin absolutely and those others who face these blunderbuss conspiracy charges and these indictments. We must make that clear to the nation.

Yes, we aren't going to let anybody or anything turn us around. And in this just cause and this just struggle for peace we are not going to let any indictments turn us around; we are not going to let this attempt to crush dissent turn us around; we are not going to let those who say they are trying to identify dissent with disloyalty, we are not going to let them turn us around. And I have come to the point of saying that we are not going to let jailhouses turn us around if it is necessary. If this war in Vietnam is not ended, we are going to be in the position of a nation having some of its finest young men in this nation in jail. A poll was taken a few weeks ago at Harvard, one of the great universities of the world, where 24% of the students polled said that they would rather go to jail or leave the country before they would serve in the war in Vietnam. Then 96% of those polled said that they opposed the administration's policy in Vietnam and this is happening all over. Young men finding this war objectionable and abominable are rising up and saying that we in good conscience cannot serve in it. And we as clergymen, we as ministers, rabbis and priests must forever stand with these young men in their moments of conscience. We were ordained to do that.

I am still convinced that the struggle for peace and the struggle for civil rights as we call it in America happen to be tied together. These two issues are tied together in many, many ways. It is a wonderful thing to work to integrate lunch counters, public accommodations and schools. But it would be rather absurd to work to get schools and lunch counters integrated and not be concerned with the survival of a world in which to integrate. And I am convinced that these two issues are tied inextricably together and I feel that the people who are working for civil rights are working for peace; I feel that the people working for peace are working for civil rights and justice.

We have a grave problem in our country—that an economic depression is alive right now. It happens to be poor people and therefore it is not called a depression. When poor people and Negroes are way down in a depressing situation economically we call it a social ill but when white people get massively unemployed, we call it a depression. The Negro is facing a depression. The statistics would reveal that the unemployment rate in the Negro community is about 8.4%. What they do not reveal is the fact that their statistics are complied on the basis of people who go to employment offices to find a job or those who were formerly in the labor market. They do not deal with what we call the discouraged people who have given up, people who have had so many doors closed in their faces, people who have lost all motivation, and come to feel that life is a long and desolate corridor with no exit signs. So they don't go out to look for a job and so for these people the unemployment rate in the adult black community is probably 16% to 17%. And when you get to the Negro youth the unemployment is probably between 30% and sometimes goes up as high as 40%. Now this is a depression more staggering than the depression of the thirties. Not only is the problem unemployment. There is even a greater problem, underemployment. Most of the people who are poor in this country are working every day and that is not said enough. They are working here in Washington and in all of our cities. Working in our hotels they clean up our rooms when we go to our hotels across the country for our meetings. They work in our hospitals, they work in our homes. Most of them are domestic workers. Most of them are working every day, working sometimes sixty hours a week, working full-time jobs and getting part-time incomes. These are problems that are very real.

We have developed an underclass in this nation and unless this underclass is made a working class we are going to continue to have problems. Now the bitterness is very deep as a result of these problems. We of the Southern Leadership Conference feel that we cannot stand idly by while these problems continue to grow and not take a stand against them. We feel that it is time now to take a Selma-type or Birmingham-type movement to bear on the economic problems confronting the poor people of our nation. When I say poor people I am not only talking about black people. I am aware of the fact that there are poor people on a large scale in the Puerto Rican community. I am talking about the Mexican community, the Indian community; I am talking about the Appalachian white community; I am talking about poor people's power.●

ORDERS FOR TOMORROW

RECESS UNTIL 11 A.M.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate completes its business today, it stand in recess until 11 a.m. on Wednesday, January 22, 1986.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

RECOGNITION OF CERTAIN SENATORS

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, following the two leaders under the standing order, I ask unanimous consent there be a special orders in favor of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. PROXMIRE] and the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. COCHRAN] for not to exceed 15 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ROUTINE MORNING BUSINESS

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, following the special orders, I further ask unanimous consent there be a period for the transaction of routine morning business not to extend beyond 12 noon, with Senators permitted to speak therein for not more than 5 minutes each.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

PROGRAM

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, following routine morning business, the Senate will resume consideration of the motion by the distinguished Senator from Ohio to proceed to Conrail. Also, the Senate could turn to any legislative or executive calendar items that could be cleared. I say that in hopes we might be able to dispose of some other business tomorrow.

There are a number of possibilities, but not strong possibilities: a drug export bill, a sports franchise bill. But unless we can reach some agreement, they are unlikely to be considered tomorrow.

If so, I assume that we could have rollcall votes. If not, I assume that the first rollcall vote will come about 1 o'clock on Thursday, which would be a cloture vote.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, will the distinguished majority leader yield?

Mr. DOLE. I yield.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, the distinguished majority leader indicated near the end of the last session, in response to a question from me, that legislation to provide television in the Senate would be called up very early in this session. That is Senate Resolution 28 on the Calendar, reported by the Rules Committee. It is a resolution that I introduced on behalf of myself, Mr. GORE, and others.

Can the distinguished majority leader tell me at this point whether or not we may be able to proceed to S. 28 in the Senate this week?

Mr. DOLE. I could not tell the distinguished minority leader at this point, but I doubt that it would be this week. Unless we can reach some agreement, I do not think that is possible. I understand that the distinguished Senator from Louisiana and others on this side may wish to discuss that bill for a considerable length of time. But I do hope to take it up very early, maybe after disposition of Conrail.

Mr. BYRD. I hope that the majority leader can do that.

Mr. DOLE. It seems to me, in line with the thinking of the distinguished minority leader, that if we do not do it early, it may not be of any value this year. If we are going to have a test period, we should do it as early as we can.

Mr. BYRD. Yes; I thank the distinguished majority leader.

I know that once we get into the next month or 6 weeks, we are going to have budget matters and other things rolling in on us. So, I hope that the Senate can proceed to the consideration of Senate Resolution 28 at a very early date.

I am very satisfied with the promise and assurance of the distinguished majority leader that Senate Resolution 28 will be called up very soon, and I hope that occurs immediately following whatever action is finally taken on Conrail, if not before.

Mr. DOLE. Just one caveat: In the event this should be delayed for some time, we would be back into something else; but if we are able to dispose of this within a reasonable time, I should think we would have a window for TV in the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair believes there may be one pending unanimous-consent request by the majority leader, and hearing no objection, it is granted.

Mr. DOLE. I indicate for the RECORD that the unanimous-consent request was with reference to the transaction of routine morning business not to extend beyond noon. We will then proceed with the motion.

Again, I do not know of any votes on the Conrail matter. But if we are able to reach some agreement on some other piece of legislation, there could be votes on Wednesday. If not, the vote on cloture will occur on Thursday, in any event.

RECESS UNTIL 11 A.M. TOMORROW

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, there being no further business to come before the Senate, I move that the Senate stand in recess until 11 a.m. on Wednesday, January 22.

The motion was agreed to, and at 5:53 p.m., the Senate recessed until tomorrow, Wednesday, January 22, 1986, at 11 a.m.

WITHDRAWALS

Executive nominations withdrawn by the President on January 21, 1986:

NATIONAL ENDOWMENT FOR THE HUMANITIES

Edward A. Curran, of Maryland, to be chairman of the National Endowment for the Humanities for a term of 4 years, vice William J. Bennett, which was sent to the Senate on April 5, 1985.

NATIONAL TRANSPORTATION SAFETY BOARD

Vernon L. Grose, of California, to be a member of the National Transportation Safety Board for the term expiring December 31, 1987, vice Francis H. McAdams, term expired, which was sent to the Senate on January 3, 1985.

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

THE CONSUMER FRAUD ACT OF 1985

HON. BENJAMIN A. GILMAN

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 21, 1986

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, I recently introduced legislation to protect the consumer from unfair or deceptive commercial practices. H.R. 3913, the Consumer Fraud Act of 1985, has the following four main provisions designed to identify consumer fraud and punish those responsible:

First, it would define consumer fraud.

Second, consumer fraud would constitute grounds for cancellation of a contract between an individual consumer or a small businessman and a seller. If a consumer suffered a loss as the result of fraud, treble damages could be recovered from the responsible party.

Third, State attorneys general could sue, as parent patriae for the citizens of their State, to enjoin the continuation of any consumer fraud and to recover damages, which may be distributed to damaged parties under direction of the court. The Attorney General of the United States could also bring such suits.

Fourth, consumer fraud would be a Federal crime, which either the U.S. Justice Department or State attorneys general could prosecute in State or Federal court.

Mr. Speaker, I ask my colleagues to please bear in mind that this bill will neither establish new Federal agencies nor authorize appropriations. H.R. 3913 simply provides the proper law enforcement bodies, at both the State and Federal level, with the ability to institute legal proceedings.

I have introduced the Consumer Fraud Act of 1985 in response to the incredible volume of consumer fraud being perpetrated upon the American public. The bill will assist consumers in protecting themselves against unfair or deceptive trade practices, allowing a defrauded consumer to void a contract, and to sue for treble damages with legal fees. Should the seller or his agent use either communication or transportation, including the mails, for distribution or collection of the product, they may then be subject to either a $10,000 fine for an individual, a $500,000 fine for an organization, or a 3-year prison term, or both, These stringent penalties should serve to stop those who willfully attempt to defraud customers.

Mr. Speaker, I insert the text of H.R. 3913 in the RECORD and I invite my colleagues to study it carefully and to follow with their strong support:

H.R. 3913

A bill to regulate commerce and to prohibit unfair or deceptive acts or practices in commerce, and for other purposes

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SHORT TITLE

SECTION 1. This Act may be cited as the "Consumer Fraud Act of 1985".

DEFINITIONS

SEC. 2. For purposes of this Act:

(1) The term "commerce" means trade, traffic, commerce, or transportation—

(A) between a place in a State and any place outside such State;

(B) which affects trade, traffic, commerce, or transportation described in subparagraph (A); and

(C) within the District of Columbia or within any territory or possession of the United States.

(2) The term "consumer" means any individual who is offered or supplied any goods or services for personal, family, or household purposes, and any small business concern which is offered or supplied any goods or services for use in connection with the business of such concern.

(3) The term "goods" means personal and real property, but such term does not include securities or interests in securities.

(4) The term "organization" means an entity, other than a government, established or organized for any purpose, and includes a corporation, company, association, firm, partnership, joint stock company, foundation, institution, trust, estate, society, union, club, church, and any other association of persons.

(5) The term "sale" means any transfer of goods or services in exchange for anything of value.

(6) The term "services" means any benefit resulting from the labor, skill, or time of another person or from the use of property, including labor, professional service, transportation, telephone, mail, other public service, electricity, gas, other public utility service, banking, accommodations in hotels, restaurants, or other places, admission to exhibitions, performances, or other places, and the use of property owned by another person.

(7) The term "small business concern" shall have the meaning given it in section 3 of the Small Business Act (15 U.S.C. 632).

(8) The term "State" means each of the several States, the District of Columbia, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, Guam, the Virgin Islands, American Samoa, the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands, the Northern Mariana Islands, and any other territory or possession of the United States.

(9) The term "State attorney general" means the chief legal officer of a State, or any other person authorized by State law to bring actions under section 4 or section 5. Such term includes the Corporation Counsel of the District of Columbia. Such term does not include any person employed or retained—

(A) for a contingency fee based on a percentage of the monetary relief awarded in the action involved; or

(B) on any other contingency fee basis, unless, in the case of actions brought under section 4(a)(1), the amount of the award of a reasonable attorney fee to a prevailing plaintiff is determined by the court under section 4(d)(1).

(10) The term "statement" means any representation in any form of advertising, any oral or visual presentation, or any other representation, presentation, or conduct which is communicated to consumers.

(11) The term "supplier" means any person who is in the business of making goods or services available to consumers.

(12) The term "unfair consumer practice" means any of the following:

(A) offering or advertising goods or services for sale to a consumer and not selling such goods or services as so offered or advertised, or without ability to supply reasonably expectable public demands, unless the offer or advertisement clearly and conspicuously discloses the limitation;

(B) making false or misleading statements with respect to goods or services which are offered for sale or sold to a consumer with respect to—

(i) the need for such goods or services;

(ii) the need for repair or replacement of such goods or services;

(iii) rights, privileges, or remedies, in connection with the purchase of such goods or services;

(iv) prior ownership of such goods or services;

(v) the grade, age, quality, style, standard, or model of such goods or services; or

(vi) price or quality comparisons with similar goods or services offered for sale to consumers by the same or another supplier;

(C) making a statement that goods or services offered for sale, or sold to consumers, have sponsorship, approval, origin, safety or performance characteristics, ingredients or components, uses, features, benefits, or qualities which the goods or services do not have;

(D) accepting consideration for goods or services and failing to deliver such goods or perform such services as promised or failing to return or refund deposits or advance payments for goods or services which are not rendered in absence of any default or breach of obligation on the part of the consumer making such deposits or advance payments;

(E) using physical force, threat of physical force, tortious threats or harassment, or misrepresentation of law in the course of a sale or attempted sale to a consumer of goods or services or in the course of collection of the purchase price or any portion of the purchase price of goods and services from a consumer;

(F) making a statement that goods are original or new if such goods are deteriorated, altered, reconditioned, reclaimed, or otherwise used; or

(G) making any false or misleading statement with respect to the reasons for, existence of, or amount of, any price reduction in connection with the sale of any goods or services.

SANCTIONS RELATING TO UNFAIR CONSUMER PRACTICES

SEC. 3. (a) Any contract or agreement in commerce which provides for the purchase of goods or services and which results from a transaction involving an unfair consumer practice by a supplier may be voided by the affected consumer.

(b) Any person who induces a consumer to enter into a contract or agreement pursuant to or in furtherance of an unfair consumer practice shall be liable to such consumer in an amount equal to 300 percent of the damage or loss sustained, together with an amount equal to the cost of any legal action required (including a reasonable attorney fee). Such amount may be recovered in a civil action in an appropriate district court of the United States or in any State court of competent jurisdiction.

(c) The district courts of the United States may have jurisdiction of any action brought under this section without regard to the citizenship of the parties or the amount in controversy. An action under this section may be brought not later than three years after the date on which the unfair consumer practice was discovered or reasonably should have been discovered.

ACTIONS BY STATE ATTORNEYS GENERAL

SEC. 4. (a)(1) Any State attorney general may bring a civil action in the name of the State, as parents patriae on behalf of consumers residing in the State, in any district court of the United States having jurisdiction over the defendant or in any State court of competent jurisdiction, to secure monetary relief as provided for in this section for any damage or loss—

(A) which is sustained by such consumers by reason of an unfair consumer practice; and

(B) with respect to which an action may be brought by any injured party under section 3.

(2) An action under this section may be brought not later than three years after the date on which the unfair consumer practice was discovered or reasonably should have been discovered.

(3) The court shall exclude from the amount of monetary relief awarded in any action brought under paragraph (1) any amount of monetary relief which—

(A) duplicates amounts which have been awarded for the same damage or loss; or

(B) is properly allocable to consumers who have excluded their claims in accordance with subsection (b)(2).

(4) The court shall award to the State as monetary relief an amount equal to 300 percent of the total damage or loss sustained, together with an amount equal to the cost of the action (including a reasonable attorney fee).

(b)(1) In any action brought under subsection (a)(1), the State attorney general shall, at such times, in such manner, and with such content, as the court may direct, cause notice of such action to be given by publication. If the court finds that notice by publication would deny due process of law to any person, the court may direct further notice to any such person according to the circumstances of the case.

(2) Any person on whose behalf an action is brought under subsection (a)(1) may elect to exclude from adjudication the portion of the State claim for monetary relief attributable to such person by filing notice of such election with the court not later than the end of the period specified in the notice given under paragraph (1).

(3) The final judgment in any action brought under subsection (a)(1) shall be res judicata as to any claim based upon an unfair consumer practice under this Act by any person on behalf of whom such action was brought and who fails to give the notice specified in paragraph (2) before the end of the period specified in the notice given under paragraph (1).

(c) Any action brought under subsection (a)(1) may not be dismissed or compromised without the approval of the court. Notice of any proposed dismissal or compromise shall be given in such manner as the court directs.

(d) In any action brought under subsection (a)(1)—

(1) the amount of any attorney fee to the prevailing plaintiff shall be determined by the court; and

(2) the court may, in its discretion, award a reasonable attorney fee to a dependent upon a finding that the State attorney general has acted in bad faith, vexatiously, wantonly, or for oppressive reasons.

(e) Any monetary relief recovered in any action brought under subsection (a)(1) shall—

(1) be distributed in such manner as the district court in its discretion may authorize; or

(2) be deemed a civil penalty by the court and deposited with the State as general revenues; subject to the requirement that any distribution procedure adopted by the court shall afford each person involved a reasonable opportunity to secure his appropriate portion of the net monetary relief.

INJUNCTIVE RELIEF

SEC. 5. The Attorney General of the United States, the appropriate United States attorney, the Postal Service, or the State attorney general of any State in which a prohibited act or practice occurred (as parens patriae of the people of such State, after notifying the Attorney General of the United States) may, upon a finding that any person is engaged or is about to engage in any act or practice which constitutes an unfair consumer practice, may issue subpenas, and bring an action in the appropriate district court of the United States, or in any State court of competent jurisdiction, to enjoin such act or practice. Such courts shall have jurisdiction over such actions and shall provide appropriate relief. Such courts may grant a temporary restraining order, or a preliminary or permanent injunction without bond.

AMENDMENTS TO TITLE 18, UNITED STATES CODE

SEC. 6. (a) Chapter 63 of title 18, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"§ 1346. Unfair consumer practices

"(a)(1) Whoever, in connection with the sale, attempted sale, or distribution of goods or services to a consumer, or in connection with the collection or attempted collection of the purchase price or any portion of the purchase price of goods or services by the use of any means or instrumentality of transportation or communication in commerce including the use of the mails, willfully or negligently engages in an unfair consumer practice, shall be fined not more than $100,000 if an individual, or not more than $500,000 if an organization, or imprisoned for not more than three years, or both.

"(2) For purposes of this subsection, the terms 'commerce,' 'consumer', 'goods', 'organization', 'sale', 'services', and 'unfair consumer practice' have the meanings given them in section 2 of the Consumer Fraud Act of 1985.

"(b)(1) Each State attorney general shall have authority to bring an action, in the name of the United States, in an appropriate district court of the United States or in any State court of competent jurisdiction to enforce the provisions of this section.

"(2) In any case in which a State attorney general brings an action under paragraph (1), the State attorney general shall give notice of the commencement of such action to the United States by—

"(A) submitting a copy of the complaint involved to the Attorney General of the United States (by registered mail or certified mail) and to the United States attorney for the district in which such action is commenced; and

"(B) submitting a written disclosure of any evidence or information in his possession which is material to the effective prosecution of such action, to such United States attorney or by registered mail or certified mail to the Attorney General.

"(3)(A) The Attorney General may enter an appearance in any action brought under paragraph (1) during the 45-day period following the receipt of notice under paragraph (2). The State attorney general involved may prosecute such action if the Attorney General fails to enter such an appearance before the end of such period, or notifies the court in writing during such period that the Attorney General will not enter such an appearance.

"(B) If the Attorney General enters an appearance in an action in accordance with subparagraph (A), then the action shall be prosecuted by or under the direction of the Attorney General. The Attorney General shall not be bound by any action taken by the State attorney general involved, and may proceed in such action as if such action had been commenced by the Attorney General.

"(C) If the Attorney General fails to prosecute an action with due diligence during the six-month period following the entry of an appearance by the Attorney General in accordance with subparagraph (A), or during such additional period as the court after notice may allow, then such action may be prosecuted by the State attorney general involved in accordance with paragraph (1).

"(4) For purposes of this subsection, the term 'State attorney general' means the chief legal officer of a State, or any other person authorized by State law to bring actions under this subsection.".

(b) The table of sections for chapter 63 of title 18, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new item:

"1346. Unfair consumer practices.".

SPECIAL EDUCATION PROGRAMS

HON. LEE H. HAMILTON

OF INDIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 21, 1986

Mr. HAMILTON. Mr. Speaker, I would like to insert my Washington Report for Wednesday, January 1, 1986, into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD:

SPECIAL EDUCATION PROGRAMS

During the mid-1960s, I was struck by the number of parents in every part of the district asking for better public school programs for their handicapped children. Few schools had adequate special education programs, and many had none at all. The handicapped were often overlooked and not provided basic training. Today the situation has changed dramatically. Handicapped children have been integrated into the public schools, giving them a new sense of self-esteem while giving others increased levels of understanding. The catalyst was passage by Congress in 1975 of the Education for All Handicapped Children Act, Public Law 94-142. Looking back over the past ten years, I can see remarkable progress. But looking ahead, I see several challenges remaining.

Public Law 94-142 requires states to provide a free and appropriate public education to every handicapped child aged 5-17. To receive federal aid, states must ensure that handicapped children are educated in the least restrictive environment possible, with the goal of "mainstreaming" them into regular classes. Today 68 percent of all handicapped students are in regular school classes and get only support services; 25 percent are in separate classes in the school. The law requires schools to evaluate students for handicapping conditions, and to develop with parents a plan describing the program and objectives for the student as well as any support services that might be required. A system of hearings and appeals is provided for dissatisfied parents.

Before Public Law 94-142, the federal government was spending less than $50 million each year on special education. It now spends more than $1.3 billion annually. Almost 4.3 million handicapped children, 100,000 in Indiana, receive some form of special education. Both figures represent 10 percent of the, public school population. The largest category in the program is the learning disabled, followed by the speech impaired, mentally retarded, emotionally disturbed, hearing impaired, and other physically handicapped. Over the past ten years, the number of special education teachers and support personnel nationwide has almost doubled to more than 500,000. Although the federal government proposed paying by 1982, 40 percent of the national average per-pupil expenditure to schools for educating the handicapped, their actual contribution has recently been closer to 10 percent. In 1982, the Reagan Administration proposed weakening the program through various regulatory changes, though it has since dropped the proposal.

Contrary to fears expressed when Public Law 94-142 was first proposed, it has not led to a major federal intrusion into education—an area traditionally left to state and local governments. The courts have reaffirmed that decisions on specific school programs for the handicapped will be basically left to state and local education officials. The federal role has been primarily one of trying to ensure the access of the handicapped to public education, without imposing upon the states major new education standards.

A major problem facing the special education program is its high cost. Overall, it costs twice as much to educate a handicapped student than a traditional student. The potential for high costs arises especially with private placements when local education services are inappropriate and with "related services"—the transportation, corrective, and other support services that help a child benefit from the special education programs. In one state, for example, 25 percent of its school transportation budget is spent on handicapped children, though they make up only 3 percent of its school population. Schools facing major problems among their traditional students—including low achievement test scores and high drop-out rates—are faced with increasingly difficult funding decisions about programs for the handicapped.

Recent Supreme Court decisions have stated that there are limits to the amounts schools must spend on the handicapped, recognizing that an exorbitant amount on one child at the expense of all others. However, the Court has also held that schools can be required to provide supportive services that are not a major burden on school officials. The task for schools has been made more difficult by the federal government picking up only about a quarter of its proposed share. A new concern is the possible impact of the recently-passed Gramm-Rudman balanced budget amendment, which mandates sharp cuts in overall federal spending over the next 5 years to achieve a balanced federal budget by 1991. Although many programs (such as social security) are exempt from the required cuts, Public Law 94-142 is not one of them.

The program faces other challenges as well. Many students who are only slow learners are put into programs for the learning disabled, and heavy paperwork requirements tend to bog down school systems. Some school officials are also concerned that pending legislation in Congress to provide attorney fees for successful suits by parents against school programs for the handicapped could erode incentives to settle disagreements through the existing administrative procedures and could divert school resources to legal expenses. There is also the problem of a shortage of qualified special education personnel—currently estimated at 60,000 teachers and staff—that has at times lowered personnel standards. Many believe that the requirements of Public Law 94-142 are inadequate, urging that the program be extended to handicapped children younger than 5 years old because of the major benefits of early instruction. Perhaps the greatest challenge facing the program is the transition of the handicapped students from school to society after graduation, as many students are still ill-prepared for entering the workforce.

Despite these problems, my sense is that the 10-year-old program has worked remarkably well. We have made major strides, and the question has shifted from whether we should educate the handicapped to how we can best do it. Improving the program will take a concerted effort by all involved, especially parents, teachers, and state and local school officials. The federal government should ensure adequate funding levels, and local businesses can help by improving training experiences for the handicapped. Although the tasks remaining are formidable ones, visiting any of the school programs, as I have assures you that the effort is worthwhile.

DAUGHTER OF SAN SEBASTIAN

HON. BILL FRENZEL

OF MINNESOTA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 21, 1986

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Speaker, Laurie Brown, of Coon Rapids, MN, a Minneapolis suburb, completed a 2-year Peace Corps assignment in the Philippines in 1985.

Her experience, in the town of Matag-ob, in Leyte Province, was typical of the Peace Corps. The work was hard, the privations were many, the pay was poor.

Often she found that when she could help to make life better for the people with whom she worked, it was in ways which had little relationship to her skills and education. Other assets, like adaptability, patience, courtesy, judgment, and love were often more important than training.

When her time was up, the people with whom she worked drew a resolution of thanks to Laurie Brown. It calls her an "Ambassador of Goodwill," cites her good work, and designates her as a "true daughter of our Barangay of San Sebastian."

Laurie's unique experience has left her with more than a flowery resolution. She also has a heart full of memories, lots of friends, new self-reliance, and a sense of real accomplishment.

Laurie Brown and her friends in San Sebastian Barangay are not the only ones to profit from the past 2 years, however. The really big winners are the people of the United States who sent her, and who annually send hundreds of Americans all over the world to prove that the United States is not only a great country, but a good one as well.

Laurie Brown's resolution follows:

REPUBLIC OF THE PHILIPPINES, PROVINCE OF LEYTE, MUNICIPALITY OF MATAG-OB, BGY. SAN SEBASTIAN

To all to whom these presents shall come:

We, the undersigned signatories, all citizens of the Republic of the Philippines and all residents particularly of Barangay San Sebastian, of the Municipality of Matag-ob, Province of Leyte, Philippines, by virtue of this simple document do hereby by these presents express our heartfelt feelings of gratitude and warmest regards to the Good People of America (the United States of America) through its Peace Corps Volunteer Program for the show of genuine, deep and sincere concern over our welfare, we who are otherwise known and classified, as the "poor, impoverished, ignorant, suffering or miserable", segments on our Philippine Society, by way of having made available in our midst for almost two (2) years, one of their truest Ambassadors of Goodwill in the person of Miss Lorie Brown, who despite our shortcomings and ways of life have steadfastly withstood the rigors of our economic conditions (depressed, distressed and underserved), in the process of letting us awaken once more to the realities that regardless of how little we are in life, the Good People of the United States of America do wholeheartedly consider us, as a true brother and sister.

Witnesseth: Miss Lorie Brown throughout her sojourn with us, taught us not only to be proud of what we are, of the rudiments of upland farming, of love towards our neighbors, of health and care to ourselves and family, of genuine love towards manual labor, of preserving, conserving and protecting our natural resources but above all of our attitude towards life in general.

The exemplary acts of Miss Lorie Brown, on her personal concern even to the care of the sick and needy members of our society, more particularly on our impoverished Barangay of San Sebastian maybe paralleled by someone, yet the warmness of her heart, her closeness and tenderness as shown to us the aged and of the young ones in life, even as she goes around one of her daily chores as in carrying over her frail but lovely shoulder a plastic container full of water and of the moments she goes home to us from her official trips to other places, will forever outlast our memory and continue to live on the hearts of our children.

Wherefore: By virtue of these show of filial love of Miss Lorie Brown to us, we the undersigned signatories, do hereby by these presents bestow and acknowledge our deepest feelings of gratitude and thanks to her and as we cannot repay her or recompense her, of her boundless love and devotion and of her sincerity towards us, we in complete unison unanimously would want to show to the whole world that beginning this date, we do hereby acknowledge and adopt Miss Lorie Brown as a true daughter of our Barangay of San Sebastian.

ANTI-TERRORIST TRAVEL ADVISORY RESOLUTION INTRODUCED

HON. MEL LEVINE

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 21, 1986

Mr. LEVINE of California. Mr. Speaker, I am today introducing a sense of Congress resolution, along with my colleague, Mr. LEWIS of California, stating that the U.S. Secretary of State should issue a travel advisory warning U.S. citizens of the dangers of traveling in any country in which U.S. citizens are attacked by terrorists supported by Libya, if the Government of that country does not act immediately to close any Libyan diplomatic and trade missions there.

Mr. Speaker, as we all know, on December 27, 1985, 12 U.S. citizens were wounded and five murdered in cold-blooded attacks at the Rome and Vienna airports. The individuals who carried out these attacks were members of the Libyan-backed Palestinian terrorist gang, headed by Abu Nidal. Libyan leader Mu'ammar Qadhafi applauded and praised these attacks.

In response to these heinous attacks, President Reagan severed virtually all trade links with Libya, froze its assets in the United States and ordered the more than 1,000 Americans working there to leave immediately. He also said that the United States would "not understand" if other countries moved into Libya "to take commercial advantage of our departure." In addition, he called on our NATO allies to join us in isolating Libya and its outlaw leader, Colonel Qadhafi.

However, no European country has fully endorsed President Reagan's call for total economic sanctions against Libya. In fact, our allies have been cool to leveling sanctions against Colonel Qadhafi and his country. Deputy Secretary of State John Whitehead was dispatched last week to visit nine of our NATO allies in the hope of persuading them to reduce their ties with Libya. Unfortunately, reports of his efforts are not very encouraging.

Mr. Speaker, on January 8, 1986, the U.S. Department of State issued a report called "Libyan Sanctions." It documents in detail what one columnist meant when he wrote that next to oil, terror appears to be Libya's main export. There are sections such as "Libyan Involvement in Terrorism," "Libyan Links to Middle East Radicals," and "Libyan Terrorism Against the United States." There are sections that document Libyan terrorist aid and activities in Egypt, Sudan, Tunisia, Sub-Saharan Africa, Latin America, and the Caribbean, and South and Southeast Asia. It includes a chronology of Libyan-supported terrorism between 1980 and 1985. I urge my colleagues to read it.

What this report makes clear is that Libyan leader Mu'ammar Qadhafi has used terrorism as one of the primary instruments of his foreign policy and that he supports radical groups which use terrorist tactics. Qadhafi's activities include threats, material support for terrorism, cooperation, economic incentives and intimidation, and military aggression. He provides logistical support for terrorist operations, such as supplying passports to the Abu Nidal members responsible for the December attack on the El Al ticket counter in Vienna.

Training for radical Palestinians and other radical elements frequently takes place in Libya. During Qadhafi's reign there have been numerous instances of Libyan-sponsored attacks against U.S. interests, and during the past 18 months Qadhafi has made public references to expanding his terrorism campaign to include U.S. targets.

Mr. Speaker, the responsible international community suffers from Qadhafi's disrespect for international norms of behavior and accepted diplomatic practices. Qadhafi blatantly uses terrorist violence against political opponents and has abused diplomatic privilege for terrorist purposes, such as using Libyan embassies and diplomatic pouches for transferring and storing weapons and explosives.

Colonel Qadhafi's support for terrorist acts has clearly jeopardized the safety of U.S. citizens. It is clearly the responsibility of the U.S. Government to protect the safety of all our citizens, at all times and in all places. In addition, it is in the interest of the responsible world community to isolate Libya economically, politically, and militarily to the greatest extent possible.

Yet we have not been able to get our NATO allies to join us in isolating the outlaw Qadhafi.

That is why Congressman LEWIS and I are introducing this resolution today. We simply must find a way to encourage our allies to take sanctions against the Qadhafis of the world. One way to do that is through economic sanctions. U.S. tourists spend millions of U.S. dollars in foreign countries. Issuance of a travel advisory results in the loss of millions of dollars in revenues in that country for which that advisory is issued. If countries where U.S. citizens are attacked do not reduce their ties with Libya, and do not make their country safe for U.S. citizens, then it is entirely appropriate for the U.S. Government to take action to protect our own people.

Mr. Speaker, this is a responsible resolution. If the U.S. Secretary of State issues travel advisories for such countries, I believe we would see a far different response to terrorism by our allies. The United States issued a travel advisory for Greece last June after the TWA hijacking out of Athens. Greece lost enough U.S. revenue to encourage it to quickly overhaul the security at Athens airport. If the Secretary had issued travel advisories for Italy and Austria after the attacks on U.S. citizens last June, perhaps they would feel compelled to take actions to make their countries safer.

In short, Mr. Speaker, we must find a way to encourage our allies to overcome what columnist Charles Krauthammer calls "Eurocrowardice" in dealing with terrorists and terrorism. We must find a way to isolate the outlaw Qadhafi from the responsible world community. This resolution will help do that, and I urge my colleagues to support it.

A complete text of the resolution follows.

Thank you.

H. CON. RES. 270

Concurrent resolution expressing the sense of the Congress that the Secretary of State should issue a travel advisory with respect to any country in which Libyan-supported terrorists attack United States citizens if that country's government fails to act immediately to require the closing of any Libyan diplomatic or trade missions in that country

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring),

Whereas the increase in international terrorism is of deep concern to the United States and to the responsible world community;

Whereas Libyan leader Mu'ammar Qadhafi has used terrorism as one of the primary instruments of this foreign policy and supports radical groups which use terrorist tactics;

Whereas Qadhafi's tactics include a mixture of threats, material support for terrorism, offers of cooperation, economic incentives and intimidation, and outright military aggression;

Whereas Qadhafi provides logistical support for terrorist operations, such as supplying passports to the Abu Nidal members responsible for the attack on the El Al ticket counter in Vienna;

Whereas training for radical Palestinians and other radical elements frequently takes place in Libya;

Whereas during Qadhafi's reign there have been numerous instances of Libyan-sponsored attacks against United States interests;

Whereas during the past 18 months Qadhafi has made several public references to expanding his terrorism campaign to include United States targets;

Whereas Qadhafi has applauded and praised the recent terrorist attacks in Vienna and Rome, which resulted in the death of 5 Americans and the injury of 12 Americans;

Whereas the responsible international community suffers from Qadhafi's disrespect for international norms of behavior and accepted diplomatic practices;

Whereas Qadhafi blatantly uses terrorist violence against political opponents and has abused diplomatic privilege for terrorist purposes, such as using Libyan embassies and diplomatic pouches for transferring and storing weapons and explosives;

Whereas Qadhafi's support for terrorist acts has clearly jeopardized the safety of United States citizens;

Whereas it is clearly the responsibility of the United States Government to protect the safety of all its citizens, at all times and in all places; and

Whereas it is in the interest of the responsible world community to isolate Libya economically, politically, and militarily, to the greatest extent possible: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That it is the sense of the Congress that the Secretary of State should issue a travel advisory warning United States citizens of the dangers of traveling in any country in which United States citizens are attacked by terrorists supported by Libya if the government of that country fails to act immediately to require the closing of any Libyan diplomatic or trade missions in that country.

A SALUTE TO BLACK EDUCATORS

HON. GEORGE E. BROWN, JR.

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 21, 1986

Mr. BROWN of California. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate this opportunity to join in honoring four outstanding black educators from my district. The Black Voice News is celebrating its 14th anniversary by pointing out the accomplishments of all black educators, and is specifically honoring Jean Grier, Dorothy Inghram, Juanita Jones, and Dr. Hazel Russell. Together, they have taught a combined total of 19 years, but their accomplishments go far beyond simple years served.

Jean Grier was the first black teacher integrated into the Riverside School District. She served in later years in a variety of positions in that district. Although now retired, she remains very active in community work and has received many honors for that work, including, along with her husband, the 1985 NAACPer of the Year Award. Dorothy Inghram, first a student in local schools, rose through the ranks to be the first black superintendent of schools in the State of California. For her work as a teacher, principal and superintendent, a library in the district now bears her name. Like her colleagues, Ms. Inghram remains committed to improving her community by active involvement in a variety of organizations.

Juanita Jones has had a long association with the San Bernardino School District, first serving as one of the district's first bilingual teachers. Her work with the district has not prevented an active involvement with the Urban League, however. She is also the author of a book of original poetry and the recipient of many local and national awards.

Dr. Hazel Russell's career in the Riverside City School Department began in 1947. She worked as an elementary and secondary school teacher until 1970 when she became a coordinator for the federally funded Emergency School Aid Act Program. Today, Dr. Russell continues to be active in educational issues, serving as an assistant professor in the Afro-Ethnic Studies Department at California State University, Fullerton, and is a member of many organizations, including the Attorney General's Commission on Racial, Religious, and Minority Violence.

I know that my colleagues join me in recognizing the valuable work done by these women over the years and the contributions that they will continue to make. Today's children could have no better models than Jean Grier, Dorothy Inghram, Juanita Jones, and Hazel Russell.

THE SANDINISTA LOBBY

HON. HENRY J. HYDE

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 21, 1986

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Speaker, as the debate heats up on the issue of renewed aid to the democratic resistance within Nicaragua, it might be useful to evaluate the Sandinista lobby. The January 20 issue of the New Republic does just that, and I urge my colleagues to carefully study this article by Fred Barnes which exposes the double standard too often employed by certain human rights groups:

The article follows:

THE SANDINISTA LOBBY—HUMAN RIGHTS GROUPS WITH A DOUBLE STANDARD

(By Fred Barnes)

Last July 1 a man named Alvaro Jose Baldizon Aviles slipped across the border from Nicaragua into Honduras. He was no ordinary refugee. Baldizon was chief of the special investigations commission of Nicaragua's Ministry of Interior. He worked for Tomas Borge, the interior minister and a powerful figure in the Sandinista government. Baldizon had an eye-popping story to tell of massive human rights abuses by the Sandinistas. In September and October, under the guidance of the U.S. State Department, he told it all over Washington.

Citing specific names, dates, and locations, Baldizon disclosed hundreds of murders of peasants, prisoners, Indians, businessmen, and opponents of the Sandinista regime, all of them carried out by Nicaraguan government soldiers or police. Borge personally ordered some killings and whitewashed others, Baldizon said. In 1981 Borge allegedly standardized the practice of murdering political foes by issuing a secret order allowing "special measures," the euphemism of assassinations. He institutionalized the deception of visiting foreigners, appearing before Christian groups in an office with a crucifix, a statue of Jesus Christ, and a bible. His real office is adorned with pictures of Marx, Engels, and Lenin, and copies of The Communist Manifesto and Das Kapital. Moreover, Borge was involved in cocaine trafficking, put former criminals in police jobs, and installed Cuban advisers in operational posts. Baldizon also said the Sandinistas were training Costa Rican guerrillas and using mobs of young Sandinistas to break up gatherings of political opponents.

Even by Latin American standards, this was quite an indictment, exactly the kind of firsthand account likely to trigger outrage by groups monitoring human rights in Central America. And maybe even spark an aggressive investigation or two. But not by the Washington Office on Latin America, which says it "monitors human rights practices and political developments in Central and South America * * * [and promotes] a foreign policy that advances human rights, peace, and democracy in the hemisphere." Joseph T. Eldridge, the Methodist minister and former missionary in Chile who is WOLA's director, was invited along with other human rights activists to a session with Baldizon at the State Department on October 3. Eldridge didn't show. He did call to ask about a private session with Baldizon, and State Department officials agreed so long as one of their staff aides was present. Later, Eldridge canceled the meeting because of a schedule conflict. He insists he's still trying to meet with Baldizon. But Janice Barbieri of the State Department's office of public diplomacy says Eldridge isn't trying very hard; he hasn't even called back to set up a new time. Whatever the case, it's been months, and Eldridge has yet to meet with Baldizon.

This indifference to Baldizon and his evidence of systematic abuses of human rights was not a lapse. On the contrary, it reflects the selective moral indignation of a phalanx of organizations in Washington that regularly criticizes the Reagan administration's policy toward Central America and, in particular, Nicaragua. The ostensible aims of these groups are high-minded: peace, protection of human rights, free elections, an end to domination of politics by oligarchies, etc. And they tirelessly point out how Guatemala, El Salvador, Honduras, and Panama—all allies of the United States—come up short. But Nicaragua, with its increasingly repressive Sandinista regime, is another story. What criticism these organizations have of Nicaragua is soft-hitting in the extreme. Mostly they explain away or ignore abuses by the Sandinistas.

These organizations and their leaders refer to themselves as "the community." But they've been accused of being something quite different. A Heritage Foundation paper labeled them "The Left's Latin American Lobby." A book by the Council for Inter-American Security attacks them as "The Revolution Lobby." Bruce Cameron, a former lobbyist for Americans for Democratic Action, says WOLA at least is a "shill for the Sandinistas." Naturally, WOLA and other groups disagree. "There is an attitude in [Washington] that equates opposition to the administration's Central American policy with support for the Sandinista government," says Eldridge. "This is an unfortunate and lamentable conclusion."

Maybe so, but WOLA and other organizations haven't exactly gone out of their way to show that they don't apply a double standard—tough on right-wing governments and U.S. allies, soft on left-wing regimes. A good place to start would have been with Baldizon. Juan Mendez of America's Watch, a human rights monitoring group, went to the trouble of taking Baldizon to lunch, where they could confer without State Department interference. But America's Watch seems more interested in countering Reagan's attacks on Nicaragua than checking out Baldizon's evidence. Last July it put out a report evaluating Nicaragua's human rights record. The logical yardstick was the Sandinista promise of political pluralism and a mixed economy. Had the Sandinistas delivered on these? But that wasn't the question asked. Rather, America's Watch found the one human right standard that the Sandinistas can meet: Is their human rights record as bad as Reagan says? Nope, America's Watch concluded.

WOLA doesn't pretend to be anything but an advocacy organization. It advocates friendly, tolerant relations with Nicaragua. But similar questions arise in the case of legal groups, whose nominal concern is not policy but the rule of law. Susan Benda of the American Civil Liberties Union says her only concern is blocking U.S. involvement in the covert war waged by the contras. "We're opposed to this covert war regardless of what the Sandinistas do," she says. "We don't care if they close down the press. What the Sandinistas do doesn't affect our opinion on the war."

But at least one legal group is now taking care to avoid the appearance of a double standard. Amy Young, the director of the International Human Rights Law Group, now admits that her organization's study of contra abuses last year should also have looked at Sandinista conduct. In a new investigation early in 1986—another vote on contra aid comes in March—both sides will be examined, she says. Larry Garber, IHRLG's project director, characterizes the soft-on-the-Sandinistas approach of some groups as "avoidance tactics." Although they recognize there are human rights problems in Nicaragua, "they don't go down and investigate," he says. Why not? "It's no secret some organizations in town were excited about what happened in Nicaragua and are still hopeful it will be a revolution that brings lasting peace and stability. They've been willing to forgive things that have gone on during a time of transition. That time is over."

Practically no one is more forgiving than the Coalition for a New Foreign and Military Policy, the umbrella group of "the community." Its 50-odd members include WOLA, the Council on Hemispheric Affairs, the Washington office of the Presbyterian Church (USA), the American Friends Service Committee, and the YWCA. The coalition, along with the Commission on U.S.-Central America Relations, published what it called a "basic information" book on Central America. According to the book, the Sandinistas have done little wrong, and when they have, it was only because the United States forced them to.

Take the massive Sandinista arms buildup. It began in 1979, at a time when the U.S. government was reasonably friendly, and has gone on unabated. Nicaragua now has by far the largest military force in Central America. Yet the "basic information" book attributes the Sandinista buildup to fear of a U.S. invasion. "In short, the Nicaraguans want to raise the military, and thereby the political, cost of a U.S.-sponsored invasion," it says. Nor do the Nicaraguans threaten their neighbors. "Despite the difficulty in distinguishing between offensive and defensive weapons, it is clear that the military strengthening that Nicaragua has undergone in the last few years is primarily defensive, not offensive." Even MIGs from the Soviets, the book says, wouldn't give Nicaragua "a credible offensive force capable of invading any country in the region."

The book is vague about the political leanings of the Sandinista directorate, vague in a way that misleads. Borge, the interior minister, is described as "a poet and a writer [who] has studied law at the National University." This is the fellow who confided to Playboy magazine in 1983: "I told [my mother] that I would not be blackmailed by her gentleness and her naivete and that I was a Communist." Humberto Ortega, the defense minister and brother of Nicaraguan president Daniel Ortega, is described simply as an author. Yet Ortega doesn't mince words about his ideology. "Marxism-Leninism is the scientific doctrine that guides our revolution," he said in 1981. "Our moral strength is Sandinismo and our doctrine is that of Marxism-Leninism."

As the Sandinistas are legitimized by "the community," the contras are demonized. Dissenting opinions are not tolerated on this point. When Bruce Cameron decided that support for the contras would promote human rights in Nicaragua, he was no longer welcome in "the community."

The acceptable line on the contras is that they are old Somoza hands who have generated no popular support for their insurgency. "Nicaraguans," wrote Reggie Norton of WOLA in the coalition's book, "are justifiably concerned that far from representing a promise to improve their lives, the contras represent a return to the type of repression that characterized the Somoza regime." This may have been true five years ago, but since then the contras have been transformed from a small band of ex-National Guardsmen to a 15,000-man force that has won the support of such anti-Somoza leaders as Alfonso Robelo and Arturo Cruz. Mass defections to the contras, plus their ability to operate in large areas of Nicaragua, are palpable signs of a surge in popularity, and evidence of growing disenchantment with the Sandinistas.

On the subject of elections, Eldridge of WOLA talks scornfully about the recent election in Guatemala, which saw a once-exiled dissident win the presidency. After all, Eldridge says, "elections are one note in the symphony of democracy. * * * The gist is it [the Guatemalan election] was technically flawless. Hats off. The question is whether this will wean the military away from its monoply of power. A lot of people are skeptical." But the Nicaraguan election in 1984 was "a political opening," concluded a report by WOLA and IHRLG. Serious impediments to free choice by the voters were minimized in the report. There was censorship, but the parties were permitted "to communicate to the Nicaraguan people" their "vision for the future" and "to criticize freely the performance of the government." Repeated "incidents of harassment and intimidation" occurred—Sandinista mobs broke up opposition rallies—but they didn't affect much. The chief opposition party, the Coordinator, which dropped out charging that the election wasn't free or fair, acted for "political reasons."

Eldridge says that half the leaders of the Coordinator would rather have an invasion by U.S. Marines than participate in an election. If so, then why did the Coordinator accept the Sandinista condition that the contras be asked to lay down their arms for the election? In fact, the Coordinator's candidate, Arturo Cruz, negotiated feverishly for a postponed election in which the opposition would take part. At the key moment, though, the Sandinistas backed out.

The Sandinista sympathizers continue to insist that political pluralism is the general rule in Nicaragua. America's Watch proclaimed in July 1985 that "while prior censorship has been imposed by emergency legislation, debate on major social and political questions is robust, outspoken, even often strident" in Nicaragua. In fact, just as under Somoza's regime, debate is allowed only so long as it doesn't threaten the authorities.

The America's Watch report claims that the group does "not take a position on the U.S. geopolitical strategy in Central America," then goes on to do exactly that. There have been abuses of human rights by the Sandinistas, it says, but "some notable reductions in abuses have occurred in Nicaragua since 1982, despite the pressure caused by escalating external attacks." This is exactly what the Sandinistas say. Baldizon, who was in a position to know, tells a strikingly different story. So do Protestant preachers who have been arrested recently in Nicaragua. And last October the Sandinistas suspended what few civil liberties had been allowed.

One organization that has gone to great lengths to explain away this new state of emergency is the Central American Historical Institute at Georgetown University. Tossing out civil liberties "does not violate the U.N. International Civil and Political Rights Amendment," the institute said in 1984. And the state of emergency doesn't take away the right to life or justify torture or slavery, or block "freedom of thought, conscience, or religion," the institute said. "Nor is it applied in a discriminatory fashion," it added, suggesting that political repression is less troubling if it is evenhanded.

The institute points out the impressive turnout of 75 percent for the election, despite efforts by the Coordinator to discourage voting. "This, and the fact that opposition parties won one-third of the valid votes, contradicts the accusation that the election was merely a rubber stamp for the [Sandinistas]." Last May, in its publication Update, the institute went to great lengths to knock down an article in La Prensa, the frequently censored opposition paper in Nicaragua. Jaime Chamorro, the paper's co-director, charged that the Sandinistas added 400,000 votes to their tally. The same month the institute said in another Update that opposition parties are alive and "kicking" in Nicaragua's National Assembly. The Sandinistas like "a give and take dynamic to prevail so as to not alienate what amounts to a 'loyal' opposition."

The institute frequently attacks the contras, but is squeamish about Sandinista abuses. In a rundown of contra leaders, it lists Lucia Cardenal de Salazar as "widow of Jorge Salazar, wealthy coffee grower killed in a November 1980 dispute with Nicaraguan police." Shirley Christian of the New York Times reports in her book Nicaragua that Jorge Salazar was assassinated by Sandinista security forces. Baldizon confirmed that Sandinista leaders were involved in plotting and carrying out Salazar's death.

The biggest splash made by "the community" has been with its well-timed reports of contra abuses. The most famous of these was written by Reed Brody, a New York lawyer. He charged that the contras attack purely civilian targets, and he cited instances of killings of unarmed women and children, rapes, beatings, kidnappings, forced recruitment of new troops, disruption of harvests, and intimidation of people joining government programs. With a congressional vote on aid to the contras a few weeks away last spring, the Brody report got big play in the press. But it was, at best, open to question. A Reagan administration examination of the report found that six incidents cited by Brody had been carried out by a contra officer later executed for murdering civilians and that four incidents occurred before the contras were constituted as an organized force. Brody blames the contras for killing a French doctor with mortar fire, but the contras say they had no mortars in that incident and that Sandinista fire killed him. Moreover, the administration says 48 rifles and 11,500 rounds of ammunition were seized from what Brody describes as merely a farm, and that a "deeply religious" couple killed by contras were actually agents of Sandinista state security. Brody was candid enough to disclose that the idea for the report came from Reichler & Applebaum, the Washington law firm that represents the Nicaraguan government. And he also revealed that in Nicaragua he was housed and given office space by the Sandinistas. The government even directed him to witnesses. Still, Brody said, his investigation was "independent." He made no attempt to probe Sandinista abuses.

A recent Sandinista defector has described Brody's close relationship with the Nicaraguan government. Mario Jose Guerrero was director of the National Commission for the Promotion and Protection of Human Rights. The commission, Guerrero said, was ordered to give full support to Brody. Besides office and lodging, it paid all his bills and arranged interviews. Another defector, Bayardo de Jesus Payan, was the chief budget officer of the commission. He described Brody in action to a House subcommittee:

I noticed that many times he showed a photograph in which he was hugging Commander Daniel Ortega and also that he was constantly calling on the telephone to the foreign ministry and visiting it. He also made propaganda for the [Sandinistas] and urged the employees of the institution to vote for Daniel Ortega, since he was a great supporter of the Sandinistas. Also, he always spoke badly about the policy of the government of the United States and of President Ronald Reagan.

WOLA and the International Human Rights Law Group found Brody's evidence compelling, but they were worried that his connection with the Sandinistas would deprive the report of credibility. They dispatched two lawyers, one an outspoken critic of administration policy, to Nicaragua to check on contra abuses. These representatives also neglected to examine abuses by the Nicaraguan government. But they managed to corroborate some of the Brody report, and they declared their support for it. America's Watch supplied a report of its own, which dealt with both sides. It concluded that Sandinista abuses were mainly in 1981 and 1982, and directed against the Miskito Indians. Since then, there had been a "sharp decline" in Sandinista abuses, America's Watch said. Baldizon, for one, would quarrel with that.

"The community" does make some efforts to demonstrate evenhandedness. WOLA, Eldridge says, has been "steadfastly encouraging dialogue in Nicaragua, as in El Salvador." Indeed, WOLA sponsored a visit to the United States by leaders of El Salvador's guerrilla forces. But the contra leaders in Nicaragua are out of bounds. Eldridge is for a dialogue between Duarte and his Communist opposition, but not for one between the Sandinistas and the contras. The dialogue he wants would pit only the erratic Eden Pastora, once a Sandinista commander, and perhaps Arturo Cruz against the Sandinistas. Cruz could be there only as an individual, not as a leader of the contras, says Eldridge. Which means that the main political and military opposition to the Sandinistas would be excluded, and the Sandinistas be under little pressure in the talks to make concessions to democracy. Some dialog.

CONGRESSMAN GILMAN SEEKS AFFORDABLE AND AVAILABLE CHILD CARE

HON. BENJAMIN A. GILMAN

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 21, 1986

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to urge my colleagues to join my efforts to make child care more widely available to families of all incomes. My legislation, H.R. 3928, makes the current dependent care tax credit refundable and provides incentives to businesses to provide on-site dependent care facilities for their employees.

As more and more women continue to pursue their careers and to raise a family, it is vital that affordable, accessible alternatives for dependent child care be made available. While our current Tax Code provides for a tax credit for costs associated with dependent care, only those individuals or families who can apply that credit against an existing tax liability can benefit. For the working poor and for low-income families, those who most need our support, day care becomes an enormous financial burden. By making the dependent care tax credit refundable, families of all income levels will be able to take equal advantage of the credit.

A second feature of H.R. 3928 addresses the day care supply problem by providing incentives to businesses to provide dependent care facilities as a business or, to provide day care for their employees. My bill grants a 10-percent tax credit for any investment now eligible for the normal investment tax credit which is used for a dependent care facility. H.R. 3928 also creates a new 5-percent investment tax credit for any structural expenses associated with building a dependent care facility not now eligible for credit of any type.

Accordingly, I urge my colleagues to join me in supporting H.R. 3928 and insert the text at this point in the RECORD:

H.R. 3928

A bill to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 to make the credit for dependent care services necessary for gainful employment a refundable credit and to allow an additional investment tax credit for dependent care center property

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. REFUNDABLE CREDIT FOR EXPENSES FOR HOUSEHOLD AND DEPENDENT CARE SERVICES NECESSARY FOR GAINFUL EMPLOYMENT.

(a) SECTION MOVED TO APPROPRIATE PLACE IN SUBPART C OF PART III OF SUBCHAPTER A OF CHAPTER 1 OF THE INTERNAL REVENUE CODE OF 1954.—

(1) DESIGNATION.—Section 21 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 is henceforth to be designated as section 36 of such Code.

(2) PLACED IN SUBPART C.—The section for which paragraph (1) provides a new section number is hereby moved to the appropriate place in subpart C of part III of subchapter A of chapter 1 of such Code.

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.—

(1) Paragraph (1) of section 129(e) of such Code (relating to definition of dependent care assistance) is amended by striking out "section 21(b)(2)" and inserting in lieu thereof "section 36(b)(2)".

(2) Subsection (e) of section 213 of such Code (relating to exclusion of amounts allowed for care of certain dependents) is amended by striking out "21" and inserting in lieu thereof "36".

(c) CLERICAL AMENDMENTS.—

(1) Tne table of sections for subpart A of part III of subchapter A of chapter 1 of such Code is amended by striking out the first item.

(2) The table of sections for subpart C of part III of subchapter A of chapter 1 of such Code is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new item:

"Sec. 36. Expenses for household and dependent care services necessary for gainful employment."

(d) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by subsections (a), (b), and (c) shall apply to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1985.

SEC. 2. ADDITIONAL INVESTMENT TAX CREDIT FOR DEPENDENT CARE CENTER PROPERTY.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Subsection (a) of section 46 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to amount of credit for investment in certain depreciable property) is amended—

(1) by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(4) in the case of dependent care center property, the dependent care percentage.",

(2) by striking out "and" at the end of paragraph (2), and

(3) by striking out the period at the end of paragraph (3) and inserting in lieu thereof ", and".

(b) DEPENDENT CARE PERCENTAGE.—Subsection (b) of section 46 of such Code (relating to determination of percentages) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(5) DEPENDENT CARE PERCENTAGE.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—The dependent care percentage is—

"(i) 10 percent, in the case of dependent care center property not described in clause (ii), or

"(ii) 5 percent, in the case of dependent care center property which (but for section 48(s)(1)) would not be section 38 property.

"(B) REGULAR PERCENTAGE NOT TO APPLY TO PROPERTY NOT OTHERWISE SECTION 38 PROPERTY.—The regular percentage shall not apply to any dependent care center property to which subparagraph (A)(ii) applies."

(c) DEPENDENT CARE CENTER PROPERTY DEFINED.—Section 48 of such Code (relating to definitions; special rules) is amended by redesignating subsection (s) as subsection (t) and by inserting after subsection (r) the following new subsection:

"(s) DEPENDENT CARE CENTER PROPERTY.—For purposes of this subpart—

"(1) TREATMENT AS SECTION 38 PROPERTY.—For the period beginning after December 31, 1985, dependent care center property shall be treated as meeting the requirements of paragraph (1) of subsection (a) (other than the penultimate sentence of such paragraph).

"(2) DEPENDENT CARE CENTER PROPERTY DEFINED.—The term 'dependent care center property' means property for use by a dependent care center if—

"(A) such center meets the requirements of subparagraphs (C) and (D) of section 21(b)(2), and

"(B) more than 90 percent of the gross revenue of such center is from 1 or more of the following sources:

"(i) Payments which are employment-related expenses (within the meaning of section 21(b)(2)) for the care of a qualifying individual (within the meaning of section 21(b)(1)) outside the taxpayer's household.

"(ii) Amounts paid or incurred by an employer which are excludable from the gross income of an employee under section 129 (relating to dependent care assistance programs).

"(iii) Grants received from a State or political subdivision thereof, the District of Columbia, or an organization described in section 501(c) which is exempt from tax under section 501(a)."

(d) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by subsections (a), (b), and (c) shall apply to the period after December 31, 1985 (under rules similar to the rules of section 48(m) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954) in taxable years ending after such date.

THE RETIREMENT OF DR. CHARLES F. MARTIN

HON. WILLIAM (BILL) CLAY

OF MISSOURI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 21, 1986

Mr. CLAY. Mr. Speaker, there comes a time in every generation when the inner qualities and outward accomplishments of a few special individuals allow them to rise above the normal aspects of everyday achievement and cause special attention to be focused upon them. One of these individuals is Charles F. Martin from the First Congressional District of Missouri.

Charles F. Martin, was born in Carrollton, MO, on August 19, 1927. He completed his elementary and secondary education in the State of Missouri and upon graduation from high school was accepted at Lincoln University—Jefferson City, MO—from which he graduated in 1949 with a bachelor of arts degree with a mathematical engineer major and later received his masters and doctoral degrees from Yale University.

His first employment after graduation was in a supervisory position for a major life insurance company for several years in the city of St. Louis. But, due to his love for math and science and a keen desire to use the tools that he had acquired at Lincoln University, he applied for and was accepted for a position as a cartographic photogrammetric aid by the Department of the Air Force.

I include at this point the positions that he has held with the Department of the Air Force and other Federal agencies and the various awards, achievements and publications he has written, and other vital information.

DR. CHARLES F. MARTIN

PREVIOUS POSITIONS

Supervisor—Mammoth Life Ins. Co.: June 1948-Jan 1951.

1st Lt, U.S. Army, Jan 1951—Sept 1953.

THE PANAMA CANAL INTEREST ACT OF 1986

HON. JACK FIELDS

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 21, 1986

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Speaker, I am today introducing a bill to further resolve a problem in Public Law 96-70 dealing with the payment of interest on the U.S. investment in the Panama Canal.

Due to an ambiguity in section 1302 of the Panama Canal Act of 1979, the portion of tolls and other revenues collected by the Panama Canal Commission that was attributable to the interest on our investment in the canal was deposited in the Panama Canal Commission Fund and not into the general fund of the U.S. Treasury.

The effect of this action was to erode our investment base by decreasing the level of our investment in the Panama Canal. As a result, some $60 million was diverted from the general fund between October 1, 1979, and December 31, 1985.

These funds could only be used for those expenditures authorized by the Panama Canal Commission and were not available to finance other Federal programs nor to reduce our staggering national deficit.

In an effort to correct this serious problem, I introduced H.R. 664, a bill which authorized that the interest payment on our investment in the canal be paid directly into the general fund of the U.S. Treasury.

H.R. 664 was the subject of several congressional hearings, passed both Houses of Congress, and on December 23, 1985, was signed into law—Public Law 99-195—by the President. With its enactment, we have now ensured that our annual interest payment, of about $10 million a year, will be properly deposited and utilized for other Federal programs.

With the problem of all future interest payments now resolved, the remaining issue is the level of the U.S. investment upon which the interest payment is calculated. Currently that level has been reduced by the $60 million that is deposited in the Panama Canal Commission Fund.

The bill I am introducing today would raise the principal on our investment in the canal to the level where it should have been had no interest funds been diverted for the past 6 years.

With the passage of this legislation, the Department of the Treasury would be authorized to add the $60 million that is deposited in the Panama Canal Commission Fund to the level of our principal, which is $76.9 million, and to calculate our annual interest payment by multiplying that figure by the prevailing interest rate which is currently 10.72 percent. This legislation would affect all interest payments made after January 1, 1986.

While this bill does not transfer the $60 million to the general fund of the U.S. Treasury, it will restore the proper level of our principal in the Panama Canal.

I have decided not to seek an immediate transfer of these funds because such an action would have a highly adverse and negative impact on the cash flow requirements of the Panama Canal Commission.

Mr. Speaker, because this is a somewhat complex issue, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD the committee report on H.R. 664 which includes a narrative history of the interest problem.

I would urge my colleagues to join with me in supporting this effort to ensure that the taxpayers of this Nation enjoy the benefits of a full and accurate Panama Canal interest payment.

AMENDING THE PANAMA CANAL ACT OF 1979 REGARDING THE PAYMENT OF INTEREST ON THE U.S. INVESTMENT IN THE PANAMA CANAL

April 22, 1985.—Committed to the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union and ordered to be printed.

Mr. JONES, of North Carolina, from the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, submitted the following Report, to accompany H.R. 664; Including cost estimate of the Congressional Budget Office.

The Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, to whom was referred the bill (H.R. 664) to amend the Panama Canal Act of 1979 regarding the payment of interest on the United States investment in the Panama Canal, having considered the same, report favorably thereon without amendment and recommend that the bill do pass.

PURPOSE

The purpose of H.R. 664 is to stop the erosion of the United States investment in the Panama Canal that is occurring as a result of ambiguity in the Panama Canal Act of 1979, Public Law 96-70, (the Act). The bill accomplishes this purpose by requiring that the portion of tolls and other revenues collected by the Panama Canal Commission (PCC) and attributable to interest on the U.S. Investment be deposited into the General Treasury as miscellaneous receipts. Under current law, these revenues are deposited into Panama Canal Commission (PCC) Fund, resulting in a reduction of the U.S. investment in the canal.

BACKGROUND

Section 1602(b) of the Act requires the PCC to take in revenues sufficient to cover all costs of operating the canal, including interest on the U.S. investment in the canal. The interest rate is set annually by the Secretary of the Treasury pursuant to section 1603 of the Act, which also specifies that the U.S. investment in the canal shall be increased by PCC expenditures and decreased by PCC revenues. Since revenues and expenditures are usually almost equal, they offset each other in adjusting the U.S. investment.

PCC revenues attributable to interest on the U.S. investment are the exception to this rule. Because the Act does not specify what is to be done with these revenues, the PCC simply deposits them in the PCC Fund, in accordance with section 1302 of the Act. Thus, the revenues collected for interest serve to decrease the U.S. investment in the canal, but there is no corresponding expenditure to offset the decrease. The result is the anomaly of having amounts set aside for interest actually reducing the principal. Each year, the revenues attributable to interest erode the U.S. investment in the canal by that amount.

H.R. 664 is designed to stop this erosion by two relatively minor amendments to the Act. The first requires that PCC interest revenues be deposited into the miscellaneous receipts of the General Treasury, rather than into the PCC Fund. The second makes clear that the interest revenues deposited into the miscellaneous receipts account do not decrease the U.S. investment. Only deposits into the PCC Fund do so. The bill will not only halt further erosion of the U.S. investment in the canal, but will also ensure that future interest revenues will be available as General Treasury funds.

The Committee intends that the enactment of H.R. 664 will have no effect on the calculation of the so-called "contingent payment" to Panama under paragraph 4(c) of Article XIII of the 1977 Panama Canal Treaty. That Treaty provision requires the PCC to pay Panama the excess, if any, of canal operating revenues over operating costs, up to a maximum of $10 million annually. Both the PCC and the General Accounting Office (GAO) testified in the 98th Congress that H.R. 5655 (last year's bill, passed by the House in a form identical to H.R. 664) would not affect the way the contingent payment is calculated. The Committee agrees with the PCC and GAO analysis on this point.

LEGISLATIVE HISTORY

In the 98th Congress, on May 15, 1984, the Honorable Jack Fields, Ranking Minority Member of the Subcommittee on Panama Canal/Outer Continental Shelf introduced H.R. 5655, a bill essentially the same as H.R. 664. On May 16, 1984, the Subcommittee conducted a hearing on various aspects of the payment of interest on the investment of the United States in the Panama Canal. At that hearing, the GAO testified that the PCC should pay or transfer its interest collections from the PCC Fund into the General Treasury as miscellaneous receipts. GAO believes that the legislative history of the Act indicated that Congress intended that the interest collections be transferred into the Treasury for the taxpayers' benefit. GAO feels that this can best be done by transferring the collections into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts. The GAO position on this matter is discussed at length in a GAO paper entitled "Return on U.S. Investment in the Panama Canal" (GAO/ID-83-36 dated March 22, 1983).

The PCC, also citing the Act's legislative history, deposits the interest collections into the PCC Fund as it believes the Act requires. The PCC does not believe that it has the authority to make transfers from the Fund on its own volition. Nor does it have authority to make deposits in any fund other than the PCC Fund. The PCC indicates that congressional action is necessary to state clearly that the Commission has authority to transfer its collections of interest from the PCC Fund to the General Treasury.

The Subcommittee marked up H.R. 5655 on June 12, 1984, adopting one amendment offered by Mr. Fields. The amendment struck the word "directly" from the language requiring interest to be "deposited directly into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts." The purpose of the amendment was to eliminate any possibility that use of the word "directly" could be construed as directing the PCC to deposit the interest on the U.S. investment into the General Treasury on a daily basis. The PCC currently accounts for its deposits into the PCC Fund on a monthly basis. The Fields amendment would allow the PCC to account for the interest deposits into the General Treasury at the same time that it accounts for deposits into the PCC Fund.

On June 19, 1984, by unanimous voice vote, the Full Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee ordered H.R. 5655 reported to the House as amended by the Subcommittee. See House Report 98-858.

On June 25, 1984, the House passed the bill under suspension, sent it to the Senate, where it was never acted upon.

On January 24, 1985, the Honorable Jack Fields introduced H.R. 664, a bill identical to the version of H.R. 5655 which passed in the House on June 25, 1984. On March 7, 1985, the Subcommittee on Panama Canal/Outer Continental Shelf held a hearing on the 1986 Panama Canal Commission budget, including a discussion of the $10 million interest payment to the United States. The two witnesses the Honorable William R. Gianelli, Chairman of the Board of the Panama Canal Commission, and Dennis P. McAuliffe, Administrator of the Panama Canal Commission, testified that H.R. 664 will have no negative impact on the Commission's budget or financial procedures. On April 3, 1985, the Subcommittee unanimously approved H.R. 664. On April 16, 1985, the Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee also unanimously approved H.R. 664, reporting it to the House.

SECTION-BY-SECTION ANALYSIS

Section 1(a).—Section 1302(b) of the Panama Canal Act of 1979 requires that all tolls and other receipts of the Panama Canal Commission be deposited in the Panama Canal Commission Fund in the U.S. Treasury. Section 1(a) of the bill amends section 1302(b) of the Act to direct that the portion of PCC tolls and revenues that represent the interest on the U.S. investment in the Panama Canal be deposited into the General Treasury as miscellaneous receipts. The Committee intends to make clear that this new language not be construed as directing the PCC to deposit the interest on the U.S. investment into the General Treasury on a daily basis. The PCC currently accounts for its deposits into the PCC Fund on a monthly basis. This section would allow the PCC to account for the interest deposits into the General Treasury at the same time that it accounts for deposits into the PCC Fund. The procedure to be followed by the PCC in depositing interest revenues into the General Treasury and accounting for them is detailed in a June 8, 1984, letter to Chairman Walter B. Jones, a copy of which is appended to this report.

Section 1(b).—Section 1603(b)(2)(A) of the Act states that monies deposited into the "Treasury" (which according to section 1302 is the "Panama Canal Commission Fund") will decrease the U.S. investment in the Panama Canal. When that money is withdrawn from the Panama Canal Commission Fund and deposited into the General Treasury, the U.S. investment would be increased by that amount, thereby offsetting the decrease required in section 1603(b)(2)(A). (See section 1603(b)(1)). This section of the bill strikes the word "Treasury" and inserts in lieu thereof "the Panama Canal Commission Fund." This ensures that the deposit in the General Treasury required by section 1(a) of the bill will have no impact on the level of the U.S. investment.

Section 2.—Section 2 of the bill simply states that the provisions in the bill will become effective when the bill is signed into law. In other words, the changes made by the bill are prospective only.

Inflationary impact statement

Pursuant to clause 2(a)(A) of Rule XI of the Rules of the House of Representatives, the Committee estimates that the enactment of H.R. 664 will have no significant effect on prices and costs in the operation of the national economy.

COMPLIANCE WITH CLAUSE 2(1)(3) OF RULE XI

(A) In the consideration of H.R. 664, the Committee made no new oversight findings and recommendations within the meaning of clause 2(b)(1) of rule X.

(B) The requirements of H.R. 664 contain no new budget authority or increased tax expenditure reportable under section 308(a) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974.

(C) The Committee on Government Operations has sent no report to the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries pursuant to clause 4(c)(2) of rule X.

(D) The estimate and comparison prepared by the Director of the Congressional Budget Office under section 403 of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974 is set out below.

CONGRESSIONAL BUDGET OFFICE COST ESTIMATE

1. Bill number: H.R. 664.

2. Bill title: A bill to amend the Panama Canal Act of 1979 with respect to the payment of interest on the investment of the United States.

3. Bill status: As ordered reported by the House Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, April 16, 1985.

4. Bill purpose: The bill requires the portion of tolls collected from the Panama Canal to cover the interest on the United States' investment in the Canal to be deposited into the general fund of the Treasury. Under current law, the Panama Canal Commission computes interest on the federal investment based on a rate established by the Secretary of the Treasury, and recognizes this as an operating cost. The Commission then collects tolls based on this and other estimated operating costs and deposits the revenue in the Panama Canal Commission Fund in the Treasury. However, because there is no mechanism to transfer the amount of the interest payment from the Commission Fund to the general fund of the Treasury, the funds collected for the interest payment remain in the unappropriated balance of the Panama Canal Commission Fund.

Furthermore, because of the methodology used to calculate the U.S. investment, the amount of interest accumulating in the unappropriated balance is reducing the amount of the U.S. investment. The Panama Canal Act of 1979 states that the U.S. investment in the Canal will be increased by appropriations to the Panama Canal Commission and decreased by funds deposited into the Panama Canal Commission Fund. H.R. 664 halts this erosion of the U.S. investment.

5. Estimated cost to the Federal Government: By maintaining the value of the U.S. investment in the Panama Canal, H.R. 664 would increase the amount of interest payable on that investment. Consequently, Panama Canal tolls would have to be higher in order to generate sufficient receipts to cover the interest costs. Such tolls are shown as offsetting receipts on the spending side of the budget. Therefore, the budget impact of the bill would appear as an increase in receipts, as shown in the following table.

[By fiscal years, in millions of dollars]

	1986	1987	1988	1989	1990
Estimated budget authority	−0.4	−1.2	−1.8	−2.4	−2.8
Estimated outlays	−0.4	−1.2	−1.8	−2.4	−2.8

The impact of this bill falls within budget function 400.

Basis of estimate: The bill is assumed to take effect at the beginning of fiscal year 1986. In the absence of this bill, the investment will continue to decrease each year by the amount of the interest credited to the unappropriated balance of the Commission Fund; this will, in turn, diminish the amount of the annual interest obligation in the future. H.R. 664 prevents further decreases in the investment and, therefore, results in an increase in receipts on the federal budget.

The deposit of interest income into the general fund of the Treasury instead of the Panama Canal Commission Fund would not affect the budget totals.

6. Estimated cost to State and local governments: None.

7. Estimate comparison: None.

8. Previous CBO estimate: None.

9. Estimate prepared by: Heidi E. Zukoski.

10. Estimate approved by: James L. Blum, Assistant Director for Budget Analysis.

DEPARTMENTAL REPORTS

No reports were received on H.R. 664 at the time this report was filed.

CHANGES IN EXISTING LAW

In compliance with clause 3 of rule XIII of the Rules of the House of Representatives, changes in existing law made by the bill, as reported, are shown below. Existing law proposed to be omitted is enclosed in black brackets, new matter is printed in italic, and existing law in which no change is proposed is printed in roman.

(1) shall be increased by—

(A) the amount of expenditures from appropriations to the Commission made on or after the effective date of this Act, and

(B) the value of property transferred to the Commission by any other department or agency of the United States, as determined in accordance with subsection (c) of this section; and

(2) shall be decreased by—

(A) the amount of the fund covered into the [Treasury] Panama Canal Commission Fund pursuant to section 1302 of this Act,

(B) the value of property transferred to the Republic of Panama pursuant to this or any other Act on or after the date on which the Panama Canal Treaty of 1977 enters into force, and

(C) the value of property transferred by the Commission to any other department or agency of the United States.

BOARD OF DIRECTORS,
PANAMA CANAL COMMISSION,
June 8, 1984.

Hon. WALTER B. JONES,
Chairman, Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, House of Representatives, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN. This is in reference to your letter of May 30, 1984 concerning H.R. 5655, a bill that would amend the Panama Canal Act of 1979 with respect to the payment of interest on the investment of the United States in the Panama Canal. In your letter, you invite comments on how the Panama Canal Commission reads the requirements of H.R. 5655 and how it would go about implementing the legislation, if enacted in its present form. We appreciate the opportunity to provide the Committee with this information.

As we read it, H.R. 5655 would impose two new requirements on the Canal Commission. First, the measure would make necessary the deposit into the General Fund of the Treasury of the part of Canal tolls and other receipts of the Commission which represent interest on the investment of the United States in the waterway. Presently, all Commission receipts are deposited into a special account known as the Panama Canal Commission Fund. The change would have the result of excluding interest collections from the funding authority balance otherwise available to the Canal for financing appropriations.

With respect to the manner in which this requirement would be put into effect, the Canal agency intends to establish a procedure whereby the minority report [1] used by the Treasury to account for funds of Federal agencies will be utilized to effect the deposit of interest collections into the General Fund as miscellaneous receipts. This procedure will fully meet the requirements of the new law while, at the same time, take into account the fact that interest cannot be calculated more frequently than monthly therefore, cannot be segregated from other receipts on a daily-deposit basis.

The second change to the existing law would insure that monies collected by the Commission as interest would no longer serve to reduce the United States' investment in the Panama Canal. This revision will be implemented in the following two ways:

a. The Treasury, on the basis of the aforementioned monthly report, will no longer credit interest receipts to the account of the Commission's special fund.

b. The Commission will account for the change in a manner which will cause no further alteration in the investment base.

Both of these amendments would affect deposits of monies made on or after enactment of the legislation and thus would not present the Commission with the problem of having to implement their terms retroactively.

Please be advised that an identical letter has been sent to Congressman Hubbard.

Sincerely,

WILLIAM R. GIANELLI,
Chairman.

AFTER GENEVA

HON. LEE H. HAMILTON

OF INDIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 21, 1986

Mr. HAMILTON. Mr. Speaker, I would like to insert my Foreign Affairs Newsletter for December 1985 into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD:

AFTER GENEVA

President Reagan deserves the praise of Americans for his "fresh start" at Geneva. Although the November summit produced nothing concrete on the central issues of arms control and arms reduction, it improved the mood in U.S.-Soviet relations, reducing tension and signaling a return to diplomacy. The summit's significance depends on what happens next. It is up to the U.S. and the Soviets to try to build on its momentum.

The second summit, likely to be held next June or July, will be much tougher. It was easy this time for the leaders to meet, shake hands, exchange smiles and pledge to accelerate arms control talks. Next time the summit will be called a failure if it does not produce real movement on arms control. A summit can spur bureaucracies into action, but it can also obscure inaction. Painstaking diplomacy is not always advanced by highly visible public meetings. A second or third summit, if unproductive, could unsettle Europe and increase East-West tension.

The President has his work cut out for him. Preparation for the next meeting needs to begin now. The President must quickly assemble an arms control consensus within his own Administration, something he has so far been unable to do. He must give his negotiators guidance if progress is to occur before the next summit. He must resist pressure to compromise, which our allies will apply in coming months. He must choose whether to observe existing treaties while he accuses the Soviets of violating them. Most importantly, he will have to decide whether to accept limits on his Strategic Defense Initiative (SDI) to achieve deep cuts in Soviet nuclear weapons.

Mr. Gorbachev has his own set of problems. He must consolidate his power at the Party meetings in Moscow in February, 1986. He must decide if NATO or the Congress will induce President Reagan to make concessions, or whether Soviet compromises will be needed.

Under the domestic limits each leader faces, neither side can credibly threaten sharp increases in military spending. The outlook here is for more cuts in the President's defense budget. Mr. Gorbachev does not hide his preoccupation with the stagnating Soviet economy, or his reluctance to see military spending go up to keep pace with U.S. technological efforts.

Observers are alert for early signs of movement in superpower relations. U.S. allies have already put forward a proposal at the Vienna talks on Mutual and Balanced Force Reductions. It calls for a small reduction in U.S. and Soviet forces to precede an agreement on verification measures. U.N.-sponsored talks on Afghanistan will resume soon and could provide a post-summit test of Soviet intentions. At the Stockholm Conference on Disarmament in Europe, each side has pledged to work on "confidence building" measures and the principle of non-use of force. Bilateral talks are also planned on preventing the spread of nuclear weapons and establishing centers to reduce the risk of nuclear war.

In Geneva, nuclear and space arms talks will resume in mid-January. Both sides agreed at the summit to seek progress in areas of common agreement, including cutting strategic arms by 50% and working out an interim agreement on intermediate range weapons in Europe. Neither side budged on the central issue of space-based defense, but there is some room in U.S. and Soviet positions to discuss the acceptability of SDI research.

There are major differences, however, in the terms defining the reduction of U.S. and Soviet arsenals. The Soviet proposal would include U.S. weapons in Europe, and apparently allows the development of Soviet SS-24 and SS-25 missiles while prohibiting our MX, Trident II and the future Midgetman missile. The U.S. proposal would ban all Soviet mobile missiles including SS-24s and SS-25s and the proposed U.S. Midgetman, but permit other U.S. systems. These terms of definition alone will be difficult to negotiate.

A further difference is compliance with past arms control agreements. In June, President Reagan announced a "no undercut" policy of adhering to SALT I and II to the extent that the Soviets did. He contends, however, that the Soviets have violated SALT II by deploying two new types of land-based missiles—SALT II allows only one new type—and by encoding data from missile tests. Some cite these as reasons for U.S. abrogation of the SALT II Treaty. Others argue that without U.S. compliance the Soviets could "break out" rapidly from SALT II, which would complicate arms talks and undermine the effectiveness of defense systems contemplated under SDI.

Another critical compliance issue concerns the Anti-Ballistic Missile (ABM) Treaty of 1972. The U.S. charges that Soviet construction of a large new radar system at Krasnoyarsk in Siberia violates the ABM Treaty. The Administration also decided this October that the testing and development of SDI technologies is not a legal violation of the ABM Treaty, reversing the U.S. position of the previous 13 years. This change led to an outcry here and in Europe, and the U.S. decided for policy reasons to return to the original Treaty interpretation. How compliance disputes such as these are resolved will greatly affect the future of arms control.

The summit's outcome on arms control has yet to be written. Will we be able to reach agreements that for the first time really cut arsenals, or will we begin an accelerated arms race? Can we keep both nations on the track started at Geneva or will the next international incident derail us? Can we translate the momentum of Geneva and what the President calls America's new strength into specific agreements which will manage the arms competition?

The summit did not give us a breakthrough on arms control or the difficult relationship between the United States and the Soviet Union. But in an improved climate it does give us a chance to keep trying.

DISABLED VETERAN HELPS OTHERS

HON. GEORGE E. BROWN, JR.

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 21, 1986

Mr. BROWN of California. Mr. Speaker, I would like to commend and recognize Mr. Fritz Kasa of Ontario, CA, in my congressional district. Mr. Kasa is a collector extraordinaire—a collector of crutches, walkers, canes, and wheelchairs.

After searching through neighborhood garage sales, Mr. Kasa repairs and cleans the crutches and other medical aids he has gathered and then donates them to local Veterans' Administration hospitals, children's centers, and schools. In light of recent administration cutbacks and the fact that Mr. Kasa is a disabled veteran himself, his fellow disabled veterans especially appreciate his efforts.

As commendable as his actions are, Mr. Kasa is not satisfied that he cannot do more. His next project is to charter a bus so that he may transport handicapped children and veterans on outings to museums and sporting events.

Mr. Kasa receives no remuneration for his efforts. No one told him to devote his spare time and energy to helping those around him. He does it simply because he cares. He is not alone in this endeavor. Unable to drive himself, Mr. Kasa's former wife and Veterans of Foreign Wars brethren help him to collect his valuable gifts.

These unselfish acts deserve to be applauded and appreciated. Mr. Kasa is not a talker, but a doer. If this spirit of generosity and thoughtfulness were to spread across our country, all Americans would benefit greatly. Mr. Kasa, I salute you.

GRAMM-RUDMAN MUST BE REPEALED

HON. TED WEISS

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 21, 1986

Mr. WEISS. Mr. Speaker, I today introduced legislation to repeal the Gramm-Rudman Balanced Budget Act. This legislation is urgently needed to protect American citizens from the devastation of massive budget cuts in this and the coming years. A copy of this legislation is printed below.

H.R. 4020

A bill to repeal the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. REPEAL.

Subject to section 2, the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985 (title II of Public Law 99-177) is repealed, effective as of the date of its enactment.

SEC. 2. EXCEPTION.

Sections 261 and 272 of the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985 (and section 275 of such Act to the extent that it relates to those sections) shall not be included in or affected by the repeal of such Act under section 1, and shall be effective as though this Act had not been enacted.

WALTER J. ROBERTS LEADS ROCKAWAY CHAMBER

HON. JOSEPH P. ADDABBO

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 21, 1986

Mr. ADDABBO. Mr. Speaker, I am proud to call to the attention of my colleagues a very special man in my community of Queens.

Since his election to president of the Rockaway Chamber of Commerce last year, Mr. Walter J. Roberts has earned the respect and praise of many. Mr. Roberts has proven his dedication and devotion toward improving the quality of life within the Rockaway community through his hard work in forming the Rockaway Industrial Task Force. By making local entrepeneurs aware of the vast opportunities that exist in the Rockaways and by establishing an extensive Job and Motivational Training Program, the task force will help ignite a surge in industrial activity that will create a positive change for all Rockawayites. I feel that both Mr. Roberts and the members of the Rockaway Chamber of Commerce should be commended for their great effort.

I would like to share with you Mr. Robert's comments, which illustrate his excitement in the chamber's role on the task force. I insert into the RECORD the text of his message:

PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE

(By Walter J. Roberts)

When I accepted the Presidency last year, I promised you that the Chamber would be in the forefront in attracting industrial development to our community, to provide much needed employment for our unemployed and underemployed neighbors. I can report to you now that we are on our way. Together with the Far Rockaway Revitalization Corp., Catholic Charities, Community Board 14, and the Rockaway Local Development Corp., we have formed The Rockaway Industrial Task Force. Our purpose is to encourage, and assist local entrepreneurs to expand their businesses, to provide many goods and service needed in the Rockaways. We will take advantage of our proximity to JFK to entice industry that is being forced out of Manhattan, to relocate here where we are able to offer attractive costs and a ready labor force.

Our program includes job training, and most important, motivational training that will assure these businesses a highly motivated employee. At present, more than $31,700,000 in tax dollars is spent on subsistence benefits in the Rockaways, with virtually no visible improvement in the quality of life, either to the recipient, or the community as a whole. This is a very expensive band aid.

Our program will greatly reduce the tax drain, and at a fraction of the cost, go a long way toward improving the quality of life for all Rockawayites. By joining the groups together, and forming this Task Force, we agree on an agenda, then use each others strength and resources, in a united effort to attain our goals. In the past, our beautiful peninsula has fallen prey to outside sources, where decisions were made that have darned near ruined us. Our Task Force is one giant step in returning the destiny of Rockaway to Rockawayites.

In closing, we at The Chamber are excited about the current interest in the Arverne Urban Renewal Area. Be assured that your Chamber of Commerce will take a strong role in any decisions involving the use of this valuable land.

AMENDING THE AGE RESTRICTIONS FOR EMPLOYMENT IN THE FEDERAL PRISONS

HON. BENJAMIN A. GILMAN

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 21, 1986

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to share with the House legislation I have recently introduced to correct a discriminatory practice utilized in the hiring and retirement policies of the Federal prison system.

In accordance with Public Law 93-350, the Attorney General is charged with the authority to promulgate regulations which prohibit the hiring of anyone over the age of 35 and mandate the retirement of any one over the age of 55 in our Federal prison system. This restriction encompasses all employees, regardless of their physical condition, experience, special training, or other qualifications.

Mr. Speaker, these regulations are a serious breech of our Nation's progress in ending, not perpetuating discrimination—whether it be based on race, religion, gender or age—wherever it may exist. I have introduced, H.R. 3911, to correct this injustice.

Currently all prison employees are classified as law enforcement officers. This includes cooks, janitors, secretaries, and prison guards alike. As such they are eligible for early retirement and augmented pensions. However, to extend the 35 age limit on hiring, and the 55 age limit on mandatory retirement, across the board, to all of these individuals in these very different jobs, is not only grossly unfair, but it is also bad management policy.

H.R. 3911 provides that no one age 45 or under can be refused employment based on his or her age. My bill also raises the mandatory retirement age from 55 to 65. My legislation reflects the need when making these decisions, to approach each employee on the basis of his or her abilities and experience, not on the birthdate placed on an employment application. The recent spate of disturbances in our Federal prisons indicate to me that we need qualified, experienced men and women to police our Federal prisons and that that criteria, in and of itself, should be our primary concern.

Mr. Speaker, I encourage my colleagues to join me in holding to establish fair, sensible, age limits for the hiring and retirement of our Federal prisons employees. I am inserting the full text of H.R. 3911 at this point in the RECORD, and commend it to my colleagues for their attention:

H.R. 3911

A bill to amend sections 3307(d) and 8335(b) of title 5, United States Code, with respect to the age limits for appointment and mandatory retirement of law enforcement officers engaged in detention activities

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. APPOINTMENT.

Section 3307(d) of title 5, United States Code, is amended—

(1) by striking out "The" and inserting in lieu thereof "(1) Except as provided in paragraph (2), the"; and

(2) by adding at the end the following:

"(2) The maximum limit of age for original appointments to a position as a law enforcement officer whose duties primarily involve detention as defined by section 8331(20) may not be fixed under paragraph (1) at an age lower than 45 years.".

SEC. 2. RETIREMENT.

The first sentence of section 8335(b) of title 5, United States Code, is amended—

(1) by inserting ", or 65 years of age in the case of a law enforcement officer whose duties primarily involve detention as defined by section 8331(20)," after "55 years of age"; and

(2) by striking out "that age" and inserting in lieu thereof "the applicable age".

CIVIL RIGHTS POLICY SHOULD BE PUT BACK ON TRACK

HON. DON EDWARDS

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 21, 1986

Mr. EDWARDS of California. Mr. Speaker, one of the major disappointments of the first session of the 99th Congress was the failure of the Congress to enact the Civil Rights Restoration Act to overturn the Supreme Court's Grove City decision. Despite the bill's cosponsorship by over 200 Members of the House and a majority of the Senate, efforts by some to bog the bill down with other issues that miss the very point of the bill have prevented us from enacting this crucial legislation into law.

A January 3, 1986 editorial in the Los Angeles Times addresses this dilemma, and points out the reasons why enactment of the bill is so important. I share the editorial's conclusion that in the months ahead we must "put civil-rights policy back on a track that it should never have left."

I commend the article to the attention of my colleagues. The article follows:

SIDETRACKED CIVIL RIGHTS

Congress went home for the holidays without having passed a single piece of civil-rights legislation in 1985. Yet a critically important bill awaits action. It restates a policy that should be obvious: No federal money should support institutions that discriminate on the grounds of race, sex, age or physical handicap.

For 20 years that had been a clearly articulated national policy, starting with the passage of the Civil Rights Act of 1964. That policy was seriously eroded in a 1984 U.S. Supreme Court decision involving Grove City College in Pennsylvania. The court held that while federal aid to students was indeed aid to the college, it triggered restrictions against discrimination only in the program directly invloved. The student-aid office thus was covered, but not the rest of the school.

Many members of Congress said that this was too narrow an interpretation. Still, the Justice Department indicated that the decision, which involved sex discrimination, would be applied to similarly worded statutes barring federal subsidies to institutions that discriminate against minorities, the elderly or the handicapped.

Since the Grove City decision, the Department of Education has indeed dropped several key cases. One involved charges that the University of Maryland's intercollegiate athletic program did not provide the same travel allowances and support services to female athletes that it did to males. Such sex discrimination had clearly been prohibited under Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972, which helped expand opportunities for women and girls in sports. The number of high school girls in sports has increased from 7% to 35%, and the number on college athletic scholarships has grown from virtually none when Title IX was passed to more than 10,000 today. Many more women now attend medical, law, veterinary and graduate schools as well, thanks to federal efforts to end sex discrimination.

To overturn the Supreme Court ruling and correct any misapprehension that the Justice Department has about legislative intent, Congress has been considering the Civil Rights Restoration Act of 1985. The bill would make it clear that if an institution received federal money for any program or activity, the entire institution would be covered by anti-discrimination laws. The measure has wide bipartisan support, which is appropriate because three of the four laws involved were signed by Republican Presidents. Fourteen high officials from the Johnson, Nixon, Ford and Carter Administrations have testified in favor of the legislation, saying that they never had any problem with what Congress meant.

What should be obvious is not, however. Some House members seek to entangle the measure in the abortion debate, where it does not belong. Others want to exempt institutions with religious affiliations. Institutions controlled by religious groups are already legitimately exempt; this amendment would broaden the loophole through which 800 to 900 institutions might escape coverage.

The bill has never come to the House floor, because the civil-rights forces lack the votes to beat back amendments that have little to do with the substance of the measure. When Congress returns to work, it should resolve to clarify the law and put civil-rights policy back on a track that it should never have left.

THE THIRD ANNUAL MAYORAL CONFERENCE ON ALZHEIMER'S DISEASE, A COMMITMENT TO CARE

HON. MARIO BIAGGI

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 21, 1986

Mr. BIAGGI. Mr. Speaker, on November 1, 1985, I was privileged to participate in the Third Annual Mayoral Conference on Alzheimer's Disease and Related Disorders which took place at Columbia University in New York City. The theme for this conference was "A Commitment to Care: Present Problems, Future Focus" and it provided a vast and enlightening outlook on what victims, family members, and care providers can expect from their local, State and Federal governments in the treating of researching this degenerative disease that has ravaged the lives of 2.5 million people in our country who have Alzheimer's disease. We also heard personal testimonials from family members of victims who suffer from this disease, as we learned from experts and professionals who have spent many years of their careers studying this devastating disease and its effects in the hopes of finding both the cause and the cure.

I was honored to represent the Federal Government's role in the research and treatment of Alzheimers when I appeared as a respondent along with staff representatives of my distinguished colleagues Representatives EDWARD ROYBAL and THOMAS MANTON. It is important to note that I am an original cosponsor of a bill authored by Chairman ROYBAL of the House Select Committee on Aging, H.R. 2280, the Comprehensive Alzheimer's Assistance and Research and Education Act, which is the main bill pending before Congress on this subject.

It is my pleasure to share some testimony that was presented that day, but before I do that, I would like to commend the mayor of the greatest city in the world, Edward Koch of New York, for his initiative in calling for this timely conference for the third time. His leadership and commitment in this important area has been outstanding from the outset, and provides needed encouragement to the New York City community. I would also like to commend and praise my friend, Janet Sainer, commissioner of the New York City Department for the Aging, whose opening remarks provided great hope and impetus for the obvious successful outcome of the conference. Commissioner Sainer's role has been vital to the 1.3 million citizens in New York City who are 60 years of age and older. I would also like to take a moment to extend my personal thanks to Randi Goldstein, director of the Alzheimer's Resource Center, without whose competent assistance and ability this conference would not have been a success.

At this time, I would like to share with you testimony from four key participants:

TESTIMONY OF MARION ROACH, AUTHOR AND CAREGIVER

My name is Marion Roach. I am the author of a book, "Another Name for Madness."

Seven years ago my mother's doctor told me that he thought that my mother was senile. I thought she was going mad. We both were wrong.

My mother is one of the more than two million victims of Alzheimer's disease in this country—according to recent statistics, she is one of the seventy thousand victims living in New York City.

My mother in her life has been a newspaper reporter, a wife, a mother, a girl scout leader and a visiting nurse volunteer.

In the progression of her disease she became frightened, angry, paranoid, hostile and imcompetent.

Then she became completely dependent on the aid of others. She could not be left alone. She became repetitive and confused. She became agitated. She stopped reading. She could not complete sentences. Then, for a while, she spoke rapid gibberish.

She could not bathe properly and she had no memory. She had to be bathed, fed and dressed.

At last year's conference I spoke about how she had just been admitted to a nursing home. I spoke about when she went in, that she did not speak and barely walked, that she was incontinent and seemed dead and that within two months she had recovered her speech and was walking—that she recognized me, but had not for the six months prior to entering the home. I talked about how the home saved what there was of her . . . how it took the shreds of her intellect and used them to their maximum potential.

Before my mother went into the nursing home she was living in an apartment with twenty four hour a day seven day a week care. She was protected from the world, and it, was protected from her. She was, as I said, almost dead.

In two days living in the nursing home, my mother, for the first time in six months initiated a conversation. She recognized me for the first time in six months. She is happy, cared for, stimulated, safe and clean.

They cut her sedation in half and they work with her every day to keep her stimulated . . . art therapy, music therapy, dance, current events. Don't tell me it's not important. It's a right. She has every right to whatever life she can have.

My mother's at-home care bankrupt my family. It demolished my father's life savings. It demolished my mother's considerable life savings. My sister and I were left to care for her. As a middle income family, we were left to fend for ourselves. And we did not do very well. We were paying $360.00 per week for a home attendant. Private insurance does not cover these costs for long term custodial care. Nor does Medicare. Medicaid will—if you are virtually destitute. So, we set out to make my mother destitute. It was easy. We paid for her care and in five years the life saving of two working and educated adults was gone and she was left, depending on two daughters both in their twenties to support her. We had a lawyer. We did what we could and at the time she was severe enough to qualify for a nursing home we were also broke. The financial and emotional ruin came together.

Apparently, next year, the payment program for nursing homes in this state is going to change. Payment made by the type of illness is being rescaled and you know who is going to suffer—you know who is being put so low on the scale of payment that nursing homes will be acting in their best interest by refusing these patients—that's right, the demented. Those patients who have never been paid for, who have suffered and been confused and caused financial ruin to their families and who have no where to go but to the nursing homes because we cannot afford to keep them at home, are going to be shut out based on reimbursment. And, you know what? I don't blame the nursing homes. They cannot afford to take these patients if what they will be reimbursed is what is being proposed.

"It's like this. According to the New Resource Utilization Groups, called "RUGS", the reimbursement system for long term care will be remodeled, making a system which everyone agrees is already unfair to the dementia patient, even more so.

We, professionals and family members, are against a system which is being put into effect whereby the types of care needed by Alzheimer's patient is given such a low rating as to be last on the list of what the government will pay for.

For some inexplicable reason in this country, we value intrusive medical procedures over non-intrusive care—we would rather pay for a limb to be replaced, a chest to be opened, a machine to be attached, than we would care which does not intrude on the body. I don't know why. We don't seem to take seriously the hands-off care that some illnesses require.

Here's my metaphor. The Alzheimer's victim needs medical care. Medical care comes in the form of another person. The person, is in the beginning of the illness a cane, then a walker and then later a wheelchair. The other person is the victim's kidney machine if you must, the person's seeing eye dog, the person's very link to any type of proper care. Without it, they would die. They would die early into the disease.

So, when the New York State people sat down and wrote out this new rating, they figured numbers of hours of attention per patient—and, here's the rub—the salary of the person required to give that attention. An AD patient doesn't need a RUN or LPN. They need an attendant, someone to bathe them, someone to watch them in arts and crafts, someone to get them to do whatever it is they can do with what is left of their intellect, someone to watch them, to feed them. They don't need transfusions for the AD, they need aid.

So, of course they don't cost much. But they need as much. They cannot exist unaided. Based on the scales going into effect next year, the reimbursement for the AD patient will be about one third that daily rate for the highest rated group in the nursing home. So, nursing homes given the choice will choose the other patients, the non-demented. It's not secret they prefer the non-demented, and frequently turn down the AD patient, saying they are too hard to handle.

So, at the last stages of the family's battle, you are going to throw this at us. Not if we can help it.

The way I look at all policy makers, you are either with us, or you're going to have to change. Because we're not going to. We're not going to because the demands of this disease won't let us.

It doesn't go away.

I believe that there are no truths to be learned without a challenge to one's courage and to one's intellect. This requires that we think beyond the usual bounds of medical care. But I believe that every truth, every success, comes after pushing courage another distance.

We are asking you to do the same. We have looked at our lives and we have seen parts of them demolished. We are not even asking this help for the victims now in nursing homes. I am asking you so that next year, the victims can get the financial help they need. We've given the families a lot of help.

Only you can do this for us.

TESTIMONY OF ROBERTA GOODMAN, ESQ.

Good morning, my name is Roberta Goodman and I represent ADRDA—NY. I am also the daughter of an Alzheimer's disease victim and for the past 7 years, I have witnessed the devasting effects of this disease on my mother, my father and myself. When one family member suffers from Alzheimer's, all family members suffer.

We thank the legislators for their efforts in proposing legislation designed to help, but we need enacted legislation, not just proposals.

ADRDA is an organization dedicated to: (1) Educating the public to medical, social, psychological and financial impication; (2) encouraging and supporting research into causes, improved diagnosis, therapy, cures for and prevention of AD; and (3) Providing a network of support groups.

The City of NY is helping to achieve some of ADRDA's goals. We thank Mayor Koch and Commissioner Sainer for their commitment to the elderly of our City. The Alzheimer's Resource Center, established by the NYC Department for the Aging is one of a kind in providing a vital public service. In 18 months, greater than 10,000 people have been helped. Most recently, much needed legal advice has become available to help individuals wade through the myriad of information to determine medical eligibility.

But we need more. This is a disease that has reached epidemic proportions. Over 2 million people diagnosed with AD and an untold number of victims.

We need you to propose and enact legislation which will allow people to remain independent and live with dignity. As the laws are presently formulated a spouse must spend down to near poverty levels before becoming eligible for assistance.

Recently, a NY Court recognized the inequities of the provisions of the medicaid laws and remedied this unfairness by allowing an elderly healthy spouse of an institutionalized medicaid recipient to receive the proceeds of her husband's pension despite the demands of the medicaid program for reimbursement. We applaud the Koch Administration's decision not to challenge the Court's opinion. But we cannot rely on the beneficence of a single judge.

We need legislation to redefine eligibility under the medicaid laws. Medicare is insufficient and does not cover custodial care. We need tax credits or deductions for home care. We need funding for establishment and operation of respite services. We need funding for research programs to conquer this disease.

We urge you to propose and support a tax credit or deduction to those who are able to keep a family member at home and provide long term care. The savings in real dollars is enormous.

We urge you to provide respite services for those unable to hire outside help or get out of the house. They too have become prisoners of this disease. They desperately need relief. We urge funding local model projects in each borough.

Last and certainly not least, we urge you to establish funding for research programs. The cause and cure for AD remains a mystery. Research grants are desperately needed for developing treatments.

You can make the changes to help put an end to the daily agony suffered by our families. We urge you to propose and enact effective legislation.

We do not know when AD will strike, or who it will strike, but we do know it will strike. It may happen next year, or next month, or next week or tomorrow. But it will happen. To put an end to the dread of tomorrow, we must do something today.

TESTIMONY OF JACK M. POLLOCK, PH.D.

I begin with the simple proposition that living with a victim of AD is impossible to describe. By various knowledgeable people, Alzhemier's has been termed "the disease of the century," "a funeral that never ends", "a sickness that robs the mind of the victim and breaks the hearts of the family," "a 36-hour day," "the plague of the unburied dead."

I have lived with AD for over seven years. The victim is my wife. She was only 53 when her brain began to crumble.

In this country, there are 2½ million people like my wife. Some are younger; most are older. All are without hope.

Are these people and their families doomed to suffer alone? Does society owe them nothing for a lifetime of toil? For all they have given the community, is there no return? I speak not only of medical care and financial assistance. Though these are important, I think that uppermost in the mind of everyone who has a family member afflicted with AD is the fervent prayer that a cure be found.

Those who now have AD may be beyond redemption. But we worry about our children. And the chindren, the brothers and sisters, live with the sword of Damocles hanging over their heads. "Will it happen to me?" they ask. "If it does, I don't want to live."

What we of this nation must do is to declare war on AD. The Disease threatens to overwhelm us, both in terms of human misery and financial loss. By the year 1990, 78 billion dollars will be spent to institutionalize AD patients. Yet the federal government has allotted only 50 million for research on AD, only a third of the amount budgeted for research into AIDS.

How much longer do we have to wait? Like Macbeth to the physician, we cry out in pain to the medical profession:

"Canst thou not minister to a mind diseased
Pluch from the memory a rooted sorrow
Raze out the written troubles of the brain?"

My purpose in coming before you this morning is simply to emphasize the terrifying urgency of the problem. If we mobilize our resources of money and talent, I am convinced we shall find a treatment, a cure, or a prevention. We are spending countless billions in outer space. I submit that the few cubic centimeters of space encompassed by the human skull are far more complex, significant, and vital than a million light years of outer space. Whatever it may cost to eradicate AD, the price will be cheap, the investment wise. Unless we act now, and act decisively, the number of AD cases will double. If we succeed, the dividends will be not only a saving of millions in the cost of health and nursing home care, but an alleviation of human suffering that could well be unparalleled in medical history.

TESTIMONY OF GLADYS HARBURGER, CAREGIVER

My name is Gladys Harburger. My husband of forty five years is the AD patient. My parents were immigrants sent to these shores because in America people respected that an individual was "endowed with certain inalienable rights"! To them that meant each of us was entitled to personal dignity and respect.

Here I am—where I didn't expect to be—needing help from others and to my amazement there is little or no help for me.

I doubt that there is anyone who doesn't recognize the need for homecare for AD patients and even more unfortunately for the caretakers: This is a relentless thirty six hour a day experience.

If we are agreed that homecare is imperative—then why don't all of us avail ourselves of this service. Some of us feel that we must assume this responsibility. It is our loved one and who can take care of our patient with greater dedication than us? Then we start worrying about our survival. What would happen to our patient then. It is rare that there is another family member to take over.

So now we have acknowledged the fact that we must have help. If we are on Medicaid with a great deal of effort, humiliation and aggressiveness we can get a health aide.

If we are not eligible for Medicaid we are offered no assistance. We must then pay between six and twelve dollars an hour—or about $75.00 a day for full time care. We are being asked to pauperize ourselves before we can get help. Once again the middle class is being victimized.

There is an alternative to pauperization. We are being advised to divest ourselves of our resources so that we may qualify for Medicaid.

Over two million Americans are estimated to suffer from this disease and with hospital and institutional care costs escalating daily—how much more economical would it be to provide home care. If a well thought out plan of home care were developed—a progressive plan responding to the needs of the patient and caretaker at least 25% of the overhead costs of the many billions needed for institutionalized care—would be saved. Both the patient and the caretaker would fare better in their home surroundings.

Please let this not be a pleasant exchange of concerns. Let it move us to action and we promise to support your actions in whatever way seems desirable.

The Third Annual Mayoral Conference on Alzheimer's Disease and Related Disorders was made possible by the dedication and commitment of the following individuals whose names I would also like to note:

Carolyn Bottum, Public Affairs, New York City Department for the Aging.

Leane Cheek, Associate Director, Public Affairs, New York City Department for the Aging.

Mildred Evans, Administrative Assistant, Alzheimer's Resource Center.

Susan Goldfein, Conference Coordinator, Alzheimer's Resource Center.

Michael Helmers, Administrator, Alzheimer's Disease and Related Disorders Association, Greater New York Chapter.

Pamela Jaffe, Family Counselor, Alzheimer's Resource Center.

Jean Marks, Educational Director. Alzheimer's Disease and Related Disorders Association, Greater New York Chapter.

Diana Walcott, Information & Referral Specialist, Alzheimer's Resource Center.

Helene Wolff, Director, Public Affairs, New York City Department for the Aging.

TRIBUTE TO JOSEPH SYLVESTER CLAY

HON. LOUIS STOKES

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 21, 1986

Mr. STOKES. Mr. Speaker, family, friends and the St. Louis community will pay tribute and give recognition to one of its influential and solid citizens on Sunday, February 2, 1986, with a Joseph Sylvester Clay, Sr., Day celebration in the city of St. Louis.

Mayor Vincent C. Schoemehl, Jr., has issued a proclamation declaring February 2, 1986, as Joe Clay Day in the city of St. Louis. Joseph Sylvester Clay, Sr., was born in the city of St. Louis and is the son of the late Irving Charles Clay, Sr., and Luella Hyatt. His brothers and sisters include Congressman WILLIAM L. CLAY, Sr., Irving C. Clay, Jr., executive assistant to the mayor of St. Louis, Mary E. Lloyd, retired from the Missouri State Department of Health, Flora M. Everett, entrepreneur and Hazel Brown and Norman Cain, both of whom are deceased.

Joe just recently retired after many years of successful employment as a skilled technician with the pipefitters of the city of St. Louis. He was known by his peers during his many years of employment as a sincere, considerate person who trained many young men in the development of their skills as pipefitter technicians. It has been stated by his coworkers that he has left a positive imprint on those with whom he has been involved.

He is married to Delores Carey and is devoted to his family and children, Wanda and Joseph, Jr. Joe Clay was educated in the St. Louis Catholic parochial and public school systems. Joe Clay, in addition to being a dedicated civic and community leader, is well known for his accomplishments in the area of athletics. He excelled as a participant in many areas of athletic endeavors that include baseball, softball, basketball, football, swimming and was lauded by all for his exceptional athletic abilities and his keen sense and knowledge of the technical aspects of the various games.

After a long and successful career as an outstanding participant, he has continued his involvement in athletics as a developer and general manager of an athletic organzation. Over the last several years, the Judy's softball team of St. Louis, under his guidance and leadership, has emerged as a power in St. Louis softball and has many championships to their credit.

The citizens of the St. Louis area have had a longstanding and deep love for Joe Clay and will come together on February 2, 1986, to show their appreciation to him for the commitment he has made to enhance the quality of life for his fellow man.

Mr. Speaker, I rise today to also pay tribute to Joe Clay and I call now on my colleagues in the U.S. House of Representatives to join me in congratulating Mr. Joseph Sylvester Clay, Sr., for his contribution to the St. Louis community.

A TRIBUTE TO THE 101ST AIRBORNE DIVISION AND SP4C MICHAEL L. WHITEMAN

HON. ROY DYSON

OF MARYLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 21, 1986

Mr. DYSON. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor the memory of the members of the 101st Airborne who lost their lives on December 12, 1985 in the service of their country.

When loved ones answer the call to duty in the face of danger, we are wont to know both pride and fear. Whether they be soldiers serving in distant lands, or police patrolling neighborhood streets, we are all too aware of their vulnerability. We are heartened by their courage, but we are also anxious for their return.

Knowing what we may, when tragedy is visited, the grief is no less. And so it is for the families of the 248 fine young soldiers whose mission of peace ended abruptly in a quiet, snow covered field in Gander, Newfoundland.

Our hearts go out to the loved ones who grieve the untimely loss of these brave soldiers. Though it does little to lessen the sorrow of their loss, I know I join with the entire country in expressing my deep sympathy to each family. While we will never know what accomplishments they might have achieved had they lived, we will always remember the cause for which they served so proudly.

TRIBUTE TO ELLIE GRAHAM

HON. CARL D. PURSELL

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 21, 1986

Mr. PURSELL. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to pause and comment on the career of a woman from my hometown of Plymouth—Ellie Graham.

Mrs. Graham is retiring from her work at the Observer & Eccentric Newspapers this month and I believe it fitting to comment on her outstanding work and dedication as a community journalist.

Mrs. Graham went to work at the Observer Newspapers in May of 1967. Then headquartered in Plymouth, she was no stranger to the community—having raised her family there and having been active in Plymouth events.

Ellie spent most of her time working on the central copy desk until 1976, when she became the suburban life editor of the Plymouth edition. This was a natural role for a woman who already was involved with the Plymouth Symphony, the Plymouth Historical Society, Plymouth Fall Festival, and other organizations.

The distinguishing part of Mrs. Graham's work is her dedication to the community and the people who live there. It is rare to find a community journalist who, beyond writing about a town's people and their events, takes the time to truly care about them. And because of that, Mrs. Graham has had a positive impact on the Plymouth community.

But beyond that, I believe it bears mentioning that this appreciation for an American town and American people comes from one who was born and raised in a different country. Mrs. Graham is a proud citizen of our neighbor to the north, Canada.

I would like to join with the people from my hometown in congratulating Ellie on her retirement. It truly is to our benefit that years ago a schoolteacher from Essex County decided to cross the Detroit River and make her residence in Michigan.

BTX'S: A THREAT TO HEALTH AND THE ETHANOL INDUSTRY

HON. DOUG BEREUTER

OF NEBRASKA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 21, 1986

Mr. BEREUTER. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing legislation that will prohibit oil refiners from introducing benzene, toluene, and xylene, commonly known in the industry as BTX's, into commercial gasoline. I introduce this legislation for two primary reasons: One, is environmental; the other is economic.

From an environmental standpoint, all of us are aware that the Environmental Protection Agency has mandated that oil companies phase out the use of lead as an octane enhancer in gasoline. The EPA mandated this phaseout because it has been determined that lead is a toxin and that its use in gasoline is detrimental to both air quality and individual health.

The EPA lead phaseout has left oil companies with two basic alternatives for increasing the octane level in the production of gasoline. One is the use of ethanol manufactured from agricultural products such as grain or sugar cane. The other is the use of one or more BTX's—benzene, toluene, or xylene. The first is a clean and efficient method for increasing the octane ratings in gasoline. The other raises potentially serious health consequences for Americans because benzene is a proven carcinogen and toluene and xylene are suspected carcinogens.

Because BTX's are naturally present in gasoline and a by product of petroleum refining, the major oil companies during the past year have tended to invest in the development of BTX facilities rather than turn to ethanol as an octane enhancer for gasoline. The increased use of BTX's, however, raises several potential health concerns. The carcinogenic consequences of BTX's are currently being investigated by EPA, OSHA, and other Federal and State agencies. Recent cancer biopsies from animal studies show that benzene causes leukemia, and a variety of other cancers including lymphoid cancers, cancers of the skin, ovary, oral cavity lip, tongue, lung, and mammary gland.

While it appears that the regulation of BTX's would have positive health benefits, it is also apparent that their limitation, or even complete phaseout, would have positive economic consequences for our depressed agricultural economy. A recent report by the Congressional Research Service shows that the United States uses nearly 110 billion gallons of gasoline annually. Assuming a 10-percent alcohol mixture, CRS estimates that 11 billion gallons of alcohol would then be required. At 2.55 gallons per bushel, 4.3 billion bushels of grain would be needed to manufacture this amount of alcohol. Thus, 40 percent of the grain harvest of the United States could potentially be utilized to supplement our Nation's automotive fuel supply.

While it may be many years before this amount of grain is put to use in the production of alcohol, there is already a proven market for ethanol in the United States with a tremendous potential for future growth. Increased ethanol usage in recent years has already proven to be an important market for corn producers. Between 1980 and 1985, corn used in production of ethanol rose from 16 million to nearly 200 million bushels annually. With the phaseout of lead as an octane enhancer in gasoline, the potential exists for the amount of corn used in ethanol refining to double, or even possible triple, over the next few years.

In light of our current huge surpluses of grain, ethanol production is a safe, efficient and economical means of utilizing excess agricultural products. The use of corn in ethanol production also helps to increase farm income and reduce the cost of Federal farm programs. However, if oil refiners are allowed to manufacture and use BTX's on an economically large scale, then ethanol will cease to be a viable alternative to lead as an octane enhancer and a market for surplus grain production.

The legislation which I am introducing today is a simple, straightforward means to both protect public health and insure a future for our developing ethanol refining industry. My bill would prohibit any petroleum refiner from introducing benzene, tolulene, or xylene into gasoline for the purpose of increasing its octane ratings. Naturally occuring BTX's already present in gasoline would be limited to the following amounts: benzine—1 percent tolulene—3 percent and xylene—3 percent by weight.

I urge all my colleagues who are concerned about the environmental health consequences of BTX's and the future of the ethanol industry to support this legislation.

HONORING BERTRAND E. STEWART, JR.

HON. VIC FAZIO

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 21, 1986

Mr. FAZIO. Mr. Speaker, I would like to pay tribute to a good friend and outstanding civil servant, Mr. Bert Stewart, Jr. After nearly four decades of distinguished service in the Federal work force, Bert retired on December 31, 1985.

Bert enjoyed an exemplary career as a civil servant. His 38 years of service featured numerous honors that highlight the outstanding contributions he has made to our Nation. Included in this list of accomplishments is his selection as the California Air Force Association's USAF Civilian of the Year in 1982, the Air Force Award for Meritorious Service in 1984, and the Commander-in-Chief's Installation Excellence Award in 1985. Simply put, these awards recognize Bert's willingness to tackle a variety of demanding leadership positions and the challenges that accompany them.

Furthermore, as Deputy Director of Maintenance since 1976, Bert played a key role in revitalizing McClellan Air Force Base. In fact, his efforts were instrumental in turning McClellan into the most progressive center in the logistics command system. While these leadership skills will be sorely missed, I am confident that his efforts have helped build a solid framework for the continued growth and success of McClellan.

Mr. Speaker, it has been a great pleasure to work with Bert over the years. He has been a tremendous asset to the Federal Government, McClellan Air Force Base, and the Sacramento community. On this special occasion, I would like to extend my personal thanks and appreciation to Bert, his wife, Willodean, his son, Fendley, and his daughter, Marcia. I wish them all the very best of luck!

GRAMMBO

HON. THOMAS J. DOWNEY

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 21, 1986

Mr. DOWNEY of New York. Mr. Speaker, now that OMB has informed us of the cuts which are necessary to meet the requirements of the Gramm-Rudman budget balancing act—or "Grammbo" for short—we can examine what exactly wasteful Government spending is.

What is wasteful spending? Spending on wasted youth is a waste. The cuts in the alcohol, drug abuse and mental health administration and juvenile justice and delinquency prevention programs clearly demonstrate this. Is the First Lady aware of these planned cuts in her pet project? Let's not kid ourselves: photo ops and press events that highlight the perils of drugs are welcome. But refining an image at the expense of America's wasted youth is an outrage.

After the year of the crash we are informed that air safety must be cut. I humbly submit that draconian cuts in the FAA budget, including the elimination of air traffic controllers, is not the way to promote the general welfare.

The American dream, a good job and a home, is wasteful. The Federal Housing Administration will be sold—merger mania has hit the Feds—and the Job Corps will be gutted. Perhaps we don't need a trained work force to compete with nations like Japan and West Germany for jobs.

Education spending is a waste. Guaranteed student loans, aid to the handicapped, block grants, bilingual education, and vocational and adult education will all be severely hit. A mind, it seems, is not such a terrible thing to waste.

What does the President consider not to be a waste? Weapons, of course. The President will ask Congress once again for a major increase in defense. Star wars is sacrosanct, leaving an innovative and stable deterrent—the Midgetman—open to slashes. Readiness and spare parts and manpower will suffer. This will leave us in the uneviable position of having a 600-ship Navy without the personnel to staff it.

Our national debt is a gun pointed at the heart of our economy, of that there is no doubt. But we are heartless if we continue to waste human potential. And what does the administration do? It hides behind Gramm-Rudmann. We should all remember: you can run, but you can't hide.

There has got to be a better way to deal with our economic and fiscal difficulties. That is the challenge both the executive and legislative branches of Government face in the next few months.

THE BINGHAM FAMILY EMPIRE SELF-DESTRUCTS

HON. CARROLL HUBBARD, JR.

OF KENTUCKY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 21, 1986

Mr. HUBBARD. Mr. Speaker, on January 10, 1986, the headline of the Courier-Journal, a Louisville, KY daily newspaper read: "Bingham family to sell newspapers, other holdings."

Thus it was officially announced that the family of Barry Bingham, Sr., would be selling the media empire the Bingham family had accumulated during the past three generations.

The decision to sell was received by many Kentuckians with mixed emotions and reactions.

Another lead story in the January 10 edition of the Courier-Journal on the the top-half of the front page read: "State's leaders are saddened by decision." Typical of the long-standing one-sided news coverage by the giant Bingham media, the reporters for the Bingham morning newspaper quoted a few Kentucky leaders expressing their dismay at the decision by Barry Bingham, Sr., to sell the Courier-Journal, the Louisville Times, WHAS radio, WHAS-TV, and Standard Gravure, the printing company.

Indeed, there are tens of thousands of Kentuckians who are overjoyed with the news that the Bingham family will no longer control the news in Kentucky.

In fact there are tens of thousands of constituents in my 24-county western Kentucky district who look forward to the time when the Louisville newspapers are owned by a corporation or individuals who will give our portion of the State fair news coverage.

For several days I shall share with my colleagues in the 99th Congress and later with my constituents the news coverage about the Bingham empire which has so boldly been printed by newspapers that do not fear the Bingham empire of Kentucky, including such outstanding daily newspapers as the New York Times and the Washington Post.

First from the New York Times of last Sunday, January 19, a lengthy news article written by Alex S. Jones and headlined "The Fall of the House of Bingham":

[From The New York Times, Jan. 19, 1986]

"THE FALL OF THE HOUSE OF BINGHAM"

[By Alex S. Jones]

LOUISVILLE, KY.—"It's a sad day for all of us," said Paul Janensch, executive editor of The Courier-Journal and The Louisville Times, hoarsely addressing several hundred somber co-workers who had jammed the company cafeteria to consider their uncertain future. It was 3 P.M. on Friday, Jan. 10, the day after the abrupt announcement that the Bingham family, the glamorous and tortured clan that had owned the newspapers for almost 70 years, was selling out.

The decision to sell was a shock, but not a surprise. For two years the staff had watched as the Binghams warred with each other over the family holdings. Finally, in desperation, Barry Bingham Sr., the 79-year-old patriarch, decided to sell, hoping that his decision would somehow bring a semblance of peace to the family. What it brought initially was a blistering accusation of betrayal from Barry Bingham Jr., the son who has run the family companies since the early 1970's.

Barry Jr. resigned in anger and was in the cafeteria to speak. "In my proprietorship here," he said, "I've tried to operate these companies so that none of you would be ashamed of the man you work for."

When he had finished, the employees rose as one in a standing ovation. Many wept. But the applause was not entirely for Barry Jr., it was also for his stand against selling. And the tears were for themselves, for the uncertain future of the newspapers, for the tragedy of the Binghams and for the passing of an era.

News of the sale prompted a flood of expressions of grief, mostly from Kentuckians, mourning the end of the Bingham stewardship. Under the Binghams, the Courier-Journal won eight Pulitzer Prizes, establishing the newspaper as one of the finest in America.

For large families struggling with the problems of multi-generational ownership of a business, the saga of the Binghams and their failure to hold together was particularly poignant. And for the dwindling number of families still operating their own newspapers, the news from Lousiville was chilling.

For the proud Binghams—a clan of southern patricians who are often compared to the Kennedys because they share a history of tragic death and enormous wealth—the pain of selling was redoubled because it may have been avoidable. It is not financial duress forcing the sale, but implacable family strife, as ancient as the struggle between Cain and Abel.

A week of interviews with the key family members, with many of their employees and with their friends has revealed the details of the Bingham family feud. From the interviews comes a portrait of a family both hugely blessed and critically flawed, a family caught in a dispute that it was unable to resolve.

"It became increasingly clear that there was just no way out of the emotional tangle we'd fallen into," Barry Sr. said. "In bringing up my children, I somehow did not get across to them that people have to make compromises."

In the drama, there is no single villain, nor a hero or healer who might have bridged the gulf of distrust and anger. In the end, a powerful gridlock developed among the three Bingham children—Barry Jr., Sallie and Eleanor. Their parents, convinced that no amicable way could be found to keep the business in the family, elected to sell all the holdings. It was a decision that Barry Sr. said he made now so that he and his 81-year-old wife could face the trauma together.

In part, the roots of the crisis may lie in the family's enormous wealth that allowed the Bingham children to grow up in what Sallie calls a "golden dream," creating a generation of Binghams used to their own way. The parents' insistence on unruffled family relations and their distaste for overt emotion left Barry Jr. and his sisters without the need to forge deep relationships with each other as children—relationships they might have called upon to resolve their impasse as adults.

Running through the Binghams' story are the devastating deaths of two sons. The death of Worth Bingham, the first-born, haunted Barry Jr., who eventually took over stewardship of the newspapers, the role intended for his older brother. In recent years, Barry Jr.'s devastating sense that he was losing the family's confidence seemed to make him dig in his heels so rigidly that he invited the decision to sell—perhaps, as Sallie says, in an unconscious wish to be delivered of his burden.

THE FIRST SESSION IN REVIEW

HON. LEE H. HAMILTON

OF INDIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 21, 1986

Mr. HAMILTON. Mr. Speaker, I would like to insert my Washington Report for Wednesday, January 15, 1986 into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD:

THE FIRST SESSION IN REVIEW

The first session of the 99th Congress was one of the least productive and most frustrating in recent years. Congress enacted only a few major laws, repeatedly missed deadlines, and often deadlocked to the point of crisis. It began the year in a fierce partisan fight over Indiana's 8th Congressional District and ended it with all night sessions and last minute solutions. It left for next year the biggest problem on its agenda: $200 billion annual deficits.

The absence of a clear agenda, antiquated congressional procedures, sharp disagreements on the substance of the major issues, and the tough choices those issues pose contributed to the poor record. The year was also a potent reminder of the way fiscal constraints remove easy alternatives. Passing out benefits is easier than distributing sacrifices.

The Congress and the President have tried to cut taxes, increase military spending, retain the safety net to protect the poor, and balance the budget. But they are realizing that these goals cannot be reconciled. The Senate wanted to cut domestic programs, including social security benefits; the House ruled out cutting social security benefits and wanted to cut military spending; the President agreed with the House on not cutting social security benefits, but he insisted on more military spending without an increase in taxes. The result has been a political gridlock, nearly bringing the legislative process to a halt, with not one of the top political leaders able or willing to break it.

The session's major accomplishments were the enactment of the Gramm-Rudman amendment requiring a balanced budget by 1991, a House-passed bill to reform the tax code by reducing the top individual tax rates while repealing many deductions, and farm bills to continue the present farm programs for five years and to aid financially the troubled Farm Credit System. The biggest policy change this session was the slowdown in the military buildup after defense spending had nearly doubled in the President's first term. Defense still fared better than domestic programs, which were frozen or cut, but military spending grew barely enough to cover inflation.

My major disappointment this session was the way Congress did—or failed to do—its work. Congress and the President often leave work to the final days, but this year it seemed everything had to be resolved in the last week of the session. Five major bills, summing up the entire year's work, were on the agenda for the final five days: a bill to raise the debt ceiling with the Gramm-Rudman deficit reduction amendment; a "continuing resolution" to fund half of the government not funded by appropriations bills already enacted; a "reconciliation bill" restructuring a range of domestic programs to meet new budget targets; an omnibus farm bill; and a tax reform bill.

Crowding everything into the last few days is a terrible way to govern. These five bills are enormously important, containing thousands of provisions that affect every American. In the closing hours of the session, I asked myself repeatedly why the Congress is unable to act except in the rush to adjourn. The unwillingness of the Congress to make a decision until seized by a deadline, the cumbersome inefficiency of the process, and the physical exhaustion that apparently must set in before adjournment can be reached impressed me more than ever in 1985.

For example, the budget emerges from a complex, almost incoherent, and unending process. Deadlines are set, then not met; debt ceilings are extended for a few days at a time, then raised at one minute to midnight. Last minute, catch-all continuing resolutions, financial much of the government and containing thousands of important provisions, are made available only hours, sometimes minutes, before members vote. Such procedures are not the best way to govern.

Few ironies are greater than Congress mandating future deficit cuts, while failing to make immediate cuts because it cannot agree on steps to be taken in the reconciliation bill. The reconciliation bill was Congress's best opportunity to do something about the red ink, but in the end Congress did not do it. From the standpoint of actual deficit reduction, the Congress failed in 1985. Yet the promise of the Gramm-Rudman amendment is that it will force the President and the Congress to finance the government without huge deficits.

The President did not have a good year in the Congress in 1985. He was unable to translate his personal popularity into enactment of his legislative programs. Repeatedly, on trade, taxes, foreign policy, the budget, and defense, he was on the defensive, fending off political attacks, and struggling to regain momentum. He certainly did not control the legislative agenda as he did in the first years of his presidency. With his budget for 1986 dead on arrival on Capitol Hill, he was forced to accept a defense budget that allowed an increase only for inflation. In foreign policy, the President requested 100 MX missiles, but Congress limited deployment to 50. The President wanted military aid for Nicaraguan rebels, but settled for only non-military aid. He was refused permission to sell advanced arms to Jordan. He was also forced to change his policy toward South Africa, and imposed limited economic sanctions to head off more drastic action by Congress. Congress rejected his campaign stand that deficits would solve themselves. My impression is that he made a major mistake by making tax reform (instead of deficit reduction) his highest, and almost only, domestic priority.

Congress left plenty to do in 1986, including immigration reform, higher education, a new federal retirement system, tax reform, a Superfund toxic waste bill, and a civil rights bill revising the Supreme Court's Grove City decision. Congress passed, but the President vetoed, legislation restricting imports of textiles and other items. More action on trade is expected in 1986. My guess is that 1986 will be a year of increasingly hard choices for Members of Congress.

FRINGE BENEFIT EXCEPTIONS REQUIRED FOR CERTAIN EMPLOYEE USES OF VEHICLES

HON. HAL DAUB

OF NEBRASKA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 21, 1986

Mr. DAUB. Mr. Speaker, last year, this Congress passed and sent to the President, H.R. 1869, legislation to repeal the contemporaneous recordkeeping requirements added by the Tax Reform Act of 1984. The repeal of these recordkeeping requirements was a significant step toward eliminating the complexity of tax reporting for the business use of automobiles. On the other hand, this bill also reaffirmed our intent to require some minimal evidence of business expenditures to substantiate business deductions.

Last year's bill, however, was only directed at one portion of the taxpayer uncertainty related to the use of employer-provided vehicles—recordkeeping. The other portion of the issue which the Ways and Means Committee and Congress chose not to address was that of when does an employee's use of a vehicle constitute fringe benefit income?

While commentators and subsequent Treasury regulations have generally tended to combine recordkeeping and fringe benefit issues in a singular approach, these areas represent two distinct tax policy questions. The question of whether a taxpayer should document a business deduction and the question of whether an employee has taxable income from the use of a vehicle should in fact bear no relationship to each other.

Recently, the Department of Treasury released proposed regulations in the fringe benefit area. While these regulations manifest a good faith effort to resolve many of the fringe benefit concerns which have been raised, more can be done. It is my hope that improvements can be made through constructive discussions with the Department of Treasury and through legislation, if necessary.

In this regard, I am today introducing legislation H.R. 4013 which would provide a few specific nontaxable fringe benefit uses of vehicles, as follows:

Certain uses of public law enforcement and emergency vehicles, Vehicles used by employees who are off duty but on call, Use of certain "special use" vehicles, and Use of farm use vehicles.

These exceptions are only a beginning in this area. During the coming weeks, I intend to work closely with my colleagues who are interested in this issue and are seeking constructive changes. I hope each of my colleagues will be able to support this effort.

DEMOCRATIC RESPONSE TO THE PRESIDENT'S DECEMBER 21 RADIO ADDRESS

HON. CHARLES E. BENNETT

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 21, 1986

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. Speaker, for the purpose of the RECORD, I submit herewith, the Democratic Party's response which I was honored to make on December 21 to the President's radio message of that same date:

The President is certainly to be congratulated on his political leadership in moving the tax reform bill this year. So too, is Congressman Dan Rostenkowski. Together these two men, Democrat and Republican, have moved us forward.

Some further amendments to the bill are needed, however. Democrats would like to have a real minimum tax in the bill, so that corporations could not evade their tax duty. Also, dollar-wise, lower-income families did not fare that well in the bill and we would hope that this could be improved in the conference with the Senate.

In any event, tax reform, now a real probability, should help us get rid of the unconscionable loopholes that have existed for many years.

On the Gramm-Rudman bill, as the President said, he and the Congress deserve credit for coming to grips with the very serious budgetary problems our country now has. These resulted from excessive spending over many years—but mostly from the President's 1981 tax cut which slashed Government revenues but not Government spending.

The Gramm-Rudman bill can help—but the solutions are not in some quick gimmick but in thoughtful legislation against excessive Government.

The President also spoke of the emergence of a new foreign policy to help freedom fighters around the globe. Democrats can buy that policy if it is done consistent with international law. We can hardly criticize the Soviets for intervention against established governments if we do the same thing ourselves. It is important for our own security to support our international commitments in our treaties and under international law.

Now there is yet time to talk about the Christmas season, now with us. The Christmas season was heralded 2000 years ago by the words: "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, goodwill toward men." The central goal of the season being peace, this is even more meaningful this year, so soon after the Geneva summit and the promise of future summits to seek peace.

This year, to fulfill the spiritual aims of America and of this season, we must surely put the quest of peace at the forefront. If we give glory to God and earnestly seek goodwill among men, we will assuredly meet with success.

Christmas has many meanings to people. In the minds of most of us it is a time of giving—not of having or of getting. We are indeed more blessed with happiness in giving than we are in receiving.

Christmas is a time of spirituality. In this season we look at our religion—whatever religion that may be. While acknowledging spiritual life to be a fact, we recognize that spiritual attainments may be judged differently by various religions. At this season, we forget about differences and accentuate our enthusiasms. Christians celebrate the birth of Christ, but we in no way detract from other religions. We Americans are glad that we live in a nation which is not only supportive of religion and spiritual attainments, but which is also at the same time supportive of religious freedom.

Christmas is a time of faith. It is a time when we emphasize what our spirituality tells us rather than what we reason out by intellect.

Sometimes we worry about our lack of faith and feel insufficient in our failures. But at Christmas, all of us as brothers and sisters renew our faith and are grateful for our spiritual roots.

Christmas is a time of hope—a time for optimism. Those of us who have experienced failure (and who has not?) need a particular time of hope. Christmas is such a time. Hope is of the best of our blessings; for without it we have nothing.

Tennyson speaks of "The mighty hopes that make us men!"

Great hopes do not tarry in small souls. Hope is a part of the spirit of Christmas for it is a time of birth—a time of new beginnings. We all need new beginnings.

Christmas is above all a celebration of love. We celebrate a birth described in the scriptures in terms of love: "For God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten son." Love is the dominant theme throughout all our scriptures. In the 19th Chapter of Leviticus, the Lord spoke to Moses saying: "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself. While faith may vanish with sight and hope with fruition, love will always endure, at the heart of the spirit of Christmas.

So, at this Christmas season, we Democrats, and our Republican colleagues, pledge ourselves to join together not only to meet our challenges here at home, but also to lay the foundations for lasting peace world wide.

This is Congressman Charles Bennett wishing for you, the full blessings of this happy season and the joys of faith, hope, and love; knowing full well that the greatest of these is love. Merry Christmas!

EXPRESSION OF THANKS TO REX GRIGGS FOR A DISTINGUISHED CAREER AS REGIONAL CHIEF FORESTER

HON. GEORGE E. BROWN, JR.

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 21, 1986

Mr. BROWN of California. Mr. Speaker, today, I would like to take a moment to say thank you for a constituent who retires today after serving the State of California for 36 years. Mr. Rex N. Griggs is retiring as the California Department of Forestry's regional chief for southern California after starting his career at the age of 17 as a seasonal firefighter.

Rex Griggs fought fires and drove forestry trucks and took on other seasonal work while attending college until 1955. His career took him from forestry firefighter foreman and on to the Conservation Camp Program. In just 2 years, he was promoted to assistant forestry superintendent at Oak Glen. Through the years, he moved to Los Banos and Riverside while he started his work as a fire prevention specialist. It's been 20 years since he developed fire prevention displays, programs, and procedures that remain in active use today.

In 1971, Rex Griggs moved to northern California to continue his career advancement before coming to San Bernardino County as ranger-in-charge and county fire warden for the largest county in the United States.

In just a little over 1 year from the time he was named assistant deputy State forester for the southern California region, he was promoted to regional chief. His responsibility for the Department of Forestry covered the counties of Inyo, Mono, Ventura, Los Angeles, Orange, San Bernardino, Riverside, San Diego, and Imperial. He was actively involved in the development and implementation of the Firescope Program, an innovative fire-fighting control system. Chief Griggs is widely acknowledged for his expertise in fire protection and other emergency services.

He was one of three experts sent to Portugal to advise the Government on methods to improve their wildland fire protection. Acting with the Agency for International Development, Chief Griggs not only helped improve Portugal's fire protection, but put into place an exchange program that was educational and beneficial to the firefighters of both nations.

Rex Griggs has served the State of California with a long and distinguished career. I wish Rex and his wife, Shirley, good health and good luck.

AN EXPLANATION OF VETERANS' COMPENSATION AND PENSION INCREASES AND HEALTH CARE IMPROVEMENTS

HON. FRED J. ECKERT

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 21, 1986

Mr. ECKERT of New York. Mr. Speaker, in the recent session Congress approved the Veterans' Compensation Rate Increase and Job Training Improvements Act of 1985, and the Veterans' Health Care Admendments of 1985. The President has signed these into law. I supported those measures and am pleased they are now in effect for the benefit of our veterans.

The Veterans' Compensation Rate Increase and Job Training Act will provide a needed 3.1 percent cost-of-living adjustment [COLA] for compensation to over 2.2 million service-connected disabled veterans and over 300,000 widows and children of veterans who lost their lives in service. A similar increase will apply to pension benefits for certain other veteran dependents and non-service-connected disabled veterans. The 3.1-percent COLA included in this legislation is equal to the COLA for Social Security recipients, based on the increase in the cost-of-living between October 1984 and September 1985. The payment of the compensation COLA under this legislation is retroactive to December 1, 1985.

The extension of the Job Training Act permits cash incentives to employers who hire and train certain long-term unemployed Vietnam-era and Korean conflict veterans. Over 400,000 veterans have applied for participation and training under the Emergency Veterans' Job Training Act since its inception.

The Veterans' Health Care Admendments of 1985 will make it easier for veterans to get medical care in non-VA facilities and will improve the quality of care in VA medical facilities. These are the chief provisions:

Requires the VA to monitor and evaluate the quality of its health care and requires the inspector general to monitor the quality assurance program.

Expands the number of geriatric research, education and clinical centers from 15 to 25.

Permits veterans receiving nursing home care to be eligible for VA outpatient care for up to 12 months following discharge from a hospital.

Extends eligibility for health care for veterans exposed to the herbicide agent orange through fiscal year 1989.

Increases from $35,000 to $50,000 the maximum coverage of the serviceman's group life insurance programs and make the insurance available to the Reserves and inactive National Guard.

Directs the VA to set up a pilot program of chiropractic services to veterans who received treatment in a VA hospital in the previous 12 months for neuromusculoskeletal condition of the spine.

Mr. Speaker, I am committed to supporting legislation such as these measures that provide adequate benefits in health care for the veterans of our wars, particularly those with service-connected disabilities and those in need. Medical services and compensation to veterans are obligations and debts which the U.S. Government must maintain at adequate levels during these trying years of necessary budgetary readjustment.

GILMAN LEGISLATION EXTENDING THE CAPITAL GAINS EXCLUSION FOR ALL HOMEOWNERS

HON. BENJAMIN A. GILMAN

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 21, 1986

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, I have recently introduced legislation to allow all homeowners the option to keep, tax free, up to $125,000 from the profit from the sale of a principal residence. My bill, H.R. 3912, extends the current eligibility for the one-time capital gains tax exclusion from those 55 years of age and older, to homeowners of all ages.

While the economic recovery has seen the overall pace of inflation slow, housing costs have continued to remain exorbitant. Indeed Americans are forced to pay taxes on the price increases of their homes and other properties which are the direct result of inflation. No homeowner should receive less for their home than they paid for it due to unfair taxes which have been leveled on it. Until Congress can act decisively on legislation to establish a system of indexing capital gains so as to avoid these deleterious effects, we should protect homeowners from being unfairly penalized when they do choose to sell their single most valuable investment—their home.

Adoption of this bill would allow Americans the freedom to decide at which point in their lives they could best utilize the one-time exclusion. For a young family making the move from their starter home to a larger residence, extension of the one-time exclusion could help them realize their dreams. The bill is equally advantageous to single, recently divorced, or recently widowed homeowners who need access to the capital and/or cannot afford to maintain a multiperson residence.

H.R. 3912 would also have the direct effect of freeing up the housing market in cases where homeowners a few years under 55 are holding onto their residences so as to be able to take advantage of the one-time exclusion. This increased availability would in turn foster lower cost housing and enable those who could not previously afford to own their own home an opportunity to do so.

Mr. Speaker, I urge the Ways and Means Committee to consider this legislation in a timely manner. I commend H.R. 3912 to my colleagues' attention for their support and insert the text in full at this point in the RECORD.

H.R. 3912

A bill to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 to eliminate the age requirement for eligibility for the one-time exclusion of gain from the sale of a principal residence

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That (a) the section heading and subsection (a) of section 121 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to one-time exclusion of gain from sale of principal residence by individual who has attained age 55) are amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 121. ONE-TIME EXCLUSION OF GAIN FROM SALE OF PRINCIPAL RESIDENCE.

"(a) GENERAL RULE.—At the election of the taxpayer, gross income does not include gain from the sale or exchange of property if, during the 5-year period ending on the date of the sale or exchange, such property has been owned and used by the taxpayer as his principal residence for periods aggregating 3 years or more."

(b)(1) Paragraph (1) of section 121(d) of such Code (relating to special rules) is amended by striking out "age, holding, and use" each place it appears and inserting in lieu thereof "holding and use".

(2) Paragraphs (2) and (3) of section 121(d) of such Code are each amended by striking out "subsection (a)(2)" each place it appears and inserting in lieu thereof "subsection (a)".

(3) The table of sections for Part III of subchapter B of chapter 1 of such Code is amended by striking out the item relating to section 121 and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"Sec. 121. One-time exclusion of gain from sale of principal residence."

(4) Sections 1033(h)(3), 1034(1), 1038(e)(1)(A), 1250(d)(7)(B), and 6012(c) of such Code are each amended by striking out "by individual who has attained age 55".

(c) The amendments made by this Act shall apply to sales or exchanges after December 30, 1984 in taxable years ending after such date.

EVAN BAYH

HON. ANDREW JACOBS, JR.

OF INDIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 21, 1986

Mr. JACOBS. Mr. Speaker, the following Indianapolis News article about our friend, Evan Bayh, is a nostalgic tonic to all of us who enjoyed the fellowship of our former colleague Birch E. Bayh of Indiana.

The story of this outstanding Hoosier family is a story of excellence and the warmth of human concern.

The article follows:

[From the Indianapolis News, Jan. 9, 1986]

EVAN BAYH—HIS PARENTS SET THE STANDARDS HIGH

(By Nelson Price)

The style.

That is what hit you first about the father—an aw-shucks campaigner with a flair for flesh pressin', winkin' his blue eyes and slippin' in stories about the Hoosier hogs at his Shirkieville farm.

The style.

That is what hit you about the mother—a poised, polished perfectionist who charged through public appearances with chin up, a polite smile and, as her husband used to say, "a 100-mile-per-hour engine in a 30-mile-per-hour chassis."

The style.

That is what hits you about their son, a young man described by lifelong acquaintances as respectful, well-groomed and courteous almost from the day he could form his first word.

"He is very much his mother's son, far more like Marvella than Birch," observed Larry Conrad, former Democratic secretary of state whose friendship with the Bayh family stretches back to Birch's first U.S. Senate campaign in 1962. "Evan has always been unfailingly polite, kind of the perfect child, the kid you always hoped your own children would behave like."

Birch Evan Bayh III, known as Evan, lives in an immaculate downtown condominium with furnishings that include a framed print of the signing of the Declaration of Independence and a sign on his desk that insists "Something Good is Going to Happen to You."

None of this, however, is what you notice first.

Second only to his startling good looks (one local Republican gripes that Evan and his blonde bride "remind me of Ken and Barbie dolls") you notice the framed photographs.

There is Marvella Bayh with Birch, Marvella with Lyndon Johnson, Marvella by herself, Marvella in profile.

Marvella.

With mention of her name, young Bayh's voice softens. He talks extensively about his trip to Scandinavia and the Soviet Union, a jaunt shared just by the two of them.

"It is a special journey between two compatible friends," his mother, a second-generation Norwegian, wrote in an autobiography published posthumously in 1979.

Evan points out that relatives of his wife Susan, a Pasadena, Calif., native, met his mother at the 1968 Democratic national convention.

He volunteers that, to acquaint his wife Susan (they were married in April) with Marvella roots, they traveled over the Thanksgiving holiday to the Enid, Okla., farmlands where she was raised.

He notes that, because so much of his mother's adult life was spent in the glare of press conferences and talk shows, he owns an array of videotapes with her answering questions, greeting the public or crusading against the disease—cancer—that ultimately overtook her.

Momentarily surprised, a visitor blurts out. "Can you bear to watch those tapes?"

Evan's lower lip trembles and, for only a moment or two, the formality falters.

"I can't look at them without getting all choked up," he confides, and his eyes mist. "It's been more than five years, and I still can't do it.

"You know what really hurts? It's when you hear the voice. The voice can really get to you . . ."

He stops and struggles for control.

"Evan is a gentle person," said Sally Kirkpatrick, former aide to ex-Rep. Dave Evans, D-Ind., and press secretary to John Livengood, chairman of the Indiana Democratic Party.

"But I don't think gentleness or compassion should be confused with weakness. He is firm in knowing what he wants."

What Evan Bayh wants, at age 30, is to be secretary of state. An attorney with the Indianapolis firm of Bingham, Summers, Welsh & Spilman, he has been spending many of his evenings and weekends on what politicos call the rubber-chicken circuit.

Indiana politicians say Evan Bayh could be the only bright spot on a Democratic ticket that still has no announced challenger to U.S. Sen. Dan Quayle.

Gordon Durnil, chairman of the Indiana Republican Party, professes not to be worried about young Bayh:

"His father never won an election by any large margin, and, in fact, was defeated the last time he ran (by Quayle in 1980). Plus, the liberal perception of his father might be more of a negative.

"Indiana voters are more Republican and more conservative now than they were. I want to add that we're not like the South, where there are political dynasties based on name. You don't just get Indiana votes based on a last name."

On that final point—and that point alone—Evan Bayh concurs.

"You can't be propped up by someone else," he insists. "I intend to work for this, and I intend it earn it.

"My father has not made one phone call or one contact on my behalf—at my request."

But what if he were Evan Smith? Wouldn't his odds—and his starting base of campaigning for a top state office—be different?

"He is Evan Bayh," Conrad counters. "You can't change who you are. That argument is petty. Anybody who meets Evan can tell he has the talent and the mind to handle public office."

"The public is intelligent" Evan says. "People are not going to vote for you because of who your parents are.

"I'm very proud of my father, but the issues he confronted—and the world he served as a public official—were much different than the ones today. My father and I share many values, but we differ somewhat on the way to achieve them."

Is that a way of saying he is more conservative than Birch Bayh?

"More moderate, I guess," he responds, pointing to his college major (he graduated from Indiana University in 1978 with a degree in business) as a possible explanation. "On the whole, though, I think ideological labels are meaningless. If anything, call me more of a pragmatist.

"Even though I tend not to be partisan, I think having different points of view in the Statehouse is crucial. We have had just one point of view (Republican) in almost all state offices for too long."

Born in Terre Haute, Evan Bayh moved to Washington at age 7 when his father stunned Indiana politicians by narrowly defeating Republican Sen. Homer Capehart.

Educated at St. Albans, a private prep school near the nation's capital, Evan's classmates included Marvin Bush, son of Vice President George Bush.

Young, energetic and handsome, Birch and Marvella were linked closely with the Kennedys (particularly after a 1964 airplane accident in which Birch pulled Ted Kennedy from the wreckage and was credited with saving the senator's life) and the Lyndon Johnsons.

Intertwined with the glamor, however, were bouts with tragedy. In Oklahoma, Evan's maternal grandfather slid into alcoholism, married a second wife younger than daughter Marvella, attempted suicide and eventually succeeded, shooting his bride and himself in a scandal that became front-page news in Indiana.

In her autobiography, Marvella Bayh recounts her father's first suicide attempt, when he gulped down the contents of a jumbo-sized aspirin bottle—while she and 6-year-old Evan were visiting.

"My mind was a tug of war, torn between loves and responsibilities a thousand miles apart," she wrote, referring to her father's demands and the duties of a politican's wife. "Evan, at 6, standing behind me in that car, proved to be of enormous comfort.

"When he discovered I had left our suitcase at Mother's house, when we couldn't find a place to spend the night, when my double vision (caused by an earlier car crash) came back as it got dark and I began to panic. Evan said, "Now, it's going to be all right, Mother. Don't worry. And he kept patting me on the shoulder, like my father would have done."

Asked about his grandfather, Evan says simply, "His life was a tragedy in the truest sense of the word."

As the son of a controversial politican. Evan also learned to cope with—although he says he never accepted—vituperative attacks on his father. Here is Marvella's account of one such incident, which occurred while she and Evan were home alone watching TV commentator Eric Sevareid laud Birch as a "Midwestern John Kennedy":

"The phone rang, and Evan answered it. A man's voice said. 'You tell your father that if he is going to be a Midwestern JFK, I am going to be another Lee Harvey Oswald,' and hung up."

Although Mrs. Bayh, wrote that Evan begged his father not to run for president in 1972 [Birch bowed out after the diagnosis of Marvella's breast cancer), young Bayh stresses that he enthusiastically supported the 1976 attempt—and even left I.U. for a semester to campaign.

Noting that Birch finished second only to an unknown named Jimmy Carter in Iowa. Evan says he still believes if Bayh had entered the race a few weeks earlier—and pushed a smidgen harder—the outcome (and, perhaps, national history) would have changed.

Stung by the loss, Evan signed up as a deck hand on an American freighter bound for Germany.

"People don't realize this, but I am no stranger to hard physical labor," he said, noting he worked heavy construction jobs during summers as a teen-ager.

A tackle on the St. Albans football team, Evan considered suiting up in the mid-1970s for Lee Corso, then I.U.'s football coach.

"I have a lot of interests, and we both enjoy meeting people," Evan says, referring to his father. "Maybe it is true, that I am more reserved than he is. He is easy-going, and I tend to be a perfectionist, to pay attention to the details."

Observing Evan on the campaign stump last May, Ed Ziegner of The News wrote, "There was no 'raw meat' in the speech, something which the elder Bayh almost always got in . . . (Evan) needs more rapport with his audience, some jokes to toss in here and there. He is a bit too sober-sided."

"I think I've livened up since then," Evan responds. "For someone to expect me, at age 30, to be the same finished product as my father, well, that's a bit rough on me. If I came across as a jokester, people would say, "Who does this young guy think he is?' "

Asked about political aspirations, Evan says, "I have no agenda beyond secretary of state. I have seen too many people in the public eye become captives of their ambition."

He also rules out further attempts at public office by his father. Now married to a former ABC News official and the father of 4-year-old Christopher, Birch Bayh is an attorney in private practice in Washington.

Birch Bayh was best man at his son's wedding. Although Marvella wrote extensively about her husband's absences from family activities because of his rigorous agenda, Evan shares different memories:

"I remember when there would be only two parents at a Little League game—and he would be one of them. I never felt neglected.

"We talk on the phone all the time. Mostly about fundamental values, about how all-consuming public life can be, about how nothing is worth neglecting your family."

Susan Bayh, an associate with the Indianapolis law firm of Barnes & Thornburg, says she enthusiastically supports Evan's candidacy.

"When you marry someone, you marry the whole person," she explained. "Part of that person is his aspirations and dreams."

"People sometimes say to me, "No one can be polite all the time,' " Evan concedes. "I do have moments where I fall short.

"But growing up in the public eye, you always know that you are a reflection of your parents. I never wanted to let them down."

There is silence for a moment, and you suspect his thoughts have strayed.

Evan Bayh is staring at the pictures on the wall, the photographs of a delicate but driven woman. A woman who won honors for courage, whipped her husband in college speaking contests, coped with car wrecks, a plane crash and cancer—and shaped a son.

CONGRESSIONAL SALUTE TO THE UNITED STROKE FOUNDATION OF LONG BEACH, CA

HON. GLENN M. ANDERSON

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 21, 1986

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I rise to pay tribute to the United Stroke Foundation's branch in Long Beach, CA, which will be celebrating its sixth anniversary at an installation dinner on January 30.

Six years ago, 32 residents of Long Beach joined together to form the first branch of the United Stroke Foundation. With the parent organization located in Los Angeles, the Long Beach branch was asked to serve as a model for future branches and established themselves as an autonomously functioning branch of the United Stroke Foundation.

Because a stroke can have a dramatic impact on the emotional well-being of the affected person and his family, the Long Beach branch of the United Stroke Foundation has endeavored to help patients and their families cope with these feelings and has provided hope, support, understanding, and encouragement. All these services are provided at no cost to the patient or his family.

The program in Long Beach began with a number of stroke patients from the veterans hospital, and has grown to serve over 200 patients in its 6 years. The group helps patients find their way back into the mainstream of society after they suffer a stroke. Following completion of the United Stroke Foundation program, the patients are encouraged to join a stroke activity center which focuses on activities and events for stroke patients.

In its 6 years, the Long Beach branch of the United Stroke Foundation has helped many patients and their families recover from the emotionally stressful stroke experience. My wife, Lee, joins me in saluting the fine work of the officers and members of the United Stroke Foundation's Long Beach branch and in wishing them continued success and all the best in the years ahead.

H. ROGER GILBERT RETIRES

HON. ROBERT G. TORRICELLI

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 21, 1986

Mr. TORRICELLI. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to recognize a distinguished individual who has been deemed a friend of progress and of the people. Mr. H. Roger Gilbert is retiring after eight consecutive 2-year terms as councilman of the second ward in Secaucus, NJ. On January 25, 1986, a retirement dinner will be held in his honor.

It is with great pleasure that I bring to the attention of my colleagues the highlights of Mr. Gilbert's long and distinguished career.

A veteran of 2½ years in the 99th Infantry Division in Europe and an alumnus of Stevens Institute of Technology, Mr. Gilbert has lived an eventful life. He has tirelessly devoted his energies to countless civic, charitable, and political organizations.

In addition to his tenure on the Secaucus Council, Mr. Gilbert has served as secretary to the board of adjustment, former chairman of the town's Green Acres Program, chairman of the local Red Cross campaign, regional chairman of the Red Cross, vice chairman of the Cancer Fund, and Heart Fund chairman. He has been a devoted member of the American Legion memorial post 118 and former national vice commander of the Catholic War Veterans, U.S.A.

He is married to the former Vera Klink and a member of the accounting staff of Scholastic Magazine, Inc.

Mr. Gilbert has been a dedicated public servant for these many years. He richly deserves the recognition being bestowed upon him and I am pleased to join in the tribute to him.

TRIBUTE TO GARDNER L. HUTCHINS

HON. TONY COELHO

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 21, 1986

Mr. COELHO. Mr. Speaker, next month, Mr. Gardner L. Hutchins will retire from his position as chief administrative officer for the County of Stanislaus, CA, after 20 years of service to the county.

During World War II Gardner served in the U.S. Air Force with valor. He continued to serve in the Air Force until 1963, when he accepted a position as senior safety representative for the State compensation insurance fund in Stockton. In 1966 Gardner began his career of service to the County of Stanislaus as the county's safety and civil defense coordinator. Over the years he has held such positions as county librarian, principal administrative analyst, acting mental health director, and acting hospital administrator. In 1975 Gardner was appointed to the position of deputy administrative officer for the county, and in 1979 he accepted the position he now holds, chief administrative officer.

Gardner has also been active in several local community service organizations. He is a member of the Modesto Rotary Club, the American Legion, and the Elks Club. He is also a member of the California County Administrative Officers Association and the National Association of County Administrators.

On behalf of the citizens of Stanislaus County, I would like to extend my deepest appreciation to Gardner Hutchins for the dedicated service he has given to our county over the last two decades. I wish him continued health and happiness in his retirement.

CHRISTMAS GIFTS ARE STILL BEING PASSED OUT

HON. FORTNEY H. (PETE) STARK

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 21, 1986

Mr. STARK. Mr. Speaker, last week the National Highway and Traffic Safety Administration [NHTSA] proposed an extension of the corporate average fuel economy standard [CAFE] at the demand of General Motors and Ford Motor Co. As you know the initial rollback came last fall upon their earlier cry, that for financial reasons they couldn't meet the law. And, once again General Motors and Ford used this excuse to get NHTSA's most recent proposal.

NHTSA announced the proposal last week. This was the same week in which many began to feel the real effects of the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings Deficit Act. It is no wonder then that the administration failed to report that these car manufacturers—which showed their most profitable years ever last year—would owe the Federal Government over half a billion in fines were the rollback not granted.

At the same time that most of the Federal Government is being asked to make drastic cuts in their budgets as a result of Gramm-Rudman, the administration is considering over a half a billion dollar gift to General Motors and Ford.

The CAFE standards were established in response to the Arab oil embargoes and the resulting energy crisis in the United States in the mid-seventies. They were primarily created for a better national energy conservation policy and to ease our dependence on foreign oil.

Not only has the Transportation Department thrown this energy conservation policy by the wayside, it's right hand obviously doesn't know what the left hand is doing. On one hand, air traffic safety will have millions cut from their budget, as will the Coast Guard and many others under the DOT. Yet DOT has found it in their hearts to seriously consider granting these profitable car manufacturers a half a billion dollars relief in fines.

STILL NEED FOR TAX REFORM

HON. HOWARD COBLE

OF NORTH CAROLINA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 21, 1986

Mr. COBLE. Mr. Speaker, the consideration of tax legislation consumed the House of Representatives during the last 2 weeks of this last session of Congress, and I fear that we, as Members, permitted the tail of "reform" to wag the dog.

The well-intentioned advocates of tax reform, including the President, Members of Congress, leaders of business and industry and taxpayers throughout the country, often plead the case for reform using words such as "historic" and "revolutionary." Although we struggle with issues that inevitably divide our people, I'm sure all Americans might agree that our system of taxation should be fair and simple. To achieve these goals would truly be historic and revolutionary.

In the closing days of this session, we were lured by the appeal and attraction of the ideals of fairness and simplicity when, actually, those qualities were absent. In the dark of night, pressed by the clock, we yielded to the temptation of a bill presented to us in haste by the House Ways and Means Committee which was said to be fair and simple; it was neither.

A bill containing more than 1,300 pages, offered to supplement hundreds and hundreds of other pages of statutes and regulations, layer upon layer since 1954, cannot be said to offer simplicity. If it contains elements of fairness, then Members should be given a fair opportunity to examine every page. Instead of the necessary deliberation, Members were exhorted to "just pass something" before adjournment and "get it over to the Senate" where problematic portions of the bill could be addressed.

Further, while the committee dropped plans to change the tax treatment of such items as insurance inside interest buildup, State and local tax deductions, and employee benefits, these positive measures do not outweigh the bill's weaknesses. H.R. 3838 is not a profamily, progrowth tax bill. It denies a $2,000 personal exemption for those who do not itemize. New dollar limitations are imposed on investment retirement accounts [IRA's] and 401(k) savings plans. The bill repeals the investment tax credit and radically revises depreciation rules, which will make America less productive. The U.S. Chamber of Commerce and the National Association of Manufacturers point out that implementation of H.R. 3838 will significantly lower economic growth. Because the Senate has yet to consider the bill, it will probably not be sent to the President until the fall of 1986. This will create a planning nightmare for all businesses, increasing the possibility of a recession.

On two occasions, I was given the opportunity to vote on the rule for the consideration of the Ways and Means Committee bill. I voted "no" each time because we were not providing this House with ample time to study the alternatives before us.

Now that the Ways and Means Committee bill, H.R. 3838, has passed the House, I do hope that the Senate will improve this legislation. However, I was not sent to Congress to vote half-heartedly for legislation which cannot stand on its own merits with the mere hope that it will be improved somewhere else in the legislative process.

I hope that the Senate will provide a means to promote free enterprise, encourage savings and planning, and stimulate the creation of jobs. More specifically, I hope that the Senate will restore full contributions to 401(k) plans. Our timber and real estate industries should not bear an undue share of the tax burden as the committee bill would require.

The Senate should borrow liberally from the Republican alternative. This bill was concise, pro-family, and pro-growth. It would remove 6.5 million poor Americans from the tax rolls, delivering an 86 percent rate-reduction to the working poor. It implemented a $2,000 personal exemption for everyone, including nonitemizers. The highest marginal rate was 35 percent, compared to the 38 percent bracket in H.R. 3838. While shifting $110 billion in taxes from individuals to corporations, it would not have placed an additional $30 billion on the back of our expanding economy as the committee bill did. Moreover, unlike the committee bill, the Republican alternative contained a "super minimum tax," thereby ensuring that all individuals and corporations pay some tax. In a study comparing the two bills, taxpayers who earned less than $75,000 a year received better treatment from the Republican alternative. While the House voted it down, this was the better bill.

The complicated process of passing tax legislation was itself taxing. Arguments on every side were mixed with personalities, personal loyalties, and any number of conflicting signals from our constituents. As the process continues, I counsel more deliberation so that we can come closer to those elusive and sometimes illusory goals of fairness and simplicity.

TEYON McCOY WELCOMED TO THE UNIVERSITY OF MARYLAND BASKETBALL PROGRAM

HON. ROY DYSON

OF MARYLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 21, 1986

Mr. DYSON. Mr. Speaker, I would like to bring to the attention of my colleagues the upcoming addition of Teyon McCoy to the University of Maryland basketball program.

While some of us in Maryland may not be familiar with Teyon's sharp shooting and dominating defense, his heroics are well known by high school basketball players and coaches throughout the State of Indiana.

At 6 feet 1 inch, Teyon plays point guard, a position well suited to his extraordinary quickness and superb ball-handling skills.

Hailing from Bishop Noll High School in Hammond, IN, Teyon is the proud recipient of the BC All-Star Camp outstanding player award and the leading candidate for "Mr. Basketball" in Indiana.

As Teyon prepares to tackle both books and basketball at the University of Maryland, I wish him, as well as his future teammates, great success.

Congratulations, Teyon. And congratulations, Coach Driesell, for providing the people of Maryland with so many years of exciting basketball. The University of Maryland basketball program has been, and will continue to be, a source of great pride for all of us in Maryland and the Washington, DC, area.

THE TAX BILL

HON. LEE H. HAMILTON

OF INDIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 21, 1986

Mr. HAMILTON. Mr. Speaker, I would like to insert my Washington Report for Wednesday, January 8, 1986, into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD:

THE TAX BILL

The House recently approved the most sweeping tax-overhaul bill in four decades. A few months ago many were declaring the package dead, and even in the final few days before passage its outcome was very uncertain. Its passage by the House ranks as a major legislative achievement.

Overall, the package would cut back tax preferences enjoyed by some, in order to reduce tax rates for all. The primary beneficiaries are individuals, as the number of tax brackets would be cut from 14 to 4, and the maximum rate reduced from 50% to 38%, the lowest since 1931. For business, the maximum tax rate would drop from 46% to 36%, the lowest since 1941. Graduated rates would be provided to small businesses, as well as a simplified accounting method. In exchange for the lower rates, various tax preferences would be reduced, primarily on the business side. The largest are accelerated depreciation, saving $25 billion over 5 years, the second-earner deduction ($27 billion), the completed-contract method of accounting ($50 billion), and the investment tax credit ($120 billion). The bill preserves the major deductions of individuals, including those for home mortgage interest, state and local taxes, and employer-provided health benefits.

Although I was not happy with every provision in the 1379-page House bill, and was concerned about its restrictive floor procedure that did not allow separate votes on the major policy issues, I supported it on final passage. The proper basis for comparison is between the bill and present law, not between the bill and other tax reform proposals. In my judgement, the House package is an improvement in fairness and simplicity over current law, in several ways.

First, it helps the beleaguered middle class, whose tax burden has grown sharply in recent years. The bill shifts $141 billion in taxes from individuals to corporations over the next 5 years. More than half of the bill's tax relief goes to taxpayers earnings between $20,000 and $75,000. Families making between $20,000 and $30,000, for example, would on the average get a 10% tax cut.

Second, more than 6 million families below the poverty line will no longer pay income taxes. They generally did not pay taxes in the 1970s, but have begun to since. This will take pressure off welfare programs, plus give needed relief to those benefitting the least from the 1981 tax cut.

Third, it makes all pay a fairer share of taxes. Reports of millionaires and profitable corporations avoiding all taxes have fueled cynicism about the persent tax code. The bill contains a tougher minimum tax on higher-income individuals and corporations that will pull in $25 billion over the next 5 years.

Fourth, it reduces the attractiveness of tax shelters. It does so by lowering the tax rates, which dilutes the value of tax deductions, and by strengthening the minimum tax. It also revises specific provisions that encourage tax shelters, such as by limiting the interest deductions they provide. The bill means that money will be put more into the most productive investment, rather than the largest tax shelter.

Fifth, it makes corporations pay a larger share of taxes. Income taxes paid by corporations have dropped from about 25% of federal revenue in the 1950s and 1960s to below 10% currently. The bill would reverse this trend, raising their share to 13% over the next 5 years, largely by increasing taxes paid by profitable corporations that have avoided paying taxes in the past.

Sixth, it evens out the tax burdens among different industries. In the past, some sectors, such as banking, real estate, and defense, had low, and at times even negative, tax rates, while others, such as high technology and service businesses, paid heavy taxes. The bill "levels the playing field" and reduces unfair tax advantages given some over others.

Finally, the bill trims various provisions, that, while not the biggest revenue losers, foster the impression that the code gives unfair breaks to a special few. For example, it trims tax breaks for business entertainment, such as season sports tickets, or for cruise ship conventions.

I do not want to suggest that the bill makes all these changes as well as it should. In some cases, it does not go far enough: Tax shelters could be cut back more and an even stronger minimum tax could be adopted. In other cases, such as its trimming business incentives for investments, especially for heavy industries, the bill may go too far. Moreover, the final package simplifies the rate structure a lot, but the tax code only a little. But overall, it follows closely the basic outline of the President's tax reform proposal. It is an important step toward lowering tax rates and closing loopholes.

The outlook for the tax bill in the Senate is uncertain. The Senate has generally been cooler to tax reform than the House, and a need to raise revenues may loom over the debate; yet several factors are working in the bill's favor. These include the surprising margins on the final House votes in favor of the package, the difficulty Senators would have in voting against major tax cuts for individuals, the concern that the Republican-controlled Senate would be blamed for killing tax overhaul, and especially the willingness the President showed at the end to fight hard for his chief domestic initiative. To a large extent, the bill is moving forward because of concern about negative political consequences rather than a positive interest in tackling the tax code.

Yet it would be a mistake to think that the package faces smooth sailing in the Senate. Tax reform will be neither quick, easy, nor perfect. The main factor remains how hard the President will fight for his plan. If he continues to push for it, we could by the end of this year have a new tax system—a fairer system with lower rates, more equal tax burdens, and fewer distortions of investment decisions. Its passage would be a giant step towards restoring public confidence in the tax code as well as in government's ability to resist special interests.

PRESIDENT REAGAN AND THE MARTIN LUTHER KING FEDERAL HOLIDAY

HON. LOUIS STOKES

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 21, 1986

Mr. STOKES. Mr. Speaker, yesterday marked the first observance of the Federal holiday in honor of Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. Across America and around the world, people of good will used this historic occasion to not only commemorate the monumental achievements of Dr. King but also to rededicate themselves to the continued pursuit of his philosophy and his dream.

President Ronald Reagan, at first reluctant to support the entire notion of a holiday in honor of the slain civil rights leader, participated in a few events calling Dr. King, "a great man". Perhaps he really meant that.

However, his actions suggest something entirely different. As we review the track record of the Reagan administration in the areas that Dr. King lived and died for, we have to question the sincerity of his remark. Are we to believe that the President finally shares the beliefs and principles of Dr. King? Or is the American public to assume that President Reagan called Dr. King a great man because the significance of the historic holiday and his public relations staff mandated it?

In today's Washington Post, columnist Mary McGrory writes a particularly insightful column which underscores the drastic differences between the record of the President and the efforts of Dr. King.

Mr. Speaker, at this time, I would like to insert the aforementioned column for the RECORD.

[From the Washington Post, Jan. 21, 1986]

A GIFT FOR SHAMELESSNESS

(By Mary McGrory)

It was entirely appropriate that the First Citizen of the country should participate in events surrounding the first observance of Martin Luther King Jr.'s birthday as a national holiday. It also was fitting that he should have told students at the King Elementary School here that the slain civil rights leader was "a great man."

The decent thing would have been to add, "I didn't always think so."

The Rev. Jesse L. Jackson was the only public figure to comment on the "hypocrisy" of the president's remarks last week. He observed that Ronald Reagan "never supported a movement Dr. King stood for in life."

Other blacks let it go. Maybe they were content to revel in the fact that in the last week Americans could not turn on their television sets or radios without hearing King's compelling voice telling of his "dream" or someone reading the noble "Letter from Birmingham Jail." White politicians have long since given up on pointing out the president's imprecisions, contradictions and misstatements, for which other public men, Sen. Gary Hart (D-Colo.) noted ruefully, "would get their heads taken off." A 70 percent public approval rating has effectively silenced what the public regards as "petty criticism" of a nice man.

King, of course, never troubled to answer detractors in high places. He carried his philosophy of nonviolence over into his rhetoric, which was singularly free of self-pity. He was a dreamer, but he was without illusions, especially about presidents.

The Kennedys were opposed to the great march on Washington in August 1963. King went ahead with it. When he criticized the Vietnam war, he incurred the enmity of President Lyndon B. Johnson, who had done as much for civil rights as any of his predecessors. King persisted in pointing out the injustice and only much later complained that Johnson had jammed his lines with all the other black ministers in the country.

But Jackson's point about "hypocrisy" is well-taken.

When King was being beaten and jailed for his views—and his effectiveness—he got not a single encouraging word from Reagan, who told California voters that he would not have voted for the Civil Rights Act of 1964. Nor was Reagan a champion of the Voting Rights Act of 1965, the single most transforming piece of civil rights legislation that King marched onto the books.

In fact, as president, when the renewal of the Voting Rights Act came due, Reagan tried to weaken it, declaring that examples of its violation required proof of the "intent" of the authorities to deprive citizens of their right to vote.

Reagan's antipathy toward King did not end in 1968 with King's assassination. The president was vehemently opposed to the King national holiday. And in one of the most reprehensible uses of the "bully pulpit" of the White House, he cast aspersions on King's loyalty and patriotism.

On Oct. 19, 1983, at one of his infrequent news conferences, Reagan was asked about North Carolina Republican Sen. Jesse Helms' charges that King was at least a fellow-traveler.

Reagan's reply was snide and airy: "We'll know in about 35 years, won't we?"

He defended Helms as someone zealously guarding the national calendar from intrusion by someone whose FBI records cannot yet be opened because of an agreement between the family and the government.

Reagan made a single, unadorned reference to King's "accomplishments" and "what he meant in a stormy period in our history."

One of Reagan's earliest acts as president was to seek tax-exempt status for a segregated southern school. He quit in his efforts to subvert the Voting Rights Act only after Senate GOP leader Robert J. Dole (R-Kan.) swamped him in Republican votes.

Today, of course, his attorney general, Edwin Meese III, is attempting to roll back affirmative action. Meese puts his claims on the "original intent" of the founders. The founders' intent, at the time of the writing of the Constitution, was to preserve slavery, so it is blindingly irrelevant. Reagan babbles happily about a "colorblind society."

Reagan apologized to Coretta Scott King for smearing her husband. But he never apologized to the rest of us. He has joined the King festivities as if he had been cheering from the sidelines all along.

He has many gifts as a politician, not the least of which is shamelessness. It is good to hear him say, at last, that King was "a great man." He would be a bigger man himself if he admitted he was late in reaching that universal judgment.

TRIBUTE TO SANFORD M. SHAPERO

HON. TONY P. HALL

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 21, 1986

Mr. HALL of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, at the beginning of this year, Dr. Sanford M. Shapero began serving as executive director of the City of Hope, an institution which provides free medical care and sponsors medical research. Dr. Shapero grew up in Dayton, OH, the principal city in my district.

Dr. Shapero brings to his new position a unique combination of talents demonstrating a breadth of medical knowledge and spiritual commitment. He has held high level management positions in the health care field. As a world renowned specialist on gerontology, he has written and lectured widely on the health problems of the elderly. He is an ordained rabbi, and has held leadership positions with the Union of American Hebrew Congregations.

Dr. Shapero holds a doctorate in education, and he is the author of books and articles on religious law, health, sociology, and music. He is a public speaker of rare quality, and has spoken in more than 200 cities before college groups, service clubs, and gerontology organizations.

In his new position, Dr. Shapero will be able to use his many talents to direct the work of the 72-year-old City of Hope, which is headquartered in Duarte, CA, and has an annual operating budget of $100 million. Dr. Shapero has been a member of the senior staff of the City of Hope since 1979, serving as director of community affairs and subsequently as associate executive director.

I join his many friends and relatives in Dayton in offering congratulations to Dr. Shapero on this new opportunity for him to continue his long record of service to his fellow man.

OUTSTANDING WORK OF THE OAKLAND TRIBUNE IN EXPOSING AND DOCUMENTING PROBLEM OF HOSPITAL DUMPING OF INDIGENT PATIENTS

HON. FORTNEY H. (PETE) STARK

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 21, 1986

Mr. STARK. Mr. Speaker, during 1985, the Oakland Tribune, and its reporter, Peter Alshire, ran an outstanding series of articles documenting the deaths and injuries and pain caused to people in the Eastbay part of California because of improper hospital dumping and transfers.

Mr. Alshire's work is one of the reasons that we have been able to include in the reconciliation bill (H.R. 3129) "antidumping" language designed to stop hospitals from dumping poor patients on other public and charity hospitals.

For anyone who doubts that dumping constitutes an enormous problem or believes that we should delay in moving the antidumping provisions of H.R. 3128 forward, I would like to include at this point in the record the December 29, 1985, summary of the horror stories uncovered by Mr. Alshire and the Oakland Tribune:

[From the Oakland (CA) Tribune, Dec. 29, 1985]

INDIGENT HEALTH CARE ISSUE TAKES SPOTLIGHT

(By Peter Alshire)

It's either been a horrible year, or a promising year for health care in the Eastbay, depending on how you want to look at it.

On the one hand, The Tribune this year has reported a succession of medical tragedies as people have been caught in the throes of a transformation of the medical system.

On the other hand, the reports have spurred a strong movement toward reform on several fronts.

The underlying theme has been the increasingly critical problem of paying for the medical care of the poor and the uninsured—about 15 to 27 percent of the nation's population.

Cuts in state and federal government programs have forced people off the welfare rolls and substantially reduced payments to hospitals.

Those cuts plus changes in the way insurance companies pay hospitals have also forced private hospitals to be much more competitive and to try to find ways to reduce the amount of free care they provide to the poor.

That underlying financial reality has colored the major medical stories of the year: trauma care, the plight of Alameda County's Highland Hospital, and the rising number of cases in which private hospitals "dump" uninsured, critically injured patients on public hospitals.

Following is a recap of the problem and the progress towards a solution in each of these areas.

TRAUMA CARE

The problem has been evident since at least 1982 when a study by the American College of Surgeons found that 42 percent of the people who died in Eastbay emergency rooms could have been saved if they'd been taken directly to a trauma center hospital with surgeons and specialists always on hand. The local findings mirrored those in studies of emergency room deaths in other communities.

But, despite that spotlight on the extent of the problem in the Bay Area, very little was done.

Contra Costa and Alameda counties set up committees to study the problem. But their work was hampered by bureaucratic inertia and the resistance of hospital administrators who feared they would lose paying patients to the trauma center. Another obstacle has been a turf battle between surgeons and emergency physicians, since the emergency room doctors fear that they would lose money and authority if surgeons are continually on hand.

Then, last January, Eugene Barnes died.

Barnes was stabbed in the head in a seedy building in Richmond. He staggered for several blocks before he collapsed.

Barnes was rushed to Brookside Hospital, where emergency room doctors tried in vain for more than four hours to get a neurosurgeon to come in to operate. Neither of the two neurosurgeons with staff privileges was available and no area hospitals would initially accept the transfer.

Barnes was eventually transferred to San Francisco General Hospital, where he died two days after undergoing brain surgery. In the initial news report, Barnes' death seemed like a fluke tragedy, at most, an example of how the system sometimes fails.

But a closer look revealed a very different picture.

That became obvious when The Tribune reported the case of Tom Homan, a Richmond man who in January was shot in the head and was shuttled from Brookside Hospital to Contra Costa County's Merithew Memorial Hospital in Martinez and then to San Francisco General in a frantic search for a neurosurgeon who would treat his wound.

Similar delays were found at other hospitals, including Providence Hospital in Oakland and Oakland Naval Hospital.

The essential problem is that neurosurgeons generally are reluctant to practice at hospitals in low income areas. Such hospitals have a large number of uninsured patients and the neurosurgeons are likely to be paid nothing at all for getting up in the middle of the night and performing an arduous operation for which they would normally receive $5,000.

In addition, the surgeon must render weeks of intensive, follow-up care. Hospitals like Brookside have so few neurosurgeons on staff that the surgeons they do have eventually "burn out" when it comes to indigent care.

As a result of the stories, the state Division of Hospital Licensing and Certification cited Brookside and Merithew Memorial hospitals.

The state intervention and The Tribune coverage produced results.

Merithew signed a new contract with a group of neurosurgeons.

Providence initially stopped handling head injuries and then signed a contract with its neurosurgeons guaranteeing them payment for treating uninsured patients. The agreement makes Providence, Merithew and Alameda County's Highland hospitals the only Eastbay hospitals with such payment guarantees.

Brookside tried for several months to arrange a helicopter transfer agreement with trauma center hospitals in other counties. But, The Tribune found, the transfer agreements still involved one- to three-hour delays in treatment.

Brookside was cited again by the state after The Tribune reported that the agreement had broken down altogether and a brain-injured patient had waited four hours before being transferred to Highland. That prompted the 240-bed community hospital to close its emergency room to people in need of emergency chest or brain surgery.

That left Doctor's Hospital in Pinole as the only full-service emergency room in the region of 200,000. That's about half as many emergency room beds as recommended in state guidelines, making West Contra Costa County the only underserved area in the state.

The continuing attention had much impact on the plans for a trauma center.

Contra Costa County formed a committee of county officials, doctors and private hospital administrators, and the panel rapidly cut through issues. On Oct. 20, it recommended that the county establish a single trauma center, probably in Central County.

Both Mt. Diablo in Concord and John Muir Hospital in Walnut Creek have shown interest in becoming that center, which is expected to be in operation this summer.

The issue of trauma centers also became a high priority in Alameda County.

On June 21, the Board of Supervisors agreed to designate two trauma centers by this spring.

Washington Hospital in Fremont, Eden Hospital in Castro Valley, St. Rose Hospital in Hayward, Valley Memorial Hospital in Livermore and possibly Kaiser Hospital in Hayward are all vying to be designated the South County's trauma center.

Highland Hospital and Providence Hospital in Oakland have both expressed interest in the North County designation.

If all goes as scheduled, the Eastbay will have three trauma centers operating by the summer of 1986.

HOSPITAL DUMPING

The final, and perhaps most sensational, medical issue to break into the headlines was the growing problem of hospital dumping—the medically hazardous transfer of critically ill or injured patients from private hospitals to public hospitals solely because they have no medical insurance.

The pattern here was distressingly familiar—a report documented the problem but no changes were triggered until tragic cases were reported in The Tribune.

In this case, the report was published in the New England Journal of Medicine in 1983. A survey of medical records during a six-month period found that 7 percent of the indigent patients transferred from private hospitals to Highland Hospital were endangered by the transfer. The report was filled with shocking, but anonymous, case studies. It detailed people with heart attacks, head wounds, collapsed wounds and stomachs full of blood transferred near death to the county hospital.

And once again, nothing happened.

None of the cases were investigated by hospital licensing officials or the district attorney's office.

In fact, the potential for problems got worse in 1983 when the state transferred responsibility for indigent patients on the counties along with only 70 percent of the money it used to spend on those patients. The state saved $100 million a year, but the number of transfers from private hospitals to Highland doubled.

Part of the reason for the increase was Alameda County's decision not to pay private hospitals for emergency room care of the indigent. Contra Costa County will pay for the emergency room care of the indigent, but only if the uninsured people are already enrolled in the county's health plan. The situation varies from county to county, but few counties pay much for the emergency room care of the indigent.

When the state was paying for the care of the so-called Medically Indigent Adults, private hospitals and doctors generally were reimbursed by MediCal for treating indigents.

The county and private hospital officials did set up a task force to talk about the problem. But the task force accomplished little.

Then in November The Tribune began reporting cases in which uninsured patients were transferred under questionable circumstances to Highland. The transfers included:

A nine-month-pregnant woman who lost her baby after a three-hour ordeal in which she was turned away from two private hospitals because she couldn't prove she had medical insurance.

A man who was shot in the chest and spent three hours at a private hospital before being transferred near death with a collapsed lung, in shock, and with about two-thirds of the blood in his veins filling his chest cavity.

A man who lost whatever chance he had of getting three mangled fingers reattached because he spent nearly three hours in the emergency room of a private hospital before being transferred to Highland where it was discovered there was no hand surgeon available anyway.

A man who lay in a private hospital for 17 hours with a shotgun wound in the back who was finally transferred to Highland when a bed in the intensive care ward became available. At Highland, doctors discovered dirt, pieces of clothing and shotgun pellets in the infected wound and spinal fluid leaking from his spinal cord.

A man who had been kicked in the stomach was examined in a private hospital and told to go home. He came back a week later in severe pain, and was told to go to Highland where it was discovered that the initial kick had ruptured his intestine. When he arrived he was within hours of death with a massive amount of infection in his stomach.

These and other cases resulted in state licensing citations against St. Rose Hospital in Hayward, Providence, Merritt, Herrick in Oakland, Alta Bates in Berkeley, and Brookside in San Pablo.

Partly as a result of these revelations:

Representative Fortney Stark, D-Oakland, lobbied through a bill that would impose new $25,000 penalties on both hospitals and doctors who engage in patient dumping and provided the grounds for revocation of the ability to take Medicare patients. The bill got caught in a last-minute confrontation between the House and the Senate about toxic waste taxes, but it is expected to be reintroduced in January and adopted in February.

Two new state measures that would set aside extra state funds to offset emergency room indigent care are also now being considered.

The Alameda County District Attorney has undertaken an investigation to find out whether criminal charges can be brought in any of the incidents reported by The Tribune.

The task force on transfers has been rejuvenated and is expected to make a report soon on joint county-private hospital transfer guidelines.

Highland Hospital has clarified transfer guidelines and directed nurses not to accept transfers without the specific authorization of a doctor.

Each of the cited hospitals has filed a plan of correction with the state. The measures in those plans include meetings with the county about transfer guidelines, giving the emergency room doctor more responsibility for approving a transfer and the authority to call in the president of the medical staff if there's any question, and a host of other specific changes.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES—Wednesday, January 22, 1986

The House met at 3 p.m.

The Chaplain, Rev. James David Ford, D.D., offered the following prayer:

Grant to all who labor in this place, O God, the fullness of Your grace. Give to each person wisdom needed for judgment, courage needed for action, understanding needed for unity, and the dedication and commitment needed for justice. Bless us this day and every day. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

The SPEAKER. The Chair has examined the Journal of the last day's proceedings and announces to the House his approval thereof.

Pursuant to clause 1, rule I, the Journal stands approved.

SECRETARY OF AGRICULTURE URGED TO IMPLEMENT INCOME PROTECTION PROVISIONS OF FARM BILL

(Mr. McCLOSKEY asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. McCLOSKEY. Mr. Speaker, early next month notices may go out to 2,200 farmers in the State of Indiana giving them one last chance to rearrange loan repayment schedules to avoid foreclosures or other adverse legal actions. Many will go to Eighth District family farmers. However, the tragedy of farm foreclosure will not be confined to one farmer or one farm family. If this Nation foresakes its farmers we abandon entire communities and our future. I have urged the Secretary of Agriculture to implement fully the income protection provisions of the farm bill approved last year. We eagerly await his reply. Unfortunately, his initial decisions have been to implement the lowest possible loan rates for feed grains. This makes it especially important for him to announce implementation as soon as possible of the advanced deficiency payment program provided in the farm bill for producers for the 1986 crop year. Many farmers simply cannot make it without showing creditors additional cash flow. And they will not make it in the long term unless we can help reduce operating loan interest rates. If the banks of this country can loan other countries money at interest rates of less than 10 percent, surely we can treat our farmers no worse. Mr. Speaker, if we make progress toward a balanced Federal budget, interest rates can be lowered further and the value of the dollar can decline to the point where U.S. commodity exports regain a measure of competitiveness. But time is a commodity that many farmers have run out of. Only through full implementation of the income protection provisions of the 1985 farm bill can we provide our farmers with the time they need to recover.

WHISTLEBLOWER PROTECTION ACT OF 1986

(Mrs. SCHROEDER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Mrs. SCHROEDER. Mr. Speaker, American taxpayers want Government whistleblowers protected. They want the plug pulled on cost overruns in defense contracts; they want to put a stop to misspent tax dollars. Whistleblowing conjures up images of heroes and villains, of Davids and Goliaths, of lonely but loyal civil servants acting at personal risk to protect the taxpayer.

Congress voted in 1978 to protect whistleblowers. We established the Office of Special Counsel to receive their allegations and to protect their rights.

These efforts have failed. Whistleblowers are today no better protected than they were before the passage of the Civil Service Reform Act of 1978.

We still speak to the glory of whistleblowers, we hail them as the salvation of our budget traumas, and we promise them their place in Heaven. But in fact, we have let them be eaten alive.

Last spring, the House Subcommittee on Civil Service held a series of hearings on the Office of Special Counsel and its protection of whistleblowers. All witnesses agreed: there is no protection for whistleblowers. The litany of troubles that befall those who dare—as Ernie Fitzgerald says—to commit the truth is appalling.

So, despite our best intentions, Federal employees risk it all when they choose to expose the truth.

In its study of the Office of Special Counsel [OSC], the General Accounting Office [GAO] determined that only 8 percent of allegations made to the OSC survive the initial screening process to receive an indepth investigation, and only a tiny fraction of these cases have been actively pursued. The special counsel closes more than 99 percent of whistleblower cases without initiating disciplinary or corrective action.

As a result, Federal workers are increasingly unwilling to report wrongdoing. They are fearful that they will be subject to reprisal, and all too often they are right. A Merit System Protection Board study in 1983 found a sharp increase from 1980 in the number of Federal employees who said that reporting official wrongdoing posed too great a personal risk.

Today, I, along with a bipartisan group of Senators and Representatives, am introducing the Whistleblower Protection Act of 1986. This legislation reaffirms congressional support for whistleblowers and provides increased protection for the rights of Federal employees who disclose Government waste, fraud, and mismanagement.

The bill emphasizes that the primary duty of the special counsel is to represent employees who claim to be victims of prohibited personnel practices.

It provides Federal employees with a private right of action, allowing an individual to bypass the special counsel and seek stays or corrective action from the Merit Systems Protection Board [MSPB] and, if necessary, from court. In addition, the bill broadens the power of the MSPB to sanction Presidential appointees, military officers, and contractor officials for committing prohibited personnel practices, including taking reprisals against whistleblowers.

These changes should provide increased protections to Federal employees and should encourage other witnesses of wrongdoing to step forward. It is legislation that is made all the more pressing by the intolerably large Federal deficit. Federal whistleblowers can help us reach the deficit reduction goals of Gramm-Rudman, if only we let them.

CRAZY?

(Mr. MICHEL asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. MICHEL. Mr. Speaker, I understand the Speaker referred to President Reagan's budget as—and I quote—"crazy, nonsensical."

He also said: "The time for taking the hard knocks has come for Mr. Reagan."

The Washington Post said the strategy of the Democratic leadership is—and I again quote—"to exploit the President's call for massive domestic spending cuts for maximum political advantage."

Yes, the President's budget is fair game for disagreement—from either side of the aisle.

But when criticism is clearly motivated by a desire to gain partisan political advantage, then we're wasting our time and the exercise is a hoax.

I've called for the creation of a Joint Budget Committee because we need to work together—House and Senate, Democrat and Republican.

The only thing crazy and nonsensical at this point would be to turn this issue into a bitter, partisan affair.

Instead of playing the role of the spoiler, it would better serve the Democratic leadership and the country, if they joined with us to work together for the people instead of trying to "exploit" anyone or anything.

REPORT ON RESOLUTION PROVIDING FOR CONSIDERATION OF H.R. 2443, EXPEDITED FUNDS AVAILABILITY ACT

Mr. PEPPER, from the Committee on Rules, submitted a privileged report (Rept. No. 99-463) on the resolution (H. Res. 357) providing for the consideration of the bill (H.R. 2443) to limit the number of days a depository institution may restrict the availability of funds which are deposited in any account, which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered to be printed.

RULE PROVIDING FOR THE CONSIDERATION OF H.R. 2443

(Mr. PEPPER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. Speaker, the privileged report I just sent to the desk concerned a rule providing for the consideration of H.R. 2443, the Expedited Funds Availability Act. The House will consider the rule tomorrow.

I want to bring to the attention of my colleagues one element of the rule. The rule makes in order only those amendments printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD at least 1 legislative day before H.R. 2443 is considered. Since H.R. 2443 is scheduled for consideration tomorrow, Members are advised to print their amendments in today's CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

In a moment, I will ask unanimous consent that Members may have until 6 o'clock tonight to submit amendments to be printed in today's RECORD.

PERMISSION FOR MEMBERS TO SUBMIT AMENDMENTS TO H.R. 2443 TO BE PRINTED IN TODAY'S RECORD

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that Members may have until 6 o'clock tonight to submit amendments to H.R. 2443 to be printed in today's CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I want to ask a question here about that particular procedure, because it strikes me that Members are being given very, very insufficient notice in this case. With the rule being filed just now, we are being told that amendments have to be in the RECORD by the end of today for a bill to come up tomorrow. I would hope that under this procedure that we are not setting a precedent that that is how we are going to bring such rules to the floor in the future, because Members do need sufficient time in order to prepare amendments. This is certainly not giving anybody close to sufficient time to deal with the crucial issues such as the one which we are going to be taking up tomorow.

Can I receive some assurance from the gentleman that we are not going to use this as a precedent of what we are going to do in the future?

I will be glad to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. Speaker, in reply to my friend, I can assure him, without any question, that that is the policy of the Rules Committee, to be very sparing with a holding of this kind; that is, requiring the amendments to be printed in the RECORD. There is always a reason, in the opinion of the committee, where we do it; and we do it reluctantly and infrequently.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, further reserving the right to object, I understand, then, that the chairman is telling me that the policy of the Rules Committee will be to assure that there is sufficient time and that we will not have other rules coming out here on a frequent basis in which the Members are being told to file amendments basically on the same day that the rule is being presented.

Mr. PEPPER. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman, and I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

There was no objection.

THE ELECTION IN THE PHILIPPINES

(Mr. RICHARDSON asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, from every conceivable report, it appears that the election in the Philippines will not be fair.

The last report from the Marcos-controlled election commission contains an edict that says that no foreign observers will be allowed near the polls.

Why should the United States care? A question was asked: Is it any of our business? The answer is "Yes." The United States has substantial strategic interests in the Philippines. The United States cares about free elections and respect for human rights. The U.S. taxpayer has poured billions of dollars into the Philippines.

Mr. Speaker, if there is going to be genuine reform in the Philippines, there must be military reform, there must be an end to the corruption of the Marcos regime.

Mr. Speaker, as a Member of this body, I support the efforts of Mr. SOLARZ, the chairman of the House Asian and Pacific Affairs Subcommittee, who is probing into allegations of corruption in the Marcos family and who is trying to ensure that efforts are made for the elections to be fair.

Mr. Speaker, if the election is judged to be unfair by the nonobservers that will not be there, this country and this body should still evaluate our policy toward the Marcos regime.

Billions of dollars go there, and it is incumbent upon us to assess whether it is in our interest to support a dictator who appears headed into the path of oblivion and nonsupport and many other things that are not in the best interest of the United States.

EXPEDITED FUNDS AVAILABILITY ACT

(Mr. VENTO asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. VENTO. Mr. Speaker, this week the House will consider an important consumer measure, the funds availability proposed law. This is one of the most important proconsumer measures before Congress and affects all the people we represent.

When you deposit a check in a financial institution, you have a right to expect that it is credited to your account promptly. To the dismay of consumers today, they are discovering often to their embarrassment, that financial institutions have established arbitrary and unreasonable time delays before crediting consumers' checking accounts.

Holding check credit has become a lucrative practice for banks that earn millions of dollars in interest on the money. But for consumers, checks holds can mean not just embarrassment but hardship. Some financial institutions are even holding veterans and Social Security checks for inordinate time periods. Most veterans and Social Security recipients receive small enough benefits, without making retired workers wait days to pay their bills and purchase their groceries.

The funds availability rapid check credit measure responds to the problems mentioned and is a clear victory for consumers. It sets precise and reasonable time limits on how long a financial institution can hold a check. I am pleased to be a sponsor of this measure, and I urge my colleagues to support a good strong rapid check credit bill. It is needed and it is right.

WILL CONGRESS TOTALLY ABDICATE?

(Mr. SEIBERLING asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. SEIBERLING. Mr. Speaker, Members are still reeling from the revelations as to what they are going to have to go through with the Gramm-Rudman law particularly the cuts in important programs for our cities, for people in need, and for the environment. Nevertheless, today's New York Times says President Reagan will seek $100 million in aid for the Contras who are seeking the overthrow of the Nicaraguan Government.

As if that were not chutzpah enough, an article last week in the Washington Times says: "Reagan to ask Hill for broad war powers." And I am now quoting:

> President Reagan will ask Congress for a resolution, similar to that passed in 1964 following the Gulf of Tonkin incident, to empower the executive branch to use "whatever military force is required" to deal swiftly and effectively with the terrorist threat, a senior administration official said.

I suppose the theory is that Congress, having abdicated its fiscal powers, might now be prepared to abdicate its war powers. If so, then we might as well go home, just turn everything over to the geniuses of the Pentagon and the OMB, and declare that we are no longer a democratic Republic but a nation ruled by one man and his hand-picked bureaucrats.

WE OUGHT TO BE WORKING TOGETHER IN A BIPARTISAN SPIRIT TO DO WHAT THE AMERICAN PEOPLE WANT: BALANCE THE BUDGET

(Mr. WALKER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, every bit of data that we have makes clear that the American people want the budget balanced. Many would have you believe that there is no difference between the two great political parties on this issue. Oh, really? Let us look at the record.

When the law was passed requiring a balanced budget, a majority of Democrats, mostly liberals, voted against the balanced budget law. A majority of Republicans voted for it. The first call in this House to repeal the balanced budget law came from a Democrat. When the court suit was filed trying to gut the balanced budget law, it was filed by mostly Democrats. It is the Democrats in this House who are suggesting stonewalling the budget process in order to undermine the balanced budget law. It sounds like some pretty wide differences between the two parties on this crucial issue, and my guess is that as the year unfolds, the differences will become even wider.

We ought to be working together in a bipartisan spirit to do what the American people want: Balance the budget. But that is not what is shaping up in this House.

OUR HUGE DEFICIT REQUIRES CUTS IN SPENDING AND INCREASES IN TAXES

(Mr. TRAFICANT asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. TRAFICANT. Mr. Speaker, during the last Presidential election, Walter Mondale said, "I will have to raise taxes and I am telling you the truth." Reagan will too, only he will not tell you.

Although the President still declares that there will be no taxes, even he now recognizes that this huge deficit will require both cuts in spending and increases in revenue that should be fair and should target those who pay little or no taxes.

Gramm-Rudman, our current plan, is flawed from a constitutional, an economic standpoint, and a human standpoint. If we allow it to continue, depressed areas like mine will literally collapse. We have suffered from this administration while they continue to boast of a growing economy. An economy that I term now "supply-side suffer." It is time for Congress, mandated by constitutional law, to make the tough decisions that we were elected to make, to take that bold action. We cannot avoid our responsibility any longer; we must raise revenue and we must cut spending.

Finally, I remember in an election 6 years ago where one candidate called the other as having policies of voodoo economics. If we fail now to do what is mandated by the Constitution, we will put another $500 billion of debt on the backs of the people of this country.

WAS IT THE CONGRESS' FAULT? ABSOLUTELY YES

(Mr. MACK asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. MACK. Mr. Speaker, to speak about flaws, I think the question that is going through many Members' minds today or yesterday is how did we get from the $171.9 billion deficit that we claimed was going to occur as a result of the budget resolution that was passed just last August? $171.9 billion, and the projection today is $220 billion. How did we get there? Was it the President's fault? I do not think so. Was it the Congress' fault? Absolutely yes.

When you look at what occurred, there is an increase in the size of that deficit of roughly $45 to $49 billion. Where did it come from? Yes. Part of it came from the fact that we grew at a level slightly lower than what we had projected in the budget resolution; about $13 billion.

But the balance of it, $32.7 billion, came because the Congress failed to carry out its own budget resolution. Flaws? You better believe there are flaws. Flaws in our ability to live with the practices that we have established in saying that we are going to live with our own budget resolutions.

I mentioned lower economic growth, but how about failure to enact the revenue increases called for in the budget resolution itself? How about the allocation of $6.3 billion in unobligated funds for pay raises for the military? Failure to enact military retirement reform called for in the budget resolution of $2.8 billion. Faster payout in the defense budget. Enacting the farm legislation which actually increases outlays in 1986 of $4 to $5 billion over the budget resolution. Lower prices required higher payouts under the bill.

The end result is that we failed to pass a reconciliation bill; about another $8 billion. The point that I am making is that Congress failed to carry out its responsibility last year, and if there is one major argument that says that the Gramm-Rudman bill should have been passed, it is this data that I have now placed into the RECORD.

FIRST-TIME ECONOMIC AID TO NORTHERN IRELAND

(Mr. BIAGGI asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. BIAGGI. Mr. Speaker, according to press accounts, Congress may have a unique St. Patrick's Day initiative before it very soon. Specifically, a supplemental appropriations of $40 million to provide first time United States aid to Northern Ireland.

As the author of the only pending bill to provide such aid, I have a considerable interest in this new proposal. It seems to be motivated by optimism based on the new Anglo-Irish agreement on Northern Ireland. However we must be extremely careful in how we draft any bill which provides aid.

I support economic aid controlled and distributed only by the United States.

I support economic aid provided in accordance with our Foreign Assistance Act, especially with regard to human rights protections.

I support aid that is not used for military or security purposes; and

I support only that aid which goes to benefit both communities in Northern Ireland. Otherwise, we are simply voting to underwrite continued discrimination in Ulster.

I urge that immediate hearings be held on economic aid to Northern Ireland. I know there is a desperate need for the aid. However, I also know that unless we insist on certain conditions and protections, our aid may only add fuel to certain problems in the north instead of being the catalyst for their solution.

A COMPLETE ECONOMIC EMBARGO OF LIBYA

(Mr. DREIER of California asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. DREIER of California. Mr. Speaker, I rise to introduce a resolution in support of the President's decision to impose a complete economic embargo on Libya. I believe this embargo is necessary to eliminate one of international terrorism's main bases of operation. At the same time I also feel these economic steps should be considered Mr. Qadhafi's last chance. We can ignore the colonel's childish statements in defiance of the international community, but we cannot tolerate his persistence in sponsoring international terrorism and its acts of aggression. In this vein, this resolution also supports the President's pledge to take "further steps," if necessary, to fulfill his promise that terrorists "can run but they can't hide."

THE TRAGEDY OF BACK-ALLEY ABORTIONS

(Mr. WEISS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. WEISS. Mr. Speaker, 13 years ago today, the right of women to choose abortion in appropriate circumstances was affirmed by the highest court in the land.

Abortion is legal, and the overwhelming majority of Americans want to keep it that way.

Nevertheless, a vocal minority continues to threaten this fundamental right with a constant barrage of attacks on abortion rights. We must remain ever vigilant against these misguided efforts

As a young prosecutor in New York City charged with investigating and prosecuting illegal abortionists, I witnessed firsthand the tragedy of back alley abortions. No one should want to force anyone's loved ones back to the hands of the kind of butchers who performed abortions in those days before Roe versus Wade.

Millions of women risked permanent disability as a consequence of procedures used in the home or in the underground network of back alley abortionists.

Hundreds of women died annually as a result of botched abortions.

On this day of remembrance, we must recommit ourselves to maintaining the right to choose. We must support the Supreme Court's refusal to weaken Roe versus Wade. And we must restore full abortion rights to those who suffer unfairly under legislated restrictions. Making abortions illegal didn't prevent abortion. It just made them dangerous and often lethal.

A woman's right to choose a safe and legal abortion must remain as sacred as any right American citizens enjoy.

MOST RECENT REPORT OF THE PHYSICIANS TASK FORCE ON HUNGER

(Mr. FORD of Tennessee asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. FORD of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker I want to bring to the attention of my colleagues an alarming study released by the Physicians Task Force on Hunger in America.

The study reveals that the hunger crisis in this country is becoming worse and that the safety net we have promised the needy is coming unraveled. The study shows that about 20 million Americans regularly go hungry. It identifies 150 "hunger counties" in which more than 20 percent of the population is poor, but where food stamps reach only 33 percent of the eligible population.

An earlier study of the task force cited low AFDC benefits and inadequate unemployment benefits as major reasons for the increase in hunger. Combined with the failure of the Food Stamp Program to reach the poor, the failure of AFDC and the unemployment insurance programs is helping to create a population suffering from chronic hunger.

As chairman of the Subcommittee of Public Assistance and Unemployment Compensation, I intend to carefully investigate the reasons for this increase in hunger. I hope that in this year's budget debate we will not lose sight of the issues of poverty and hunger. While Gramm-Rudman may be the major topic of conversation in Washington, in too many communities the issue of the day is the same as it was yesterday, and the same issue that it will be tomorrow, the issue of survival.

"SICKER AND QUICKER" UNDER THE NEW MEDICARE PROSPECTIVE PAYMENT SYSTEM

(Mr. MANTON asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. MANTON. Mr. Speaker, on January 7, President Reagan gave his maiden news conference for 1986. The first question the President was asked concerned the Medicare prospective payment system. I was delighted to hear the President say that his administration was looking into some of the problems with the payment system and working on solutions.

Both the Senate and House Select Committees on Aging have been examining the problem of Medicare beneficiaries being discharged from hospitals "sicker and quicker" under the new prospective payment system. Under the prospective payment system, Medicare pays the hospitals a fixed rate for each diagnosis. The fee does not vary with the length of stay and hospitals seem to have an incentive to discharge patients quickly.

One of my constituents recently told me that she was in the hospital after suffering from her third heart attack. She was sent home from the hospital 7 days later even though she was unable to walk across a room. Hospital officials told her she was being discharged because Medicare would not pay for additional health care.

Unfortunately, this woman's experience is not unique. The Select Committee on Aging has heard testimony from Medicare beneficiaries regarding incidences of discharges by hospital authorities before patients were healthy enough to return home. According to the Senate Aging Committee, over 4,000 similar cases of such early dismissals have been marked for further investigation by the Health Care Financing Administration.

Mr. Speaker, I known many of my colleagues share my concern regarding these premature dismissals. The problems with the prospective payment system have been clearly identified. The President said they were being examined and a solution is being worked on. I urge the President to give this matter his highest attention and forward his proposed remedies to the Congress at the earliest possible date.

GRAMM-RUDMAN AND THE BRIAR PATCH

(Mr. DAUB asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute, and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. DAUB. Mr. Speaker, "Please, please," Brer Rabbit said to Brer Bear, "don't throw me in the briar patch. Please don't throw me in the briar patch."

Now, I wondered about this as I examined the Congressional Quarterly's report of the votes for Gramm-Rudman—vote No. 415, House Joint Resolution 372—and I noticed that only 153 Republicans voted for it—certainly not a majority in this Chamber. I then quickly noted that 118 Democrats, Mr. Speaker, voted for Gramm-Rudman, 1 of them being the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, another the chairman of the Democratic caucus, and then, oh, goodness, the majority leader himself.

"Oh, no," cried Brer Rabbit, "please don't throw me in the briar patch."

I think that the House is at its best when it acts in a truly bipartisan spirit. That is what Gramm-Rudman was, that is what the spending cuts that we decided to make ought to be, and the American public deserves no less from the leadership of this House.

ATTEMPTS TO BALANCE THE BUDGET AND GRAMM-RUDMAN SEEN AS SYNONYMOUS

(Mr. GEKAS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. GEKAS. Mr. Speaker, let me say to the Members of the House that it is appropriate that so many Members of Congress who are taking the well today are expressing their opinions on Gramm-Rudman. And we ought to do that.

One thing that ought to be made perfectly clear, to rephrase an old phrase, is that when we speak about Gramm-Rudman-Hollings on the Senate side or Mack on this side of the Congress, we are talking about an expression of will of the American people to effect a balanced budget. So let us not take account of Gramm-Rudman as simply another bill coming through the process of the Congress of the United States. It is calling for a balanced budget. Gramm-Rudman-Hollings and Mack are synonymous with a balanced budget. Those who then supported Gramm-Rudman supported a balanced budget.

As Congressman DAUB has just said, that is an important distinction to make. It is not that the Congress of the United States has adopted some isolated concept that was strung up overnight; Gramm-Rudman-Hollings is the personification, the manifestation of the desire of the American people to reach a balanced budget quickly, as quickly as possible, for the sake of the people of our country.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. STENHOLM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks and to include therein extraneous material on the subject of the special order today by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ANNUNZIO].

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. ROWLAND of Georgia). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

SIXTY-EIGHTH ANNIVERSARY OF UKRAINIAN INDEPENDENCE DAY

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ANNUNZIO] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. ANNUNZIO. Mr. Speaker, on January 22, 1918, the Ukrainian Central Rada, the Parliament of the Ukrainian people, declared the independence of Ukraine, realizing the country's fondest hopes of securing self-determination and freedom.

The Parliament for the Ukrainian people, consisting of representatives of various Ukrainian political parties, as well as other societies and groups, and proudly proclaimed:

People of Ukrainian! By your own power your will and your word a free Ukrainian republic now exists in your land. The ancient dream of our forefathers, who were fighters for the freedom and rights of the working people has come true * * * From this day forward, the Ukrainian National Republic is the independent, free and sovereign state of the Ukrainian people * * *

These words still constitute the cornerstone of political thought of Ukrainian throughout the world, as they continue in their efforts to return Ukraine once again to its rightful place among the community of free nations.

When the Ukrainian people founded the Ukrainian National Republic, they had great expectations for a new era of national renewal dedicated to the principles of justice and human dignity. Sadly, however, the reality of freedom was shortlived, because by 1922, the Bolsheviks forced their way into power, and resumed persecutions, relocations of whole villages, exiles of Ukrainian leaders, brutal starvations, and wholesale executions. Millions of brave Ukrainians perished during the terrible years of Stalin's rule, and yet through it all, the Ukrainians remained steadfast in their resolve to regain their freedom and national sovereignty.

During the past 68 years, thousands of innocent people in Ukraine have been persecuted and imprisoned by agencies of the Soviet Government. In recent years, Soviet authorities have stepped up their arrests for alleged "anti-Soviet agitation and propaganda" by Ukrainian intellectuals, writers, literary critics, professors, students, and scientists, as well as other individuals from all walks of life, who merely attempt to preserve the culture, religion, heritage, and langage of their people. Despite the most severe repression by the Communists, Ukrainian tradition has survived.

On January 12, Ukrainian observed a Day of Solidarity with Ukrainian Political Prisoners. This day, observed since 1974, is a time for Ukrainians to express their support for the objectives of the courageous men and women who daily stand up against the brutality of the Communists, as well as a time to reaffirm their commitment to freedom and self-determination.

At this point in the RECORD, I would like to include an article which appeared in the January 12 edition of the Ukrainian Weekly that outlines the tragic fate of some of the individuals in the human rights movement in Ukraine.

The article follows:

[From the Ukrainian Weekly, Jan. 12, 1986]

JANUARY 12—DAY OF SOLIDARITY WITH UKRAINIAN POLITICAL PRISONERS

January 12 has been observed as a Day of Solidarity with Ukrainian Political Prisoners annually since 1974, when imprisoned Ukrainian journalist Vyacheslav Chornovil, now age 48, declared a hunger strike that day in commemoration of the 1972 mass arrests of Ukrainian intellectuals.

Mr. Chornovil, author of "Lykho z Rozumu" (Misfortune of Intellect, published in English as "The Chornovil Papers"), an expose of the 1965-66 trials of some 20 intellectuals in Ukraine, was among those caught up in the wave of arrests on that fateful day.

January 12 has evolved into a symbol of Ukrainians' universal yearning for freedom. It serves as a reminder that the struggle of Ukrainian human, national and religious rights activists continues, and as a reminder of the sad plight of participants in that struggle.

Ukrainians in the West have set aside this day to express their solidarity with these courageous men and women who are serving terms in prisons, labor camps, internal exile or psychiatric hospitals—some of them imprisoned on political charges like "anti-Soviet agitation and propaganda" or anti-Soviet slander," others on trumped-on criminal charges.

Among the political prisoners we recall on the Day of Solidarity are:

The eternal prisoner, Yuriy Shukhevych, 52, who has been in and out of Soviet prisons and camps since the age of 15. He has spent 33 years of his life without freedom simply because he is the son of Roman Shukhevych, leader of the Ukrainian Insurgent Army and a nationalist hero. Mr. Shukhevych is now in internal exile.

Yosyp Terelia, 42, an activist in the outlawed Ukrainian Catholic Church and leader of the Initiative Group for the Defense of Believers and the Church, who was sentenced last year to serve seven years in prison camps and five years in exile. He has already spent some 20 years in camps, prisons and psychiatric hospitals.

Yuriy Badzio, 49, a teacher and literature specialist who documented the Russification of Ukrainian culture by the Soviet authorities in a major paper about 1,400 pages long, titled "The Right to Live". Mr. Badzio is reported to be ailing in a labor camp to which he was sentenced for seven years. This term will be followed by five years' internal exile.

There are literally, countless other Ukrainian political prisoners—some better known than others, some unknown to us in the West. But we recall these persons, too, on the Day of Solidarity. And we hope for a day when such a Day of Solidarity will no longer be needed when there will be no political prisoners.

Mr. ANNUNZIO. Mr. Speaker, it is with pride that I join with Americans of Ukrainian descent in the 11th Congressional District of Illinois which I am honored to represent, and Ukrainians all over this Nation, who are continuing their struggle for self-determination in their own homeland. Let us reaffirm our belief in freedom for all peoples and our hope that the valiant Ukrainians shall one day triumph over their oppressors and again enjoy the blessings of liberty for which they have courageously struggled for so long.

Mr. HOYER. Mr. Speaker, today, Ukrainian-Americans commemorate the 68th anniversary of the reestablishment of a free Ukrainian state. On January 22, 1918, the Ukrainian Central Rada proclaimed Ukraine's independence. A year later, on January 22, 1919, an Act of Union unified, albeit briefly, all Ukrainian lands in one state. Although the fledgling Ukrainian Republic was brutally overrun by the Red army in 1920. This period of independence stands as a testament to the Ukrainian people's quest for freedom and self-determination.

Since that brief period of independence, the Ukrainian nation has suffered greatly. Under Soviet rule, the Ukrainian population has incurred unimaginable losses. In the early 1930's, over 6 million Ukrainians lost their lives in Stalin's artificially induced famine. Millions more perished in slave labor camps in Siberia.

In the last few decades, the legitimate efforts of Ukrainians to promote respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms have been met with cynical contempt by the Soviet Government. Ukrainian intellectuals in the 1960's, the Ukrainian Helsinki Monitoring Group in the 1970's and the Group for the Defense of the Rights of the Ukrainian Catholic Church in the 1980's have been suppressed and most of their members severely punished.

In the past year alone we have witnessed a continued crackdown on the Ukrainian Helsinki Group with the arrests and rearrests of Mykola Horbal, Petro Sichko, and Yosyf Zisels. We have seen a crackdown on religious activists, particularly defenders of the Ukrainian Catholic Church, with the imprisonment of Yosyf Terelya and Vasyl Kobryn. Perhaps most tragically, our consciences were stirred with the death of one of the greatest contemporary Ukrainian poets, 47-year-old Vasyl Stus, who died in the harsh conditions of a Soviet labor camp after a prolonged illness. Despite these persecutions, Ukrainians persist in pressing for their rights and in protesting against the Kremlin's callous designs to destroy Ukraine's national identity.

Mr. Speaker, as cochairman of the Helsinki Commission, I am greatly disturbed by all too frequent reports about Soviet violations of the Helsinki Final Act in Ukraine. However, I am also encouraged by the valiant struggle of Ukrainians who manifest an abiding faith in the final act's noble principles. It is our obligation as Americans to heed the calls of the Ukrainian people and to assist those who risk their well-being, and sometimes their lives, in the promotion of values which we all cherish and share.

Mr. MANTON. Mr. Speaker, I am honored to join in today's celebration of the 68th anniversary of the proclamation of independence in Ukraine. Sixty-eight years ago today, in the city of Kiev, a dream of freedom and democracy was realized when the sovereign nation of Ukraine was established.

While this is a joyous occasion, it is also one of remorse and determination. That cherished dream was a short lived reality. Within 3 short years after their sovereignty was established, the Ukrainian National Republic was overpowered by the Bolsheviks and more than 40 million Ukrainians lost their freedom. Today we not only remember a once free Ukraine, but we also reaffirm out hope and determination that soon Ukraine will be free again.

For the past 68 years, the leaders of the Soviet Union have sought to eradicate the Ukrainian national identity. Under Soviet occupation, the Ukrainian people have suffered persecution and repression. The leaders of the Soviet Union have tried to force russification on the people of Ukraine. Ukrainian culture and heritage have been endangered. The Ukrainian language is not allowed in schools and the Ukrainian Catholic and Eastern Orthodox religions are outlawed. Ukrainians who dare to speak for freedom and against the practices of the Soviet regime, are harassed and arrested. Often, those Ukrainians who fight for human rights are usually harshly sentenced.

However, it is not only Ukrainians in the Soviet Union who work for freedom. Ukrainian-Americans who have contributed so much to our own country, have not forgotten the dream of a free Ukraine. They have not allowed their spirit, or their determination and optimism that the Ukraine will one day again be free, to diminish. Their dedication is an inspiration to people around the world who are struggling for freedom.

Mr. Speaker, the struggle of the Ukrainians is our struggle as well. Liberty is becoming a precious commodity in today's world and we must always remember to cherish and protect it. And, the best way to protect this precious commodity is by supporting the struggles of those who have been denied their basic human rights.

Mr. Speaker, today I gladly pledge my support to the Ukrainian people. I share the hope of many that we will again see a free Ukraine.

Mr. MICA. Mr. Speaker, January 22 is observed by persons of Ukrainian origin in this country and throughout the free world as the date when their ancestral homeland knew freedom and independence.

On January 22, 1918, Ukrainians in what had hitherto been the Russian empire declared their independence. On January 22, 1919, Ukrainians in what had been the Austrian empire unified their part of the country with the Ukrainian National Republic, creating a unified independent Ukrainian state.

The freedom for which they struggled was brief. After 3 short years, their state was crushed between its more powerful neighbors.

But the memory of their independent democracy continues to hold a special place in the hearts of Ukrainians everywhere. In free countries, they can observe this anniversary. In their homeland, they cannot. Such is the way of tyranny.

The Ukrainian Republic was but a brief episode in modern history. By 1921, the bulk of the country had come under Soviet rule and, at the time of the Hitler-Stalin Pact of 1939, the rest of the country was annexed by the USSR.

As citizens of the U.S.S.R., Ukrainians have suffered one of the most devastating tragedies of all time, the great manmade famine of 1933. This atrocity, perpetrated by Soviet authorities who decreed the seizure of crops from those who grew them, claimed some 7 million Ukrainians.

As Chairman of the newly created Commission on the Ukrainian Famine, I believe it is incumbent on all us to never forget this tragedy, and also to note the pride with which Ukrainians continue to cherish their national culture and identity. Further, we must demonstrate our solidarity with their continuing struggle for freedom, human rights, and the national independence of this oppressed land.

Those Ukrainians who have come to this Nation, initially to seek a better life and later to escape the tyranny of their homeland, have made a tremendous contribution to American life. Their example in becoming loyal and productive Americans while continuing to maintain their unique identity, has enriched this country for all of us.

They demonstrate, as do other ethnic Americans, that becoming citizens of this land does not mean losing their affection and attachment for their ancestral homeland. Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to join me in noting with pride this Ukrainian Independence Day.

Mr. MOAKLEY. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to commemorate the 68th anniversary of the proclamation of independence in Ukraine. On January 22, 1918, the people of Ukraine achieved their freedom and independence from their powerful neighbors. Unfortunately, this freedom was short lived. In 1921, the Ukrainian independent state was crushed by the Soviet Union.

Mr. Speaker, I consider myself very fortunate to live in a country that entitles me to freedom and independence. I cherish these rights more than anything. I volunteered for service in World War II because I believed strongly that these essential values should and must be protected. And I would volunteer for service again if the freedom of our country was threatened.

I certainly can understand the burning desire of the people of Ukraine who want so desperately to be free. Those of us in America have an obligation to not only condemn the Soviet oppression that still plagues the people of Ukraine—but to also support and encourage their struggle to regain their independence. I am proud to stand with my colleagues in honoring this important date and also in our commitment to the people of Ukraine.

Mr. MORRISON of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, today marks the 68th anniversary of the proclamation of the Ukrainian Central Rada which reestablished Ukraine as a full-fledged sovereign and independent state. I know that my colleagues join me in commemorating with Ukrainians world-wide this important event in the long struggle of the Ukrainian people for freedom.

The Ukrainian state born on January 22, 1918, was strongly supported by the Ukrainian people. Ukrainians of all ages rallied to the fledgling state's defense when it was attacked late in 1918 by the Polish Army from the West and the Red and White Russian Armies from the East. After a heroic struggle lasting 3 years, the Ukrainian National Republic succumbed to the numerically superior military forces of Communist Russia.

Ever since the Soviet conquest, the Ukrainian people have suffered political, cultural, and religious repression, economic exploitation and all-encompassing Russification. In an enforced collectivization of Ukraine's agriculture in 1932–33 some 7 million Ukrainians were starved to death by the government-sponsored famine. During and after World War II, hundreds of thousands of Ukrainians were deported, exiled, or killed for their support of the many resistance movements which fought first against the Nazis and then against the Soviets after the Soviet Union reoccupied Ukraine.

The struggle for Ukrainian rights continues. Scores of intellectual and cultural activists bravely criticize the Soviet regime despite the great personal risks they take in doing so. Almost half of all political prisoners in the U.S.S.R. are Ukrainians.

As we commemorate Ukrainian Independence Day, we remember the cost the Ukrainian people have paid in their struggle for freedom. The celebrations honoring Ukrainian independence that are taking place in Ukrainian communities around the world today are not only a salute to those who have kept the dream of an independent Ukraine alive, but also celebrate the ideal of freedom, the right of all people to self-determination.

I know that my colleagues share my appreciation for the efforts made by so many Ukrainians and Ukrainian descendants to keep the cause of freedom before the world's eyes and conscience.

Mr. KINDNESS. Mr. Speaker, today marks the 68th anniversary of the proclamation of independence for the people of the once independent Republic of Ukraine. As many are painfully aware, this independence was short-lived due to the Communist takeover and domination of Ukraine beginning in 1921.

On this day of celebration, we cannot and should not forget the brutal treatment inflicted upon so many Ukrainian citizens by the Soviet Union. Reports of imprisonment and violence against Ukrainians continue to mount as the Soviets persist in attempts to break the independent Ukrainian spirit, and to eliminate the culture and religious traditions of the Ukrainian people. Every such cruel attempt results in the clearer identification of the Ukrainian people as a separate, distinguishable and oppressed people.

I am proud to join Ukrainians throughout the world in recognition and remembrance of the celebration of Ukrainian independence. The efforts of the Ukrainian people to stand against repression and the denial of basic individual rights are truly commendable and inspiring.

Indeed, our Ukrainian friends are not alone in their struggle for a lasting peace and independence for their homeland.

I encourage all Ukrainians to continue their valiant efforts on behalf of all who struggle in the fight for freedom and human dignity. Without these efforts the struggle against tyranny will be blanketed with darkness; but with such efforts the lamp of liberty is fueled.

Mr. YATRON. Mr. Speaker, today, January 22, 1986, marks the 68th anniversary of the independence for the Ukraine. I am proud to join with my House colleagues and with the people of Ukrainian origin in commemorating this special and noteworthy occasion.

Unfortunately, as we know all too well, the freedom of the Ukrainian nation lasted only 3 years before the Bolshevik armies invaded the newly independent state and reestablished Russian control. Since that time the Ukrainian people have endured unspeakable forms of repression, persecution, and human rights abuses at the hands of the Soviet oppressors. However, this brave and valiant people have refused to succumb to such acts of inhumanity and have maintained their vibrant culture and unquenchable thirst for freedom. It is most fitting that we pay tribute to their courage which should serve as an inspiration to all of us. This occasion should also serve to remind us how precious the freedoms we enjoy as Americans truly are and the degree to which they are cherished by many of the world's oppressed.

As chairman of the House Subcommittee on Human Rights and International Organizations, I have actively worked to reduce the suffering of the Ukrainian people. The subcommittee has conducted extensive hearings on the countless human rights abuses committed by the Soviet Union, and I have initiated legislation on this subject.

I am also proud to have played an active role in the passage of legislation to establish a Congressional Commission to study the causes and effects of the Great Famine in the Ukraine. This legislation was signed into law on October 12, 1984. The famine-holocaust was one of the most tragic events in recent history and it is an example of the cruelty of the Soviet system and what the Ukrainian people had to endure. It was an attempt by the Soviet Government to erase an entire culture and race with the famine of 1932–33. During this man-made famine, 7 to 10 million Ukrainian people starved to death as a result of Stalin's brutal collectivization program. The Commission will provide the details of what actually occurred during the famine and enhance public awareness of this atrocity.

The Soviet Government continues to wage its campaign of oppression and terror against the Ukrainian people, ruthlessly suppressing the activities of the Helsinki Monitoring Group in Ukraine. Many of these bold defenders of freedom languish in jail, subject to terrible forms of ill-treatment.

I am hopeful that we will remember these people, not only today, but whenever we take the time to reflect upon our own cherished freedoms.

Mr. RUDD. Mr. Speaker, today marks the 68th anniversary of the proclamation of Ukraine's independence from the Russian Empire on January 22, 1918.

For 3½ years—from March 1917 to the end of 1920—the Ukrainian people struggled valiantly to preserve their hardwon independence. But surrounded by predatory and imperialist-minded neighbors, alone and unaided, they succumbed to the superior physical forces of their enemies.

Under Soviet Communist Russia, Ukrainians have suffered inhuman treatment and persecution:

Since the incorporation of the Ukraine into the Soviet Union in 1922, Ukrainians have been made victims of genocide through man-made famines, executions, arrests and deportations;

They have suffered systematic Russification of their language and educational system, and obliteration of the Ukrainian national identity;

Their culture has been suppressed and their history and literature have been distorted; and Ukrainians have suffered religious persecution, economic exploitation and destruction of their political structure.

Observing the 68th anniversary of the proclamation of the Ukrainian National Republic is a special event for all Ukrainians, but it should also be a reminder to all Americans and other freedom-loving peoples of the world, that communism is an unacceptable tyranny that threatens to engulf any nation with ideals based upon sovereignty, national pride, and peace.

Let us all hope that independence and freedom—especially freedom from Soviet enslavement—will be restored to the people of the Ukraine.

DOD'S RESPONSE TO INQUIRIES ON PASSENGER AIRLIFT

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. MONTGOMERY] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. MONTGOMERY. Mr. Speaker, in the wake of the tragic crash of our military charter flight in Newfoundland, the Defense Department is conducting a review of all policies concerning military personnel air travel. With this in mind, I recently wrote a letter to Secretary of Defense Caspar Weinberger, recommending that the Defense Department consider using military aircraft or Air National Guard and Reserve planes to move our personnel. I also suggested that we utilize the services of private charter companies to handle the movement of military cargo. This would be a reversal of the current policy.

I wanted to share with my colleagues the response I received from Secretary Weinberger:

THE SECRETARY OF DEFENSE,
Washington, January 17, 1986.

Hon. GILLESPIE V. MONTGOMERY,
House of Representatives, Washington, DC.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN: Thank you for your letter of January 2, 1986, concerning the Department of Defense (DoD) use of charter airlift to transport our military personnel and their families. Let me assure you that we all share in the tragic loss of our peacekeeping force as it returned from the Sinai last month.

A high priority review of DoD policies and procedures which govern passenger airlift is in progress. It will include an assessment of military and civil air passenger operations, standards of service and related safety concerns. Our review will address your suggestion to shift passenger and cargo movement between military and civil airlift. After his telephone conversation with you, Dr. James P. Wade, Jr., Assistant Secretary of Defense for Acquisition and Logistics, met with the military commanders responsible for arranging charter airlift and with respresentatives of the Department of Transportation (DoT) and Federal Aviation Agency (FAA).

While we are reviewing airlift operations, we have taken prudent interim steps to increase our surveillance of charter operations. We are assigning more evaluators to charter flights, increasing the frequency of carrier surveys and plan to review carrier maintenance facilities. Secretary Dole has announced an intensive near-term FAA review of air carriers operating charters for the DoD. We expect further initiatives through close liaison with DoT and the FAA.

We carefully considered suspension of Arrow Airways after the Gander accident. However, in their investigation of Arrow, the FAA has not uncovered safety or operational deficiencies that would justify removal of Arrow's certification. Arrow continues to operate scheduled and non-scheduled service in the private sector.

We appreciate your concern for the safety and welfare of our military forces.

Sincerely,

CASPAR WEINBERGER.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. GAYDOS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that in the priority of the special orders, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SHUSTER] be allowed to proceed before me.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. STENHOLM). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

A TRIBUTE TO THE LATE HONORABLE JAMES E. VAN ZANDT OF PENNSYLVANIA

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SHUSTER] is recognized for 60 minutes.

Mr. SHUSTER. Mr. Speaker, I thank the Chair, and I certainly thank my distinguished friend and colleague, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GAYDOS], the distinguished dean of our delegation.

Mr. Speaker, I come before this distinguished body today to mourn the loss of a dear friend and colleague, but most importantly to celebrate a life that was lived with vigor, commitment, and dignity. I speak of former Congressman James E. Van Zandt, more often known as "Jimmy," who passed away on January 6, 1986, at the age of 87. Jimmy was the very essence of what is known as a "good man." His life should serve as an inspiration to those who choose to truly participate in life and it is for this reason that I wish to share with you some of the highlights of Jimmy's remarkable journey on this Earth.

History was hard on those in Jimmy's era. Born at the turn of the century in Altoona, PA, he was to serve in both world wars and the Korean conflict. He enlisted as an apprentice seaman in the U.S. Navy while still in high school, and was discharged as chief quartermaster at the war's end. Subsequently, he enlisted in the Naval Reserve and organized the Naval Reserve unit at Altoona.

In 1938, he successfully ran for Congress from what was then the 23d Congressional District of Pennsylvania. He held this seat until 1943 when he resigned to report for active duty in the Naval Reserve for the remainder of World War II. Never a sunshine patriot, when the Japanese attacked Pearl Harbor, Jimmy returned to the Japanese Ambassador a medal he had been given in 1936 from the Imperial Reservists Association of Japan. To describe Jimmy's military service, I believe the following commendation from Capt. Richard Scruggs [USN] says it all: "You have been bombed, shelled, and torpedoed, but the fires were extinguished, the holes plugged, and not a ship has been lost."

As a legislator, Jimmy served over 20 years in Congress. During his tenure, he was an outspoken stalwart for American veterans. He served as senior member of the House Armed Services Committee, and was ranking Republican member of the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy. As a member of the House Committee on Veterans' Affairs, he introduced a series of bills providing benefits for veterans of World War II, which later provided the basis for drafting of the G.I. bill of rights. In addition to his legislative contributions, Jimmy's bravery was displayed during an attack by four Puerto Ricans who were firing on the House Chamber from the Gallery. Under fire, Jimmy dropped to the floor, crawled through a cloakroom to the gallery steps, and seized one of the terrorists. Jimmy never turned his back on a fight worth fighting.

One cannot speak of Jimmy Van Zandt without mentioning his zealous dedication to the Veterans of Foreign Wars. During his 3 years as commander-in-chief, he traveled over 1 million miles to every department in the organization. It has been written that his unanimous reelections were an acknowledgment to his strong leadership in VFW's battle on behalf of disabled veterans and their dependents, and for a "Program of Americanism" which focused on the welfare and security of the United States and its people as a whole. As a tribute to his efforts on behalf of veterans, the VA Medical Center in Altoona is known as "The James E. Van Zandt Veterans' Administration Medical Center."

Jimmy Van Zandt fell into many categories: He was an American, a husband and father, a Christian, a Pennsylvanian, and a distinguished veteran. Each of these roles he played masterfully. He met all obstacles face-to-face, and there were many in his time.

It is a great honor and privilege to represent part of the district once represented by Jimmy Van Zandt. He left a legacy, and that is to provide the best possible government for Pennsylvanians, about whom he cared deeply.

In memory of Jimmy Van Zandt, I wish to close by calling to mind the words of Daniel Webster: "Thank God! I—I also—am an American!"

Mr. Speaker, I am happy to yield to the distinguished dean of our delegation, Congressman GAYDOS.

Mr. GAYDOS. Mr. Speaker, just about 2 years ago, the members of the Pennsylvania congressional delegation came to the floor to heap praises on Jimmie Van Zandt, a former colleague of ours who, after long and distinguished careers in the U.S. Navy and the Congress, was retiring from his third career, secretary to the Pennsylvania congressional delegation.

Today, our task is somewhat more difficult because James E. Van Zandt, retired rear admiral in the U.S. Naval Reserve, former Congressman from Altoona, PA, and, for 20 years, the unpaid adviser to his home State's Members of Congress, passed away on January 6 at age 87.

I, for one, am glad that on January 31, 1984, we took the opportunity to say the things we did about Jimmie while he was alive and could be here with us to hear how we really felt about him and his dedication to his country.

Jimmie served with distinction in each of his careers. As a young man, he joined the Navy in 1917 as an apprentice seaman and served in both world wars and the Korean conflict before retiring as a rear admiral in 1959, winning various military decorations as a testament to his illustrious service.

He was first elected to Congress in 1938, resigned in 1943 because his country needed him in the Navy, and then came back to the Congress in 1946 to continue an illustrious service over two decades, leaving in 1962 after an unsuccessful run for the U.S. Senate from Pennsylvania. But, instead of retiring from public service, he began a new career, of service without pay to the Pennsylvania congressional delegation and to the people of his home State.

Mr. Van Zandt also found time during those years to serve as the Washington representative for two Governors of Pennsylvania. He was a mainstay of the Veterans of Foreign Wars: Twice he commanded the Department of Pennsylvania and three times he was the VFW's national commander and received that organization's Distinguished Service Medal. Further, he was a member of the Veterans' Administration Cemetery System Advisory Board.

To merely recite Jimmie's accomplishments, however, does not really provide an accurate picture of this man we called friend, associate, and colleague.

It is said that bad men will prevail if good men remain silent. Well, there was never any danger that the good would lose as long James Van Zandt was around. His service to his country in time of war—actually three different times—is a sure sign that the bad would not be allowed to take what they wanted without a stiff fight.

His service to his country in times of peace—more than 20 years in the U.S. House of Representatives, where, in his first term, he spoke 63 times and introduced 32 bills—was some indication of his willingness to speak out on behalf of those who had no voice.

His service to his State—another 20 years as the unpaid secretary to the congressional delegation during which period he never showed any political partiality—was evidence of his dedication to the service of man.

I think that the last, his willingness to submerge his own political preferences in order to see that the job got done right, was one of his most important characteristics. To paraphrase another American who had more than one successful career, Thomas Jefferson, a strong heart is the first blessing and a knowing head the second. Jimmie Van Zandt was twice blessed and we and our friends in Pennsylvania are far the better for it.

When he retired nearly 2 years ago, Jimmie, then 85, told us he needed to work on his memoirs, put his congressional papers in order, and prepare for the dedication of the James E. Van Zandt Veterans' Administration Center in Altoona, PA, his hometown.

We of the Pennsylvania congressional delegation, have missed Jimmie these past 2 years and, now, we will miss him even more. No longer will we be able to draw on that vast store of knowledge, that clear thinking, that understanding that marked James Van Zandt's career.

Mr. Speaker, my remarks as prepared are a part of the RECORD, and I would like to proceed extemporaneously to talk about a man who was close to the delegation, close to every individual Member of the delegation personally.

Jim Van Zandt had served the Pennsylvania delegation, as my colleague well knows, because we both served on the Steering Committee. Way at the beginning when we had our good friend, Doc Morgan from Pennsylvania as dean of the delegation, that is when it started. At that time I remember when I first came to Congress, I had asked Doc Morgan, I said, "Doc, how is it that Jim Van Zandt, an admiral in the Reserve, former Congressman, former head of the VFW, a great legionnaire, how is it that he serves our Pennsylvania delegation so efficiently and yet he is not paid?"

Doc Morgan responded to me, he said, "That man is dedicated," and that is how I found him.

After Doc Morgan, I think the leadership then passed over to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MCDADE], because we have that type of an arrangement in Pennsylvania.

Mr. SHUSTER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for just one very minor correction?

Mr. GAYDOS. Yes, I yield.

Mr. SHUSTER. Congressman Van Zandt was paid for his work by the delegation. He was paid $1 a year, I understand.

Mr. GAYDOS. Well, I stand corrected and I think that is tantamount to showing the sincerity and the dedication of this man.

I have to say this. We went through Democratic and Republican leadership in our delegation and we try to keep nonpartisan, but when it came to Jimmie Van Zandt, there was no partisan politics played at all. He served the Democrats as efficiently and as sincerely as he did the Republicans. He was well-connected. He helped us. I think we were somewhat ahead of the other delegations because Jim Van Zandt was there to serve us with the Republican leadership when it was in the White House and then when it changed and the Democrats came in, Jim Van Zandt was just as effective. He seemed to have connections on both sides.

I could say this, that there was many a sensitive problem that was first brought to our attention by our secretary, Mr. Van Zandt, and then the solution advocated and suggested by Mr. Van Zandt and the problem ultimately solved by Mr. Van Zandt. That is my remembrance of a man who was so sensitive to Pennsylvania's needs that both the Republicans and the Democrats felt they were obligated to him. They never even considered, remotely considered having to change the secretary of the delegation for any purpose whatsoever.

He was a gentleman and a dedicated politician to what he thought was right in the Pennsylvania delegation and he was reliable, reliable to the extent that probably spoiled us, because after he left there was an obvious void. We had to hire a person and then another person and then we have these what we call impromptu committees working, doing the work that Jimmie Van Zandt used to do by himself alone and did so effectively.

So it is without reservation that I get up and say, No. 1, the delegation has lost a very close friend.

No. 2, Pennsylvania has lost a very dedicated soldier and the whole country has lost a patriot. That is the Jimmie Van Zandt that I remember. That is the one that I want to remember and I think that I speak on behalf of all members of the delegation when I say that is the Jimmie Van Zandt we had experience with.

That is the extent of my comments at this time.

I would ask after my colleague does recognize other Members of the delegation if he would be so kind as to recognize me again to insert another matter into the RECORD.

Mr. SHUSTER. I would be very happy to and I certainly thank the distinguished dean of our delegation, a gentleman with whom it is a privilege and an honor to serve.

Mr. Speaker, I am happy to yield to my good friend, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GEKAS].

Mr. GEKAS. Mr. Speaker, I greatly appreciate the gentleman yielding for this purpose.

It is a sad and happy purpose that we are engaging in pursuing at this moment; sadness because we know that Jimmie has gone to his final reward and happy because it gives us an opportunity to recount what he has meant to us personally, what he has meant to the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania and, most eloquently, what he has meant to the Nation.

I am so happy that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SHUSTER] took it upon himself to recount those moments of valor in the life of Jimmie Van Zandt, stemming from his service to the country of which he gave unflinchingly, as was indicated by Congressman SHUSTER; but if we eliminated all of that and never once mentioned that total heroism in this man, I believe that every citizen in the country would have to make a special place for Jimmie Van Zandt in their own personal views of the American citizen when we recall what Congressman SHUSTER said about what he did on the very floor of the House here where we stand at that tragic moment when shots were fired into this body. I can just picture Jimmie, as Congressman SHUSTER was describing, crawling up the aisle and through the cloakroom and up the steps, right in the face of fire, so to speak, to grab one of the terrorists that we had even in that day who would have dared to come in and did successfully engage in that tragic act of terrorism.

I will always think of Jimmie Van Zandt as the courageous hero that every American recognizes as the embodiment of being an American in the first place.

At lunch today, for the edification of the membership, which I shared with Congressman BOB MICHEL, our respected leader on the Republican side, I mentioned to him that we were going to have this special order for Jimmie Van Zandt, which he then recalled and said that he wished he could join with us because his recollections parallel those that were already expressed by my colleagues from Pennsylvania. That is a nice thing. It is easy for us Pennsylvanians to remember him because we criss-crossed his path a thousand times in our lives, but when we hear the Republican leader, or the remarks of Congressman MONTGOMERY as they have been transferred now into the RECORD by Congressman GAYDOS, that makes us Pennsylvanians just a little more proud of what Jimmie Van Zandt has meant to this body and the country.

My first recollection of Jimmie was on the political warpath. He had announced that he was running for the Senate of the United States. I believe it was the year 1962, the same year that Bill Scranton successfully became the Governor of Pennsylvania through a very dynamic campaign. It was Scranton-Van Zandt. I went to a small political meeting in Middletown, PA, which happens to be now in my district, and sat in the first row. Jimmie Van Zandt was introduced. There was no microphone. I tell you, none was needed. Jimmie got up and the first blast from his mouth just acknowledging the introduction was so loud and so clear that I was taken aback in the first row, an instance I will revere forever as a politician, as one who captured the imagination and the attention of his audience from the very first words spoken. From that first word spoken, in my engagement with the life of Jimmie Van Zandt down to the last engagement that we had here in the Pennsylvania delegation meetings, I have always admired and felt close to Jimmie Van Zandt.

His family, who accompanied him on all his political endeavors and all the endeavors on behalf of veterans, became a part of the Van Zandt mystique. It was very natural for us who were with Jimmy Van Zandt or who worked with him or in any way crossed his path, also included in his life and his doings those of the family because he was always with them and they were always with him. That is a nice thing to remember as well.

So as we take leave of our association with James Van Zandt, we do so as American citizens, as those interested in the welfare of our country, and who know that at least one of our fellow Pennsylvanians, who distinguished himself as a Member of the Congress of the United States, as a hero of World War II and other military engagements, who distinguished himself as a politican in the best sense, and who distinguished himself as a personal friend to everyone who met him, we say farewell, Jimmy, and I thank the gentleman from Pennsylvania [MR. SHUSTER] for giving us the time to express our feelings.

Mr. SHUSTER. My colleague's comments bring to mind one other story about Jimmy. He was a great athlete and, in fact, in his eighties he could often be found in the House gym dribbling a basketball around the court staying in shape. He told me, if I recall correctly, that he was a runner, a real runner, running in first-class races, including Madison Square Garden. He told me that the last race he ever ran was in Madison Square Garden the night before he was sworn in as a U.S. Congressman back in the 1930's, and he did not stop running from that point until his sad death just a few weeks ago.

Mr. GAYDOS. Mr. Speaker, would my colleague yield for just one more observation?

Mr. SHUSTER. Surely. I would be glad to yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. GAYDOS. I think it is basically essential that I not let this opportunity pass without reminding our delegation, our colleagues in the House, and yes, the whole Nation, of Jim Van Zandt's dedication to Pennsylvania when he put together—and I want to emphasize he put together; we worked with him, as my good friend, the gentleman in the well, Mr. SHUSTER knows—when he put together Pennsylvania Day. That is the time that we got all the industry together in Pennsylvania, and we had to improvise at the time, an awful lot of participation from banks, businesses and things of that nature. I think we put together, along with Fred Waring, who was at the affair and who was there because Jim Van Zandt had made the arrangements, and when we put all this together, I think we did ourselves proud here in Washington because we had a very, very well received and, I think, a delightful time on the Pennsylvania Day. That is when we brought up the flute players and the band from down in Pittsburgh, and also the band members from up in Philadelphia, along with, of course, an outstanding performance at that time by Fred Waring, who is now deceased and who, as a result of that Pennsylvania Day, I believe received a gold medal authorized by this very House.

So Jimmy Van Zandt, with all the attributes, and all the things he had accomplished in his life, to me that is one of the most sensitive and very personal areas that he operated in because he showed us how to make Pennsylvania Day a success. We had never had it in the past, and I think it is going to be the prototype of what we are going to do in the future.

So in closing, Mr. Speaker, I think that the record should show this man's dedication in that area also, along with the other areas that we already have spoken of.

Mr. SHUSTER. I thank my friend.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHUSTER. I yield to my friend and colleague, the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. WALKER. I thank the gentleman for yielding. I thank him also for taking this special order to give us a chance to say a few words about a great patriot, one of the greatest that our State has ever produced, Jimmy Van Zandt.

When I first came to the Hill it was about 20 years ago, and I came here as a staff aide at that point to former Congressman Ed Eschleman. I remember at that time that Jimmy had already assumed his role as secretary of the delegation. He had been Governor Scranton's chief man in Washington and was performing distinguished service to the entire Commonwealth at that time.

But at that point he had had several careers, as admiral, as Congressman, as a railroad man. He had gone through a whole series of careers and people at that time would say, "Gee, how old is Jimmy Van Zandt?" and somebody would point out all these careers that he had had, and his age, and they would say, "Oh, that cannot be. He cannot be that old." Twenty years later we were still depending upon Jimmy Van Zandt and those questions were still being raised by young staffers as they came to the Hill.

The man was just absolutely remarkable. He had a great talent and genius for bringing together political factions, philosophical factions and doing the right thing on behalf of the State of Pennsylvania. I do not know that we have had anybody serve us for that long a time that well as did Jimmy Van Zandt.

It is entirely fitting that this tribute be paid on this floor because he loved this House. He loved serving Pennsylvania in this House. We will all miss him as we go about building the future of our Commonwealth and the contributions that he has made to that.

Mr. SHUSTER. I thank my friend.

Mr. Speaker, in closing, I think it is entirely proper to note that as we pay tribute to Jimmy Van Zandt here today, we certainly should include in that tribute recognition of his wife, Meisie, and his son, Jamie, a commander in the U.S. Navy, a wife and a son who, throughout Jimmy's illustrious life, were helpmates and substantial contributors who helped make possible the outstanding life of this distinguished American.

Mr. COUGHLIN. Mr. Speaker, I pay tribute today to our former colleague, James E. Van Zandt, whose battle against cancer ended

January 6 when he died at the Hospice of Northern Virginia.

Those of us who were privileged to know Jimmy Van Zandt always will remember him as a warm and unpretentious person whose industry and plain ways marked him as a truly honorable man.

Almost 2 years ago a special order was held honoring Jimmy who was—at the age of 85—retiring. At that time, he had served 11 terms in the House of Representatives, 3 terms as national commander of the Veterans of Foreign Wars, and as secretary of the Pennsylvania congressional delegation for 20 years.

During the four decades of his public service, Jimmy was consistently a positive force in Pennsylvania governmental and political affairs. He was a gentleman in the truest sense of the word who enjoyed the confidence and trust of Republicans and Democrats alike. No matter which party controlled the State government in Harrisburg or the Pennsylvania congressional delegation in Washington, Jimmy served all with equal dedication, energy, and zeal.

A strong and steadying influence, Jimmy was a catalyst upon whom each of us in the Pennsylvania delegation could rely upon for advice and guidance during his service as the delegation's secretary. But most of all, Jimmy was a worker. His former titles and positions never stopped him from doing the everyday work and details that helped our delegation and all those from Pennsylvania who came to consult us in Washington.

His devotion to serving the needs of the commonwealth and this Chamber were in evidence each day. Despite Jimmy's long work days, I think it commendable to note that he served for 20 years as our delegation's secretary without pay.

A Navy veteran who saw active duty in World War I, World War II, and the Korean conflict, he was honored by Congress in 1983 when a Veterans Administration center was dedicated as the "James E. Van Zandt Medical Center." It was an honor well-merited for a gentleman whose contributions to our Nation's veterans were many. Yet as great that tribute was, somehow it cannot do justice to Jimmy Van Zandt and his life.

When he retired in 1984, he had planned to write his memoirs. Unfortunately his memoir, which would have been among the most inspiring and interesting ever written by a former congressman, was unfinished when he died.

That he will be missed by his friends and colleagues is undistputed. He served his Pennsylvania constituency and the U.S. House of Representatives with honor and distinction. His contributions at the national, State and local levels in serving the public are undeniable.

I hope that his wife and son are comforted by the knowledge that Jimmy left a legacy of devoted and effective public service, and of respect and warmth by those who knew and worked with him.

Mr. GRAY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay special tribute to our late colleague, James Van Zandt, who served in this Chamber and set an example for all of us.
